According to the Warsaw papers, Gypsies are quite plenty near that place. They are as usual, ready for a horse trade.

The Hicksville Republican says that our friend Charlie Bassett is fairly established in business, and everything is ready to run. Success to you, Charlie.

The large ice-houses of Hilt & Co., at Laporte, were destroyed by fire the 4th of this month. They were set on fire by the lightning. Loss about $40,000, only partially insured.

The South Bend manufacturing company will improve their dam over the river at that place this summer. This will give better water power, and make the works more effective during the dry season.

The Stone and Pipe manufacturing company is building a new kiln, which makes the third at their works on the west race, and will enable them to keep in full blast all the time.—South Bend Register.

The Goshen pump works, chair factory and threshing-machine works burned May 17. It was with great difficulty that the neighboring property was saved, and the fire kept from making a general conflagration. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

The Wabash railroad has purchased fourteen acres of land on the south branch of the Chicago river, between Thirty-third and Thirty-fifth streets, and will expend $1,000,000 in improvement thereon, including a mammoth grain elevator.

Goshen Times: May 12, after the thermometer had been up to eighty and ninety degrees for days, ice was struck a foot under the muck on Dr. Latta's farm, while his hands were making a ditch. The ice was so solid that work had to be stopped.

Excursions will soon be the order of the day. Cedar Beach is growing in popularity among the people of this locality, though Rome City still has a strong hold upon the affections of the enjoyment-loving people of Ligonier.—Ligonier Banner.

Over twenty thousand persons attended the unveiling of the Cowpens monument at Spartanburg, S. C. The addresses were made by Wade Hampton, Thomas W. Higginson, and Wm. H. Francis, representing the south, New England and the middle states.

A movement has been undertaken in Indianapolis looking to the founding of a home for disabled railroad employes. Several railroad officials are taking active steps to further the project. The railroads terminating at that city employ twelve thousand men.

The trustees of the Indiana House of Refuge for boys at Plainfield have notified the several county clerks that on account of the failure of the specific appropriation bill in the legislature, the doors of the institution will be closed against the admission of boys, except those committed for crimes.

Fort Wayne News: The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago company has a corps of engineers making a survey for a new road alongside of the main line to extend from Mansfield to Crestline, making a double track, on account of the immense amount of freight transferred at that point.

The nomination of Stanley Matthews to the United States supreme court was simply one more step in the degradation of that tribunal which has been in process since 1870. That he actually received a majority vote in the senate on his confirmation, even though it be a majority of one, is proof that a sort of moral dry-rot has taken hold of some of the public men of the country, without consideration of party, and that the old-fashioned idea of our highest judicial body has undergone a decided change for the worse.—Philadelphia Times.

A STRANGE FREAK OF NATURE.—During the removal of bodies from the old Catholic cemetery, at Twelfth and Penn streets, many curious things have been discovered, but none that were really startling until last Monday, when two petrified bodies were disinterred. One, that of a young lady who was buried there, little over nine years ago; the other, that of a youth 19 years old at the time of his death and whose remains have lain there for ten years. The young lady died of typhoid fever, and previous to her death her hair was shaved off close to her scalp, but when the coffin was opened the head was clothed with a rich growth of auburn hair nearly three feet in length. In the case of the young man the same discovery was made, except that the growth took the form of a beard and was about one foot in length. The color of the hair was dark and the appearance natural.

The Plymouth Democrat has the following in regard to the little English sparrows that are becoming so common in the country: A new kind of small birds have made their appearance here. We are not sufficiently posted in ornithology to write an essay on the subject. They are saucy little fellows, and seem to have driven away the robbins, blue-jays, any other familiar specimens of the feathery tribe, generally so numerous at this season of the year.

We are under obligations to L. H. Rogers, of New York city, for a copy of "Bird's Eye View of the English Language," a regular monument of patience. The sheet is 22x28 inches, and contains more information for persons who write letters, than we ever saw or thought could be arranged on one sheet. The first part contains rules for spelling and punctuation, also rules for using capital letters and letter writing. Next is a "Bird's Eye View of the Correct Spelling of 25,000 Words." The sheet can be used to good advantage by everyone who writes the English language. Can be had of the publisher, L. H. Rogers, 75 Maiden Lane, New York, for 25 cents, in stamps.

Goshen Times: Last evening, just before dark, the baggage-master, Mr. Long, ordered five tramps away from the passenger-house, who had been hanging around there. They became very impudent, saying they came to burn the city down, and they would do it. Long had a spoke in his hand, with which he twice knocked down the spokesman, when one of the outlaws hit him a blow over the head with a slung-shot. Long reeled a little, but recovered in time to knock a pistol out of the hands of one of the tramps. He then drew his own revolver and fired, wounding one of the assailants in the arm or shoulder. A second shot that he fired proved ineffectual, when the tramps moved along the track in the direction of the fair ground.

We take the following from the Steuben Republican: "The daily papers contain full accounts of the murder of Lieut. Cherry, near Fort Niobrara, Neb., on the 10th. The account possesses something of a local interest to many readers of the Republican, as Lieut. Cherry formerly resided in Lagrange county and was appointed a cadet at West Point by Congressman Baker. The murder was the work of a private of his own company. Lieut. Cherry had been sent in pursuit of a band of desparadoes, three men accompanying him. While riding along, with Sergeant Harrington on his right hand and Thomas Locke and James Conroy in the rear, a shot was fired behind them, when the lieutenant, turning to the left, asked what it meant. Locke had his pistol in his hand and pretended it went off accidently, but immediately leveled it at Cherry's breast and fired, the ball taking effect in the heart. Death was instantaneous. Lieut. Cherry's career in the army was very brilliant, and what motive Locke had for murdering him is not known. The assassin escaped."

Van Amburgh's Menagerie and Frost's Roman Circus.

GRAND CONSOLIDATION FOR 1881.

The old original Van Amburgh & Co's. Great Golden Menagerie has been consolidated with Hyatt Frost' Roman Colosseum, and the combined shows, rejuvinated, reorganized, and entirely new—with magnificent tableaux cars, chariots, cages, vans, etc., etc., will exhibit in Waterloo next Saturday, the 28th.

This monster institution, the most extensive combined circus and menagerie now traveling in this country, gives two performances daily; the first at 2 p. m., and the second at 8 p. m. The door will open one hour before the performance commences. As a menagerie, it contains more, and rarer animals, than any like institution. Large and attractive as it has always been, the menagerie has been largely increased in the number of rare wild animals, many of which will be on exhibition for the first time in this country. In addition to the 26 cages of wild beasts, birds and reptiles, there will be found the great and only living Nondescript from the river Nile, believed to be the only specimen ever captured alive; the monster living Behemoth of Holy Writ; the largest elephant now living; the north pole walrus; sea lions from Alaska, the ant-eating bear and an African Giraffe. The whole comprising a collection of curiosities unequalled by any like institution in Europe or America; the whole numbering over 500.

In Frost's Roman Circus department will be introduced the most extensive troupe of equestrians, gymnasts, acrobats and athletes that has ever entered the magic ring of a circus at one time; prominent among those now with this gigantic show is the world-renowned bare-back trick equestrian, Sig Sebastian, who, without any exception, is the pere of all bare-back riders in the world. Another, and of almost equal fame, will be found in the daring and intrepid William Showles; and third, but not last or less attractive than either of the other two, is the magnificent, beautiful and accomplished M'lle. Viola, acknowledged by the profession to be not only the handsomest lady in the arena, but the equal, as an artiste, of the most celebrated in her specialty equestrian acts.

The manager of this great consolidated show has declared in all of his advertisements that this is the "crowning glory of his 36 years of managerial experience." That the great show will be liberally patronized, is beyond a doubt. It is immense in all its departments. Remember the show will exhibit at Waterloo next Saturday, the 28th.

Great Sale of Short-Horns.

Albert Marlott, one of the most successful short-horn breeders of the Whitewater valley, will sell his fine stock of short-horns at his farm, four miles southeast of Milton, and six miles southeast of Cambridge City, Indiana, on May 28th. Sale to begin at 11 o'clock sharp. Free transportation from trains to the farm, and free board while there. Those who come on the Fort Wayne and Muncie road should come the day before the sale. This road gives excursion rates.

TERMS OF SALE: Six months without interest, with freehold security. If not paid by January 1, 1882, interest will be charge at the rate of 8 per cent from date of note. Send for catalogue to

ALBERT MARLOTT,
Milton, Indiana.

We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Marlott on the train lately as he was returning from the great short-horn sale at Port Huron, which he had attended for the purpose of adding to his already large herd of pure blooded animals. He is one of the first breeders in the state.

Auburn Courier

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Horse buyers in town.

—The fourth at Auburn.

—Turn out decoration day.

—Show at Waterloo Saturday.

—Hank Mader rides in a new phaeton.

—Joe Ashley is building a new picket fence.

—J. E. Rose is repairing his residence.

—A. J. Ralston has built an addition to his barn.

—John Treesh buried an infant child last Monday.

—Look at Shaffer & Co's. advertisement this week.

—Dr. Allen has shed his beard for summer comfort.

—Marshal Scott is doing some good street and ditch work.

—Hank Shull has purchased Cal. Husselman's milk wagon.

—The Auburn band will furnish music decoration day, May 30.

—For canned fruits, flour and teas, go to McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—J. C. Henry is fixing his brick residence in a more desirable style.

—Dr. Cowan reports several cases of spotted fever at and near Garrett.

—For fine teas, coffee, sugar, spices and tobacco, go to McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—The Pearce property, on Main street, has undergone necessary repairs.

—J. C. Brand, of Waterloo, is now deputy sheriff and finds it pretty steady work.

—When completed, Dr. Allen will have the nicest and best finished residence in town.

—Mr. Quince informs us that he has not yet obtained any clue to the parties who stole his goods.

—For parasols, fans, gloves, laces, embroideries and hosiery, go to McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—White fish and pickerel. New Saginaw salt at $1.20 per barrel, at McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—The farmers are complaining of the dry weather, and say the crops are greatly in need of rain.

—Abe Cool, the buggy man, calls the attention of our readers to his superior vehicles and low prices.

—Chris. Baldock, of the Pioneer Hardware, has been putting on a tin roof at Garrett this week.

—Don't buy a silk dress or silk for a dolman, until you have seen those silks at McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—Davenport, the druggist, had the misfortune to lose $5.00 last Sunday and it can't be found either.

—Bert Robbins gave a party to a number of his playmates last Friday. It was a pleasant gathering.

—Abe. Canon was awarded the contract for painting the new church and parsonage east of Garrett last week.

—Dr. Cowan's dissecting room, in the second story of Mitch. Houston's butcher shop, has been dressed in mourning.

—The "soldiers," assisted by the citizens in general, will conduct the affairs of the fourth of July celebration.

—Erv Hoffman and Frank Hoff have balanced the ledger, and some other man clerk will sweep out that establishment in the future.

—The house-cleaning days have gone, the saddest of the year, and husband spends his nights at home, and wife has got off her ear.

—If we had a page of our paper to spare, we would have given the names of the Waterloo people who were in town this week, but as it is, we must refrain.

—The Waterloo people had a matinee down here last Monday and Tuesday. Fifty-six of them attended the trial of Campbell vs. Kelley as witnesses.

—Dick Eldridge has quit the Republican office. He was raised under strict democratic principles, and unlike the Immortal J. N., "he couldn't stand the pressure."

—G. W. Gordon has some elegant scenery for back grounds. They were painted to order, and are the work of Mr. Calkin, of LaPorte, formerly of this county.

—If you want a nobby boot or shoe made, something that is lasting and durable, go around the corner to Billy Little's shop, at Frank Strebe's old stand. Repairing of all kinds promptly done.

—It would have been a bad thing if fire had broken out in Waterloo the fore part of the week while nearly all the inhabitants of that town were here as witnesses in the case of Campbell vs. Kelley.

—We learn that Wm. Eldridge has been promoted to the foremanship of the Wisconsin Tobacco Reporter. This is like some other foremanships we know of, that are not so far off as Wisconsin.

—Under the new time card, trains on the B. & O. pass the Junction going west at 12:50 and 11:56 p. m.; and 1:56 a. m. Going east, 5:45, 10:42 p. m. and 4:08 a. m. Will give complete change next week.

—Our correspondents have all been crowded out this week. They will appear on the first page of next week's issue.

—Dr. J. M. Lawrence and John W. Tarney, of Newville, came in and exchanged a few yarns with us yesterday. Come again.

—Os. Allen, of this place, and Neal Decker, of Garrett, had a trotting race three miles east of town Tuesday. The latter won the stake.

—We hear it rumored that a certain widower of our town makes rather frequent visits to Waterloo in the evenings, but he never takes any clothes dryers with him.

—In a private letter to Wm. H. Leas, Mr. Simon McEntarfer, of Russell, Kansas, says: "We are having plenty of rain this spring, wheat is heading out and corn is big enough to cultivate."

—Our popular young townsman, Dave Hampton, Esq., is now acting in the capacity of a drummer for several large wholesale houses. We hope he will meet with good success and gain a reputation that none others can excel.

—We know of a man who threatens to turn himself into an earthquake and shake up everything, if the boys don't quit calling him Gee Line. He has found his horse and we now and here take back the obituary notice of two weeks ago.

—I. O. Bachtel, proprietor of the Eagle Mills, has been repairing his mill, and added all the machinery necessary for manufacturing flour by the patent process. He sells his patent process flour at the same price as other flour.

—Gus. Spore and his "pard," of Garrett, are still trying to make Frank Sterhm more trouble. We learn that another effort was made last week to find a second indictment against him, but the parties failed. Better let well enough alone.

—Os. Allen has a trotting mare that he prizes very highly, and stands up before the American people and says that she cannot be beaten for one mile or ten. She is not very large and it would worry the beast considerable to beat her a whole mile.

—The Catholic people of Garrett will give a grand gift concert on June 28, 1881, to aid them in securing money to pay for their new church. Some valuable and useful prizes will be drawn on that occasion, including watches, chains, knives, forks, silver spoons, silver ware, etc.

—The following sales have been made by the Eckhart Carriage Works since last week: S Dineman, Plymouth, Indiana, one top carriage; James E. Decker, Edgerton, Ohio, one single top carriage; Mr. Furnish, Spencerville, one top carriage; Frank L. Boger, Spencerville, one open buggy.

—The old settlers' meeting will be held in the grove at the north end of town this year, on June 16. We understand that W. H. Dills, of this place, will deliver the address. Mr. Dills is one of the pioneer lawyers of the county, and will no doubt do ample justice to his subject on the occasion referred to.

—G. O. Denison and M. Kiplinger, of Waterloo, have obtained a patent on their new sack-holder, and are now going to begin the sale of them to the public generally. Those who have examined it and who ought to know, pronounce it the best of the kind they have ever seen. We predict for them a large trade this season.

—Last week while Deputy Sheriff H. W. Ford was in the southwestern part of the county serving some subpœnas, he learned of the whereabouts of a pair of Texas horses that had strayed away from Mr. Daniel Boys, of Sturgis, Michigan. He brought them to town and notified the owner. He says they are not afraid to pull up on the bits.

—One of the staid and sober citizens of Auburn Junction was dreaming the other night that his house was on fire. Without waking up, he arose, went to the window and deliberately jumped out. He awoke when he landed on the ground ten or fifteen feet below. A little shaking up is the only drawback to his exciting adventure. He don't propose to imitate Sam Patch any more—not if he knows it.

—A party of young ladies, residing in the west end, armed themselves with pole, hook and line, and marched to the banks of Cedar creek Monday evening. Their results were simply immense, being a full grown minnow that accidently ran against the fatal hook. Miss Becky Canon, Ella Griswold and Ida Davis will record this item of sport firmly in their memories, and when they get old and feeble, can take pleasure in relating the facts to the young fishermen who may chance to be in their hearing.

—Our popular dentist, Dr. Elson, now has the neatest and tastiest dental rooms that it has been our pleasure to visit in a long time. The Doctor's business has increased to such an extent as to make it necessary to employ an assistant. His assistant is Dr. Shryock, who is a practical dentist of eight years experience. Dr. Elson has been so long and favorably known as a first-class dentist, that nothing we could say would add to his already well-deserved popularity. He guarantees satisfaction.

Affray at Spencerville.

Last Sunday, the usually quiet village of Spencerville was the scene of a most disgraceful fight. It seems that Mr. Mankin, whom all will remember who attended the fair at Waterloo last year, had pitched his tent and opened up his show in that village, showing Friday and Saturday nights and remaining over Sunday. At about five o'clock Sunday evening, Mark Barney, of St. Joe, and Will. Baltz, of Spencerville, both being the worse for liquor, went to the tent and began abusing Mankin's family. Mankin resented this and ordered them out of the tent. They then dared him to come out, and on his doing so, a fight occurred. Mankin and his assistant, one of them armed with a tent pin, gave the young men a severe pounding. Baltz was badly cut about the head and scalp, and but for the interference of outsiders, might have been fatally injured. The showmen were but slightly hurt. Mankin soon afterward took down his tent and went to the hotel and remained over night. The matter was finally settled by the parties themselves and no arrests were made. We give the statement of the affair as our informant gave it to us, but believe the above to be a correct version of what all good citizens consider a disgraceful row.

Court.

The following cases in the circuit court have been disposed of:

State of Indiana vs. Charles Weller for grand larceny. Weller was convicted, and the jury fixed his punishment at two years imprisonment, fifteen dollars fine and disfranchisement during the term of sentence. A motion for a new trial was made.

In the case of Sechler et al., vs. Shutt et al., for partition, James McClellan, Sam Swihart and G. W. Swartz were appointed commissioners to make partition of the premises, as prayed for in the petition.

Campbell vs. Kelley et al., suit on a note. This case has thus far excited more interest than any case that has been on trial during the term. A large number of witnesses were subpœnaed on both sides, and an attempt was made to impeach and sustain the defendant, Cyrus Kelley. After hearing all the evidence, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $231.95 and costs.

Judge Carpenter being necessarily absent, Judge McClellan occupied the bench yesterday for the purpose of trying the case of Cornelius et al. vs. Coll—a case about a road—appealed from the commissioners' court. A motion was made and sustained to dismiss the petition for want of sufficient description.

Old Settlers.

May 19, 1881, the auxiliary committee of the Pioneer association of DeKalb county met and appointed the following sub-committees to make the necessary arrangements for the annual meeting of the society at Auburn, June 16:

On grounds—Dr. Ford, D. Z. Hoffman, S. W. Ralston.

On speakers and chaplain—J. E. Rose, S. W. Sprott, S. B. Ward.

On music—N. Ensley, Ora Shaffer, L. J. Miller, Mrs. T. C. Mays, Mrs. Lottie Osgood, Mrs. A Lewis.

On programme—G. C. Ralston W. H. Dills, D. Y. Husselman.

On Finances—C. Beugnot, L. J. Miller, Jos. Rahmler.

The several sub-committees are requested to meet the auxiliary committee at the soldiers' hall to-morrow (Friday) evening at half-past seven sharp, for the purpose of consultation, and to take such other action as may be deemed necessary to forward the object of the association.

W. H. DILLS, Sec'y.

Swindlers Beware!

We are assured by the press agent of Van Amburgh & Co's. Great Show, that that pest of all traveling exhibitions given under canvas—the "lemonade peddler"—is not allowed to importune the audience with his presence or drinks on the seats during the performances, and that all games of chance, of whatsoever description, are ignored and utterly repudiated by this institution. The management are solicitous that the authorities in all places in which the show exhibits, will assist them in arresting and bringing to punishment any and all persons so offending. The Van Amburgh show employs special detectives expressly for the protection of its patrons. Such a show is worthy of all commendation, and such an institution is the Van Amburgh Frost & Co's. Menagerie and Circus, which will show in Waterloo next Saturday, the 28th.

The 4th at Auburn.

Preparations have been made for a grand celebration of the 4th of July at this place, and those who have started the movement, are among our most energetic and enterprising citizens. Everybody can depend upon a large crowd and lots of noise at Auburn on the 4th.

—C. J. Coats, one of our rising young lawyers, was in town a part of the week attending court.

—Toby Rush went to Fort Wayne Monday to accept a situation as night operator for the Saginaw.

—Kuruth and wife, formerly residents here, are visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lockwood.

—P. E. Berry, of St. Paris, Ohio, having spent a very pleasant week with us, has returned to his home.

—Miss Alice McKay, the popular milliner of Spencerville, and her sister Mollie, of this place, called on us yesterday.

—It was Sam Morris, and not L. M. Ninde, who took the place of Judge Morris in the law firm of Coombs, Morris & Bell.

—Mrs. Miner, nee Miss Laura Fair, went to Rochester Tuesday. Her mother is paying a visit to Fairfield Center this week.

—Hon. Miles Waterman made us a brief call the other day. He is now settled on his farm in Franklin, and has made up his mind to enjoy himself.

—Mrs. Bodine, who has been visiting in the east for the past year, has returned home again. Also Mrs. J. E. Bodine and Mrs. S. H. Overholser, nee Miss Emma Bodine. All are the guests of D D. Snyder.

—The Anderson Bros., our lively buggy manufacturers, have made a vehicle for breaking colts, and will soon put their blooded steeds under training.

—Our job rooms are crowded with work again this week. We would like to issue more reading matter, but owing to this fact it crowds our newspaper department and we are compelled to do the best we can.

—List of unclaimed letters in the postoffice at Auburn, Indiana, for the week ending May 21, 1881: T. K. Burk, Willis Cruse, G. Fair, L. A. Head, A. Knott, John McConnel, M. Ollendorff, John Ringler, James Reed, W. E. Sharpe, Daniel Sheets, Dan Smith and Amanda Williams.

—At the regular meeting of the town board last Saturday evening, all the members were present. The following bills were presented and allowed:

F. Picker, judge of election........$2.00
Jno. Burg, blacksmithing......... .50
Barns & Husselman, printing......16.70
John Treesh, judge of election.... 2.00

Several bills were passed over until the next meeting.

Waterloo.

"Right this way for Auburn." It is court week, you know.

H. K. Leas and George Merell took a trip to Fort Wayne yesterday.

Marshal Hoover has a natural gift for civil engineering. See his work on the streets.

You could throw a club in any direction this week, without any danger of hitting a lawyer.

Eugene Fitch, formerly of this place, but now of Albion, Noble county, has been visiting here the past week.

Mrs. Brown and her daughter Mintie, of Edgerton, Ohio, spent Sunday in town, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Clark.

The Presbyterian social will be entertained by Mrs. R. M. Lockhart next Wednesday afternoon and evening. All are invited.

J. D. Shaffer had a tumble while plastering a house in the country Thursday last. He was hurt considerably, but we believe not dangerously.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sewell of Franklin township, went west on the morning train, Tuesday. They go to Kansas and other points in the west, to visit their relatives.

The United Brethren performed the ceremony of baptism last Sunday, at the bridge near the cemetery. Forty-three received the ordinance in one of the three recognized modes.

E. P. Dickinson goes to Indianapolis to-day, to work at the printing business for a time. He does this in order to be near his father, whose health is, by late advices, in a critical condition.

George Smith, who is now in charge of a section near Kendallville, thinks of moving his family to that place. It appears that our railroad boys are becoming popular. No better set of men can be found along the line.

Mr. L. A. Caro is now on the road, as salesman for McVeagh & Co., dealers in cigars and tobacco. Mr. Caro has been "on the road" before, and will without doubt, be successful in his present undertaking.

Orson Edge having given up saving the foot that has been troubling him so long, went to Ann Arbor last week and had it amputated. His heel will be saved, and this will make a useful foot after all. His brother and his sister, Mrs. Samuel Moody, were with him part of the time, and at last accounts, he was doing well.

Ryan Clutter had a runaway Friday evening. He was crossing the railroad with his wife and little girl in the buggy when the horse took fright at the cars, and ran away. Mr. C. tried to keep straight ahead on Wayne street, but the horse managed to turn west on Maple street, and in turning, upset the buggy, throwing the occupants out. Mrs. Clutter was injured about the face and head. The little girl was stunned so as to be unconscious for awhile, and Mr. Clutter himself badly shaken up. Fortunately no bones were broken; and at last accounts, all were doing well.

When you feel weary and listless, are debilitated, your appetite is irregular, try the Big Blood and Liver Medicine, Dr. Marshall's Bromaline.

—For constipation costiveness and indigestion, take Dr. Marshall's Bromaline. Big bottles. Price fifty cents. Druggists will get it for you.

—Ezra Shaffer, son of our popular furniture dealer, C. C. Shaffer, goes to Albion to commence business for himself next week. He has had a long experience in the furniture trade, and we predict for him a successful future. The people of Albion and vicinity can rest assured that, in dealing with him, they will receive gentlemanly and business-like treatment.

—The M. E. Social will be entertained by Mrs. John Stouffer, two and a half miles south of town, next Wednesday evening, June 1st. Refreshments consisting of ice cream, etc. A general invitation is extended to all. Hacks will start from Mrs. Houghton's and Mrs. Rush's at 6:30 o'clock. Ten cents for the round trip.

MRS. E. J. COOPER, Sec'y.

—G. A. Cobler and others are circulating a petition for the opening of a road one-half mile east of the [illegible] school house, and running south to intersect the Spencerville road. It will leave the Newville road on section [illegible] and strikes the Spencerville road at a point directly south. This will make a connecting road that would seem to be very much needed, as for a long distance no way of getting across from one to the other has ever existed.

Cason, Joseph Frank and Henry Arbuckle, for conspiring to defraud the Government on star-route contracts....Four railroad repairmen crossing a trestle on a track-car, near Sunbury, Pa., were overtaken by a freight-train and killed.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., is suffering from the dreaded army-worm, which is destroying all kinds of vegetation and ravaging the whole northern part of the State.

IN the Court of Oyer and Terminer, New York, a nolle prosequi was entered in the case of Kenward Philp, C. A. Byrne, Louis F. Post and Joseph Hart, charged with libel, in having written and published an article on the famous Morey letter, entitled "Lying and Sticking to It."

THE WEST.

F. C. CLARK, who murdered Charles Mann, was executed at La Mesilla, New Mexico, in presence of a large assemblage.

LIEUT. CHERRY, of the Eighth cavalry, while pursuing some deserters who were robbing ranches near Niobrara, Neb., was deliberately shot dead by one of his own soldiers.

THE O'Leary six-days' walking tournament at the Exposition building, in Chicago, ended with Harriman as the winner. His record of 580 miles is the best ever made. The following is the score of the highest six competitors:

Harriman	580	Strockel	456
Tracey	532	Faber	450
Krohne	530	Campana	238

In the Choctaw nation, on the ground that nearly all the white residents have settled without proper authority, Gov. McCurtin has instructed the Sheriffs to immediately organize and arm militia, and drive out the invaders. Gov. Overton, of the Chickasaw nation, has raised an army of 300 Indians, and ordered all white men to leave the territory before June.... Charles Given, a hotel waiter, who had so brutally abused his wife that she had to leave him and go to work as a waiter at an Atchison (Kan.) restaurant, called the poor woman away from her work and shot at her several times, inflicting mortal wounds. The brutal ruffian then shot himself dead....The ice-houses of Hilt & Mallet, at LaPorte, Ind., were struck by lightning and destroyed by fire. Loss $50,000.... Judge F. R. Cornell, of the Minnesota Supreme bench, died in Minneapolis recently, aged 60 years....The liquor house of Lawrence & Martin, Chicago, has been closed up. Their liabilities are about $200,000, and their assets uncertain.

TWO MASKED men halted a stage near San Marcial, New Mexico, and shot at the driver. Two passengers riding on top drew Winchesters and killed the robbers, whose bodies were left in the road for a day.... The boiler in Whitbeo's mill, near Tomah, Wis., exploded, completely demolishing the structure, and killing Luke Lowry, of Sparta, and another employe, and severely scalding Richard Whitinger....Crop prospects in Nebraska are reported to be the best known for years, except that the wheat acreage is somewhat reduced.

SO RAPID is the progress of the Northern Pacific road that it is expected that by the end of the year the track-layers will reach Pompey's Pillar, on the Yellowstone. Fourteen surveying parties are in the field on the Rocky mountain division....A Springfield (Mo.) telegram says: "Reports received from this and various counties in Southwest Missouri are to the effect that the fly has already ruined thousands of acres of wheat, and fears are entertained that the crops in this section of the State will be more than half destroyed."....Eddy Post, aged 18; Alice, his sister, aged 12; and Miss Colton, aged 13, were boating on the Coon river, near Des Moines, Iowa, recently. The rowlock got caught in a snag, and the current, running heavy, upset the boat, and all were drowned....A Portland (Ore.) dispatch says that three fishing boats capsized at the mouth of the Columbia river, and all the occupants were drowned.

A MONUMENT to the memory of George B. Armstrong, founder of the railway mail service in the United States, was unveiled at Chicago in the presence of 5,000 citizens. Schuyler Colfax delivered an oration....Seven Texan rangers and a band of thirty outlaws had a desperate battle near Fort Ewell. One soldier was killed, but two of the cattle-thieves were captured.

A HORRIBLE tragedy was enacted on a farm near Terre Haute, Ind. A well-to-do young farmer, named McPheeters, had been separated from his wife, whom he married in February, 1879. In the meantime the wife, who was living with her mother, Mrs. Blocksom, had given birth to a child. McPheeters called at the house to see it. He walked into the room in which were sitting his wife, her sister, Miss Belle Blocksom, and her mother. He was ordered out of the house, and said he would go as soon as he had seen his baby. His wife went to the cradle to show him the child, little thinking of the terrible fate in store for her, and, while in the act of taking the little thing up, McPheeters drew a revolver and fired. The ball entered the right eye of his wife, causing instant death. She fell into the cradle with the child in her arms and completely saturated it with her blood. The villain then turned upon Miss Belle, and, uttering an oath, fired at her. The ball entered the right temple and penetrated the brain, causing death in a half-hour after. To complete the tragedy, he then placed the revolver against his own head and killed himself.....One of the Stockton gang, called "Tommy, the Kid," was killed and thrown out of a hack by Eskridge, another member of the band, while on a spree at Amargo, New Mexico.

THE SOUTH.

HENRY WARD BEECHER is sued for $10,000 damages by the Agricultural Society of Western Maryland for failure to lecture according to agreement.

FLAMES destroyed half a million dollars' worth of business property on Church and College streets, Nashville, Tenn....John Schmidt, who received twenty lashes for petty larceny at Richmond, Va., suicided on account of the disgrace.

GENERAL.

A NEW YORK dispatch says that "control of the Northern Pacific railroad by the Villard combination appears to be accomplished. An agreement has been made by which Villard buys Northern Pacific stock of President Billings amounting to about $3,000,000, and consents to the discontinuance of suits against the company to annul the recent issue of $18,000,000 in stock. On the other hand, Villard is to have a majority of the seats in the Board of Directors."

MAINLY as the result of the Postal Commission sent to Memphis to investigate the river mails, Postmaster General James has already cut off annual expenditures of $412,034, without curtailing the efficiency of the service....The Director of the Mint estimates that the gold coin and bullion in the United States amounts to $520,000,000, about half of which is in circulation.... L. A. Gobright, one of the oldest journalists in the country, having been connected with the press of Washington more than forty-five years, is dead. For nearly thirty years he represented the New York Associated Press in Washington.

THE Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, whom Secretary Blaine sent to Chicago and Cincinnati to investigate the question of hog-raising and pork-packing, reports that the proportion of American hogs infected with trichinæ is probably less than that of hogs of any other country. In Chicago, for a series of years, in which 40,000 deaths were reported, only two cases of trichiniasis were found, and in Cincinnati, during the same time, not one. The report also states that America is the only country where hogs are fattened for the market on corn, that they are of the best and finest breeds, and that the process of killing and curing, as carried on here, is not equaled in any other country for care and cleanliness. It also states that American lard is the purest lard to be found in any market.

THE Census Bureau has published a curious bulletin showing the position of the center of population since 1790. In 1880 it was eight miles west by south of Cincinnati, having moved west fifty-eight miles during the preceding decade. The following is the approximate location of important points from 1790:

1790. Twenty-three miles east of Baltimore.
1800. Fourteen miles west of Baltimore.
1810. Forty miles northwest by west of Washington.
1820. Sixteen miles north of Woodstock, Va.
1830. Nineteen miles west by southwest of Moorefield, Va.
1840. Sixteen miles south of Clarksburg, Va.
1850. Twenty miles southeast of Parkersburg, Va.
1860. Twenty miles south of Chillicothe, Ohio.
1870. Forty-eight miles east by north of Cincinnati.
1880. Eight miles west by south of Cincinnati.

THE steamer Arizona has again made the quickest recorded passage across the Atlantic, her time being seven days five hours and thirty-five minutes.

WASHINGTON.

SIR EDWARD THORNTON, the British Minister to Washington, has accepted the position of British Ambassador to St. Petersburg, as the successor of Lord Dufferin....Postmaster James is determined to stop the issue of bogus newspapers sent as "sample copies" by advertising schemers.

JUSTICE BRADLEY has been relieved from duty in the Sixth circuit and Justice Stanley Matthews is assigned in his stead.

GEN. ADAM BADEAU, formerly of Gen. Grant's staff, and his biographer, who has been Consul General at London for twelve years, declined the appointment of Minister to Denmark, tendered by President Garfield, and his nomination has been withdrawn from the Senate.

AN overhauling of the Mississippi river mail service by the Postmaster General's special commission discloses some astonishing facts. One contractor took a $94,000 series of mail routes and re-let half of them to a packet line for $20,000, thus clearing a profit of 150 per cent....The President has appointed Hon. George B. Loring, of Massachusetts, Commissioner of Agriculture, vice Le Duc, resigned. Mr. Loring is a professional farmer.

POLITICAL.

WASHINGTON dispatches state that Senator Edmunds was so much displeased at the confirmation of Stanley Matthews that he threatened to resign his place as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He has reconsidered his hasty conclusion. It has been discovered that if he had absolutely needed them, to avoid defeat, he could have had four more votes. The Senators who would have cast them preferred to make a record against, but had agreed to vote for him if it should be necessary to secure his confirmation.

SENATOR LOGAN states that Gen. Grant recently remarked to him, in the most emphatic manner, that he would never again appear before the American people as a candidate for office.....At a meeting of the Anti-Monopoly League, of New York, at which L. E. Chittenden presided, resolutions were adopted declaring Stanley Matthews the Pacific railroad candidate for the Supreme bench, and denouncing his confirmation as an effort to pack the court to reverse its decision in the granger cases.

THE reporter of the Western Associated Press telegraphs from Washington under date of May 17: "The sensation created by the resignations of Messrs. Conkling and Platt is still talked of, but the exciting interest is over. The possibility of Conkling's failure to be re-elected is much discussed, and will undoubtedly be fought hard. Secretary Blaine has kept in constant communication with Senator Robertson, but of course the correspondence is kept a close secret. A prominent Republican, who has held high positions and taken an active part in campaigns for years, said to-day he was going to Albany to assist in defeating Conkling, and that if the Democrats would agree to vote for a Republican against Conkling he favored the anti-Conkling members of the Legislature uniting with them. Tammany is bitterly opposed to Conkling since he and John Kelly split. Leading Democrats say that the Kellys will fight Conkling and carry New York city Democrats against him, in case the election should become a free fight, and that the country Democrats in the Legislature will certainly go against him. Conkling's plan is to have the Senatorial candidates chosen by party caucus. It can be stated that the administration is satisfied with the state of affairs, and does not believe the Republican party of New York will be weakened at all. Republican Senators express the same opinion, that the party in New York cannot be hurt by the appointment of a good man to office. The frequent response of Republican Senators, when spoken to on the subject, is that the Republican party does not depend on any one man for success; that this claim has been set up before, but passed away without impairing the success of the party in the least. Gen. Grant did write a letter to the President urging him to withdraw Robertson. The letter was inclosed to Senator Jones, of Nevada, who delivered it to the President. It is claimed by Conkling's friends that Gen. Grant will stand by him in all he does."....The Republican General Committee of New York State held a meeting and passed resolutions unanimously indorsing the action of Senators Conkling and Platt. They also ordered a copy sent to President Garfield.

THE confirmation of Judge Robertson was celebrated by salvos of artillery at Albany, Utica, Rochester, and other places in the interior of New York. Judge Robertson was serenaded by the Republican General Committee of New York. He made a speech, in which he said he regarded his confirmation not as a personal triumph, but as a victory over one-man power and the right of individual liberty in political action.—A New York telegram says: "A friend of ex-Senator Conkling states that he will immediately enter into the practice of law in this city, and will take no further part in politics until he has made sufficient money to insure himself a comfortable living. It is further said the Senator will advise his friends to elect ex-President Grant as his successor in the Senate."—An Associated Press dispatch from Washington says: "There is no longer any doubt that a strong fight will be made against Conkling and Platt, will have the sympathy of the administration. This is justified on the ground that Conkling declared Monday that he would regard his re-election as a rebuke to the administration and a commission to make war against it to the end of Garfield's term. The policy of the administration will be to elect straight Republican Senators who will be in entire harmony with the party on all questions. If this cannot be accomplished in this Legislature, then the policy will be to prevent the election of Conkling and Platt, even if the Senatorial election has to be thrown over to the next Legislature."

AN Albany dispatch says the anti-Conkling members of the New York Legislature profess to be willing to proceed at once to the election of Senators, but will have nothing to do with a caucus.—Mr. Conkling said to a friend in Washington that $40,000 was the extent of his fortune; that he could make $100,000 per annum in the practice of law, and would not turn his hand over for a re-election.

FOREIGN.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch announces that Gen. Melikoff, one of the ablest and most progressive men who have served Russia, tendered his resignation as Commandant at St. Petersburg, and Dabasa, who brought something like order out of the chaos of Russian finances, tendered his resignation as Financial Minister. Nicolai, the Minister of Public Instruction, and Giers, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, also tendered their resignations.... A Paris dispatch states that the German delegates at the Monetary Conference advise America, France, Italy and Holland to come to an understanding whether they will have unlimited coinage of silver on a basis of 15½ to 1, other states engaging to observe certain conditions, the principal of which will be not to coin gold pieces or issue paper below 10 francs in value, and to improve the fineness of their larger silver coins.... A Nihilist who was arrested at St. Petersburg on the charge of complicity in the murder of the Czar turns out to be a naval officer named Sukhanoff. He is charged with being concerned in the murder of the Czar.... Southern Russia is in a state bordering on anarchy. Students and Jews are attacked, buildings and railroad trains are destroyed, laborers are starving and the Government is seemingly unable to cope with the mobs.....A treaty of peace has been concluded between France and Tunis.

AT the sitting of the Monetary Conference, in Paris, on Saturday, May 14, Senator De Normandie, a French delegate, urged the dangers of the present monetary system. He claimed to show, from the position of England since 1837, that gold monometallism did not afford a remedy. Unless wise measures are adopted, he said, a crisis would in the end violently force itself on the money markets.

MORE anti-Jewish disturbances are reported from Russia and Russian Poland. At Ekaterinoslaf the plundering of Jewish shops was finally stopped by the military. At Odessa the Jews have been disarmed because a Christian was killed by an Israelite....The French-Tunisian coup has produced a profound sensation in Italy. The Roman newspapers, while accepting the inevitable, express the disgust and annoyance felt by the nation at the sharp practice of the perfidious French. The Bey's Moslem subjects are discontented with the terms of the new treaty, and will complain to the Sultan....Queen Victoria is said to be quite desirous of conferring a peerage on Coningsby Disraeli, a youth of 14, the nephew and heir of the late Lord Beaconsfield, but Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues object....An imperial decree has been published in Russia which restores civil rights to persons exiled on account of the Polish insurrection, provided their behavior since then has been satisfactory.

THE Monetary Conference was addressed, on the 17th inst., by Hon. Timothy O. Howe in favor of bimetallism. Louis Mallett, representing India, offered to support any measure to increase the value of silver.... The murder of the French surveying party led by Col. Flatters, which was engaged in mapping out the trans-Sahara railway route, is to be avenged. A French regiment, 700 strong, mounted on camels, will pursue the butchers. ....Czar Alexander III. received formal invitation to his own funeral the other day. The following morning one of the palace scullions salted the imperial bowl of salad with arsenic, but, fortunately for the Czar, he did not partake of the deadly dish.... The persecution of the Jews in Southern Russia continues. Among other atrocities it is reported the populace of Tartovo threw a Jew into the flames of a burning house. Placards have been posted at all the street corners of Warsaw inviting Christians to attack Jewish residents....England would have protested against the Tunisian treaty, but she was not sure of the other great powers..... Spain is short in her balance for the current fiscal year just $3,000,000....A Russian Ensign found a mine of thirty-seven pounds of gunpowder under a stone bridge at St. Petersburg. Two naval Lieutenants have been arrested at Cronstadt for abstracting dynamite from the imperial mining department.

IN a circular to the Governors of provinces, Gen. Ignatieff attributes the desperate condition of Russia to the irreligious education of youth, the inactivity of the authorities, and the indifference and avarice of officeholders. He claims that none but an autocrat can remove the clouds from the empire.

IN the Monetary Conference, at Paris, on May 19, Hon. Timothy O. Howe, United States Commissioner, outlined the American position on the question of bimetalism. "The United States," he said "are not here on behalf of mine-owners to bull the market for silver. Agriculture is our chief interest. Our annual cotton crop is worth seven times, our wheat crop twelve times, and corn crop eighteen times the average annual production of our silver mines. America is seeking for herself and the world a broad and stable money basis, upon which $30,000,000,000 of the world's indebtedness can rest." Most of the delegates who had already spoken replied to the arguments adduced by subsequent speeches against the views propounded by them. Mr. Evarts and Sig. Dods recapitulated their arguments in favor of bimetallism, and with their speeches the general discussion closed. The conference then decided to adjourn its sittings until the 30th of June.

A TERRIBLE disaster has occurred to H. M. sloop-of-war Doterel, in the Straits of Magellan. An explosion of the salt-water condenser was followed by that of the magazine, which wrecked and sunk the vessel. One hundred and forty-three lives were lost.... St. Petersburg has been partially undermined by the indefatigable Nihilists. Officers in the navy have been discovered to be leaders in the various plots, and the Imperial Government thinks the head of the conspiracy is at last discovered....A battle between the French contingent and the native tribes of Tunis is reported to have been stubbornly fought, with severe losses on both sides in killed and wounded.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Nothing was done in open session by the Senate on Friday, May 13. The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of Don A. Pardee for United States Circuit Judge of the Fifth Judicial District, and George E. Gilmer for Postmaster at Richmond, Va., and Jerome H. Fee at Adrian, Mich., J. C. Dickey at Marshall, Kan., and W. W. Lambert at Brackettsville, Texas; Malach Kiebs, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Boise City, Idaho, and Moses M. Bane, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Salt Lake City, Utah. Col. Henry, of Ohio, was nominated for Marshal for the District of Columbia, and Fred Douglass was nominated for Recorder of Deeds for the District, vice George A. Sheridan, resigned. No vote was taken by the Republican caucus on the Robertson confirmation. Despite the secrecy of executive sessions, it has transpired that Senator Hale endeavored to induce the Republican Senators to support William E. Chandler, and that Mr. Edmunds declared with spirit that if Chandler were confirmed he would resign from the Judiciary Committee. He then proceeded to pronounce the nominee an unscrupulous lobbyist, who had been involved in nearly every job brought before Congress, and that his success would be an insult to the Attorney General, who would leave the Cabinet.

Gen. Burnside, from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, on the morning of Monday, May 16, submitted a report recommending the passage of Senator Morgan's resolution referring to the Darien canal. The Vice President laid before the Senate the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1881.—SIR: Will you please announce to the Senate that my resignation as Senator of the United States from the State of New York has been forwarded to the Governor of the State.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
ROSCOE CONKLING.
To the Hon. C. A. Arthur, Vice President.

This communication was received with a great sensation, which was heightened when the Vice President laid the following before the Senate:

SENATE CHAMBER, May 16, 1881.—To the Hon. C. A. Arthur, Vice President—SIR: I have forwarded to the Governor of the State of New York my resignation as Senator of the United States for the State of New York. Will you please announce the fact to the Senate?

With great respect, your obedient servant,
T. C. PLATT.

A hum of astonishment followed the reading of the communication, and Senator Hill, of Georgia, suggested, sotto voce, that this would be a good time to elect officers of the Senate. Mr. Dawes moved that the Senate go into executive session. Mr. Cockrell—"I thought you wanted to consider the other resolution." Mr. Dawes—"I had no idea but that the Senator would like to go on with it. It is in accordance with the disposition he has shown from the beginning." Mr. Hill—"The Senator said the republic would be subverted if the resolution was not acted upon." Mr. Dawes—"But the Senator would never be convinced until he happened to have a majority." Mr. Hill—"Oh, we won't insist upon having it considered." Mr. Dawes—"An accident is an eye-opener to the Senator." Mr. Hill turned around and suggested to Mr. Davis (Ill.) that there was nothing to prevent the Senate from adjourning this week sine die. The Senate then went into executive session, and confirmed a large number of nominations. A Republican caucus was held, at which the Republican Senators, with only four dissentient votes, decided to bring the Robertson nomination before the Senate for action forthwith, and to press for an early adjournment sine die of the Senate.

Mr. Saunders, of Nebraska, introduced a series of resolutions in the Senate on Tuesday, May 17, in reference to the evasion by the Central Pacific road of the Sinking-Fund law of 1878, which provides that 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the road be applied to paying off its indebtedness to the National Government, and calling on the Senate Judiciary Committee to report at the next regular session of the Senate what is necessary to protect the interest of the United States in reference to the Central Pacific and other roads. In executive session the Senate confirmed Fred Douglass as Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia. The Judiciary Committee reported in favor of the confirmation of Judge Robertson. The same committee reported in favor of the confirmation of Gen. Badeau as Minister to Denmark, and of Gen. Merritt as Consul General to London.

On the meeting of the Senate on Wednesday, May 18, Messrs. Bayard and Cameron, of Pennsylvania, were appointed to wait on the President and inquire whether he had any further business to communicate to the Senate. They reported that the President will have more than 200 more nominations and will send them in as fast as possible. In executive session Judge Robertson was confirmed as Collector of the Port of New York without objection. Other confirmations were: Gen. Merritt, Consul General at London, vice Gen. Badeau; Aleck Boreman, United States District Judge for the Western district of Louisiana; and Edward T. Nichols, to be Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department. The nomination of Gen. Badeau for Minister to Denmark was withdrawn. The following nominations were made by the President: Albert C. Wedge, Collector of Internal Revenue for the First district of Minnesota; Henry C. Ripley, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth district of Michigan; Madison Davis, Surveyor of Customs at Atlanta, Ga.; H. B. Taliaferro, United States Attorney for the Western district of Louisiana; James C. Weeks, United States Marshal Western district Louisiana; Horace N. Taylor, of Wisconsin, Consul at Marseilles.

Nothing was done in the open session of the Senate on Thursday, May 19, but in executive session a large number of confirmations were made, among which were the following: Ex-Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, for Register of the Treasury; ex-Congressman George B. Loring, for Commissioner of Agriculture; Gen. Richard Rowett, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth district of Illinois; Byron H. Langston, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth district of Missouri, and Henry C. Ripley, Collector for the Sixth district of Michigan. The President did not send back all the "New York nominations" recently withdrawn. He did, however, renominate Gen. Stewart L. Woodford for District Attorney of the Southern district of New York, A. W. Tenney to be District Attorney of the Eastern district, and C. McDougall Marshal of the Northern district of New York. Instead of the name of Payne he sent in that of Henry E. Knox for Marshal of the Southern district, and substituted Charles A. Gould for Tyler as Collector at Buffalo.

CONKLING AND PLATT.

Resignation of the New York Senators—Statement of the Reasons That Impelled Them to Such a Course.

The controversy between the President and Senator Conkling over the nomination of Judge Robertson to be Collector of the port of New York culminated, on the 16th inst., in the resignation, by Senators Conkling and Platt, of their seats in the United States Senate. The action of the New York Senators in tendering their resignations, it is needless to say, created a profound sensation at the national capital, and was a sharp surprise to the country at large. Messrs. Conkling and Platt addressed the following letter to the Governor of New York, defining their position, and explaining their reasons for resigning:

WASHINGTON, May 14, 1881.

To His Excellency A. B. Cornell, Governor:

SIR: Transmitting, as we do, our resignations, respectively, of the great trusts with which New York has honored us, it is fit that we acquaint you, and through you the Legislature and the people of the State, with the reasons which, in our judgment, make such a step respectful and necessary. Some weeks ago the President of the United States sent to the Senate in a group the nomination of several persons for public offices already filled. One of these offices is the Collectorship of the Port of New York, now held by Gen. Merritt; another is the Consul Generalship at London, now held by Gen. Badeau; another is the Charge d' Affaires at Denmark, held by Mr. Cramer; another is the mission to Switzerland, held by Mr. Fish, the son of the former distinguished Secretary of State. Mr. Fish had, in deference to an ancient practice, placed his position at the disposal of the new administration, but, like other persons named, was ready to remain at his post if permitted to do so.

All these officers, save only Mr. Cramer, are citizens of New York. It was proposed to displace them all, not for any alleged faults or advantage of the public service, but in order to give the great office of Collector of the Port of New York to Mr. William H. Robertson as a reward for certain acts of his which are said to have aided in making the nomination of Gen. Garfield possible.

The chain of removals thus proposed was broken by Gen. Badeau promptly declining to accept the new post to which he was to be sent. These nominations summoned every member of the Senate to say whether he advised such a transaction. The movement was more than a surprise. We had been told only a few hours before that no removals of New York officers were soon to be made, or even considered, and had been requested to withhold the papers and suggestions bearing on the subject which had been sent to us for presentation, should occasion arise, until we had notice from the President of his readiness to receive them.

Learning that the Vice President was equally surprised, and had been equally misled, we sent to Mr. James, the Cabinet officer from our State, and learned that, though he had spent some time with the President on the morning of the day the nominations were sent in, no disclosure of the intention to send them in had been made to him, and that the first he knew of the matter was by hearsay following the event.

After earnest reflection and consultation we believed the proceeding unwise and wrong, whether considered wholly in relation to the preservation and integrity of the public service and public example to be set, or in relation also to the integrity of the Republican party. No public utterance of comment or censure was made by either of us, in the Senate or elsewhere. On the contrary, we thought that the President would reconsider the action, so sudden and hasty, and would at least adopt less hurtful and objectionable modes of requiting personal or individual service. In this hope, the following paper was prepared, signed and presented by Mr. James to the President, who was subsequently informed that you had authorized your name to be added also:

To the President:

We beg leave to remonstrate against the change in the Collectorship of New York by the removal of Mr. Merritt and the appointment of Mr. Robertson. The proposal was wholly a surprise. We heard of it only when several nominations involved in the plan were announced in the Senate. We had only two days before this been informed from you that a change in the customs office at New York was not contemplated, and, quite ignorant of the purpose to take any action now, we had no opportunity until after the nominations to make the suggestions we now present. We do not believe that the interests of the public service will be promoted by removing the present Collector and putting Mr. Robertson in his stead. Our opinion is quite the reverse, and we believe no political advantage can be gained for either the Republican party or its principles. Believing that no individual has claims or obligations which should be liquidated in such a mode, we earnestly and respectfully ask that the nomination of Mr. Robertson be withdrawn.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR,
T. C. PLATT,
THOMAS L. JAMES,
ROSCOE CONKLING.

This paper was presented to the President by Mr. James on Monday, the 28th day of March. Knowing the frequency with which every one of the twenty Presidents of the republic had withdrawn nominations on less serious representations, and the similar and marked practice of the present incumbent, we did not apprehend that such a suggestion would be an intrusion or an invasion of any prerogative of the nominating power. We were disappointed. Immediately the public press, especially in articles and dispatches written by those in close and constant communication with the President and with influential members of his Cabinet, teemed with violent denunciations of the Senators from New York for "opposing the administration" and dictating to the President.

Persons who visited the Executive Mansion reported the President as resentful and impatient of the hesitation of the Senate to "advise and consent" to what he proposed. We had made no assault upon anybody. We have at all times refused to answer questions from representatives of the press, or make complaint or comment or even denial of many truthless charges published against us by officious champions of the administration. Indeed, beyond confidential consultations with brother Senators and officials, we have said nothing until now upon this subject. Nor have we as either of us "promoted the deadlock in the Senate" in order to prevent or influence action on any nomination; nor have we ever so stated.

Immediately after the nominations were published letters and telegrams in great numbers came from every part of the State, from its leading citizens, protesting against the proposed changes, and condemning them on many grounds. Several thousands of the leading mercantile firms of New York, constituting, as we are informed, a majority of every branch of trade, sent us remonstrances; sixty of the eighty-one Republican members of the Assembly, by letter or memorial, made objection. Representatives in Congress, State officials, business men, professional men, commercial, industrial and political organizations are among the remonstrants, and they speak from every section of the State.

Besides the nominations already referred to, there were awaiting the action of the Senate several citizens of New York named for offices connected with the courts (District Attorneys and Marshals). Most of them had been originally commissioned by Mr. Hayes. They were certified by Judges of courts and many other eminent persons, who attested the faithfulness and merit of their services, and recommended their continuance. They were not presented by us. We have not attempted to dictate, nor have we asked the nomination of one person to any office in the State. Indeed, with the sole exception of the written request set forth above, we have never even expressed an opinion to the President, in any case, unless questioned in regard to it.

Some days ago, the President abruptly withdrew, in one and the same act, the names of Gen. Woodford and Mr. Tenney, and of two Marshals. This unprecedented proceeding, whether permissible by law or not, was gravely significant. The President had nominated these officers after they had been weighed in the balance. Their official records were before him, and had been fully scrutinized and approved. It must be presumed that he thought the nominations fit to be made, and that it was his duty to make them. There is no allegation that he discovered any unfitness in them afterward. It could hardly be that he had discovered unfitness in all of them alike. What, then, was the meaning and purpose of this peremptory step. It was immediately stated, as if by authority, and it seems to be admitted, that the purpose was to coerce the Senate or Senators, to vote as they would not vote if left free from Executive interference. The design was to control the action of the Senators touching matters committed by the constitution to the Senate and to the Senate exclusively.

It has been suggested in addition that, by recalling the nominations and holding them in his own hands, the President might, in the event of the failure of another nomination, use them to compensate that failure. If it can be supposed that all these public trusts are to be, or would in any event be, made personal perquisites to be handled and disposed of, not only to punish independence of Senatorial votes and action, but liquidate personal obligations of any individual, however high in station, the conditions are utterly vicious and degrading, and their acceptance would compel representatives of States to fling down their oath and representative duty at the footstool of executive power. Following this sweeping and startling executive act, came the emissary avowals that dissent or failure to "advise and consent" would be held an act of offense, exposing all Senators from whatsoever State to executive displeasure.

Thus we find ourselves confronted by the question, whether we shall surrender the plain right and sworn duty of Senators by consenting to what we believe to be vicious and hurtful, or be assigned to a position of disloyalty to the administration which we helped bring in, and the success of which we earnestly desire, for every reason and motive which can enter into the case.

We know no theory avowed by any party which requires such submission as is now exacted. Although party service may be fairly considered in making selections of public officers, it can hardly be maintained that the Senate is bound to remove, without cause, official incumbents merely to make places for those whom any individual, even the President, or a member of his Cabinet, wishes to repay for being recreant to others or serviceable to him.

Only about two years ago the Senate advised Gen. Merritt to be appointed Collector of New York. It is understood that among the Senators who so advised was Mr. Windom, now head of the department whose subordinate Gen. Merritt is. Another Senator known to have given this advice was Mr. Kirkwood, now Secretary of the Interior.

It is said that, like the Postmaster General from our own State, these Cabinet officers were not taken into consultation touching the removal of Gen. Merritt, but their sworn and official action as Senators is not the less instructive. That the late Secretary of the Treasury and the late administration, up to its expiration, less than ten weeks ago, approved of Gen. Merritt as an officer is well known, and it is nowhere suggested that any citizen had petitioned for his removal, or that official delinquency on his part is the reason of it. In the place of an experienced officer, in the midst of his term fixed by law, it is proposed suddenly to put a man in who has had no training for the position, and who cannot be said to have any special fitness for the official duties.

In the inaugural of President Garfield, delivered on the 4th of March, stand these words:

"The civil service can never be placed on a satisfactory basis until it is regulated by law. For the good of the service itself, for the protection of those who are intrusted with the appropriation power, against waste of time and obstruction of public business, caused by inordinate pressure for place, and for the protection of incumbents against intrigue and wrong, I shall at the proper time ask Congress to fix the tenure of the minor offices in the several executive departments, and prescribe grounds upon which removals shall be made during the terms for which the incumbents have been appointed."

How good that distinction is which would make major offices a prey to intrigue and wrong, and shield minor offices from like havoc, and whether the Collectorships of the country should belong to the exposed or to the protected class, need not be decided here. Assuming Gen. Merritt to be an officer of average fitness and honesty, it might be reasonably argued that all Senators should with alacrity advise his displacement for a man of obvious superiority; possibly it might be said that all should advise the selection in Gen. Merritt's place of a man who, without superior fitness, had rendered his country, or even his party, conspicuous and exalted service.

The case in hand does not belong to either these classes. The vocation of Mr. Robertson, and his Legislative and professional experience and surroundings, do not denote superiority in the qualities, the knowledge, business habits, and familiarity with revenues, the laws and system of the United States which might make him more competent than Gen. Merritt to collect the vast revenues, and administer the vast business pertaining to the port of New York. Certainly he cannot in this respect be held an exception to the rule of right and consistency, on which the constitution and the laws have placed the public service. We know of no personal or political service rendered by Mr. Robertson so transcendant that the Collectorship of New York should be taken in the midst of the term and given him as a recompense.

Mr. Robertson is reported by the New York Tribune to declare that his nomination was a "reward;" a "reward" for his action as delegate to the National Convention.

If Mr. Robertson, in his action, was influenced by a sense of duty, if he voted and acted his honest convictions, it is difficult to see what claim he has for any reward, not to speak of such great reward. The action of which an estimate is thus invited is understood to be this:

Mr. Robertson and sixty-nine other men accepted from the State Convention a certain trust. They sought and accepted the position of agents or delegates to the National Convention to administer this trust. The State Convention declared plainly the stated judgment and policy to be observed and supported by those it commissioned. To this declaration all those selected as delegates gave an implied consent. But several of them, in addition, made most specific personal pledges and engagements to exert themselves in good faith throughout to secure the nomination of Gen. Grant.

They made this pledge as a means of obtaining their own appointment as delegates, and they did, as both personally know, claim their seats in the National Convention upon the faith of their personal statements of their earnestness and fidelity. The obligation thus assumed we understood to involve the integrity as much as the obligation of one who receives a proxy of a stockholder in a corporation upon the pledge and promise to vote as his principal would vote.

Whether Mr. Robertson was, or was not, himself bound, not only by honor and implication, but by expressly giving his word, becomes quite immaterial in view of the reclaim made for him. It is insisted that he "organized the bolt"—this is to say that he invited, persuaded and induced others whom he knew had given their word, and had obtained their seats by doing so, to violate their word, and betray, not only the Republicans assembled in State Convention, but the Republicans of their districts as well, who had trusted in their honor. Whoever counsels and procures another to do a dishonest or dishonorable act must share with that other the guilt, and should share also the odium justly attaching to it.

We are, therefore, all wholly unable, upon whatever ground we put it, to see any justification for ourselves should we become parties to using the public trusts which belong to the people to requite such services in such modes.

But the appliances employed to effect the results set new standards of responsibility and invade, as we believe, the truths and principles on which the separate and co-ordinate branches of the Government stand. A Senator has his own responsibility. He is amenable to his State and to the body of which he is a member. He is bound by his oath to "advise and consent" on his conscience and judgment before God. Whatever or whoever else may constrain him, he is to be exempt from executive menace or disfavor on the one hand and executive inducement on the other.

A long-standing order of the House of Commons has been the declaration that a member shall suffer expulsion who even reports the wishes of the executive head of the Government to influence votes of members. The British constitution is not more jealous than ours in this regard. To give advice, and honest, independent advice, as to appointments proposed, is as much the right and duty of a Senator as it is the right and duty of the President to propose them. To his advice one way or other, it is no more an act of disrespect or treason to the nominating power than the verdict of a juror or the decision of a Judge.

The idea that the Senate is simply to find out what is wanted and then do it we cannot believe safe or admissible. And thus far no party has dared or descended to set up such a test of party fidelity or efficiency.

In this instance such prominence has been given to the object, and such disgust been expressed of the correctness of our positions that we think it right and dutiful to submit the matter to the power to which alone we are bound and ever ready to bow. The Legislature is in session. It is Republican in majority, and New York abounds in sons quite as able as we to bear her message and commission in the Senate of the United States.

With a profound sense of the obligation we owe, with devotion to the Republican party and its creed of "Liberty and Right," with reverent attachment to the great State whose interests and honor are dear to us, we hold it respectful and becoming to make room for those who may correct all errors we have made, and interpret aright all duties we have misconceived. We therefore inclose our resignations, but hold fast the privilege as citizens and Republicans to stand for the constitutional rights of all men and of all representatives, whether of the States, the nation or the people.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

ROSCOE CONKLING,
THOMAS C. PLATT.

The Associated Press reporter, telegraphing from Washington on the 16th inst., says of the Conkling coup d'etat:

The surprise was so complete that the Senators had no time to form opinions, and generally expressed conjectures and surmises. One Republican Senator said that Conkling and Platt had better be re-elected by the New York Legislature now in session, and that will be claimed as an indorsement of their opposition to Robertson at the hands of the Republican party of New York. Republicans all feel sure of Conkling's re-election, but some few have doubts about Platt.

The Democratic Senators universally express gratification at the resignations. They say it widens the breach in the Republican party of New York, and increases the bitterness of the stalwarts toward the administration.

The Democrats now have a majority of the Senate, but, so far as can be learned, no attempt will be made toward reforming the committees. Mr. Pendleton, Chairman of the Democratic caucus, said no such action would be thought of, and that the committees will remain as now organized.

Don Cameron and David Davis seem to be the only Senators who knew of the coming resignations. It is said that Conkling and Platt will not only regard their re-election as an approval of their fight against Robertson, but also as a rebuke to the administration.

The supporters of Conkling state that the resignations were offered because the New York Senators feel that they have been badly treated by the administration; that Robertson's nomination was made at the instigation of Blaine to put Conkling down; that both the Senators and the Vice President protested against this warfare against the regular Republican organization of New York, but all their efforts failed. Republican Senators refused to help them maintain the Republican party of the Empire State, and, rather than remain to be put down and insulted, both Senators resigned. This is the stroke of policy which, it has been rumored, Conkling had in view.

Secretaries Blaine, Hunt, Windom, Kirkwood and Lincoln were among the visitors at the White House to-day. The last named came alone and made but a brief call. The others arrived at the Executive Mansion about the same time, and remained in conference with the President twenty minutes or more. The President stated that he had received last evening from a trustworthy source an intimation that the resignations of the New York Senators would be announced to-day. It had, therefore, caused him no surprise. It is believed at the White House that nothing will now prevent the early adjournment of the Senate.

Pilgrims in Paterson.

Paterson, N. J., enjoys one of the most densely populated families in America. The City Physician of that place, believing that an epidemic was breaking out in an "apartment of two rooms," threw aside the official tape and form peculiar to our City Board of Health, and personally visited the scene of his suspicions. He found twenty-two freshly arrived Hollanders in "the two rooms hired for one family," and more than that, all the members of it were not at home at the time of his call. Ten men were absent looking for work and old acquaintances. Progeny was the epidemic the Hollanders had brought with them, and as the entire thirty-two were healthy, happy, and able to sit up and take their combined ninety-six daily meals, the Doctor left them to continue to multiply, increase and perform all the other duties incident to decent Dutch life. From all accounts this exhibition exceeds anything so far produced in the combined greatest shows on the earth.—New York Commercial.

THE STAR ROUTE FRAUDS.

How Senator Beck, in the Senate More Than a Year Ago Exposed Brady's Methods—And How His Colleagues in the Senate, Now James' Colleagues in the Cabinet, Have Changed Their Views.

[Washington Telegram to the New York World.]

Ex-Senator Dorsey and Gen. Brady protest against all allegations as to their complicity with the "Star route frauds" in so vehement a fashion that it would seem as if these frauds were of fresh development; whereas the recent action of Postmaster General James and President Garfield in pushing Brady and his confederates to the wall ought to have been taken by both Postmasters General Key and Maynard and by President Hayes last spring when those frauds were fully exposed by Senator Beck in the Senate. Page 1,214 of the Record for March 1, 1880, shows that Senator Beck opened what proved to be a severe campaign against the star routes by procuring the passage of a resolution asking Secretary Sherman to state the payments made for those routes during the two years before, the times of payments and what amount was needed to meet the existing star-route liabilities according to any existing increase of rates. Having obtained this information, Senator Beck a fortnight afterward, when the Postoffice Deficiency bill came up for discussion, followed Senator Wallace's explanations of its purport with an analysis and exposure of the star-route swindles, which no one undertook to answer except by generalities. The pending amendment when Senator Beck addressed the Senate was for appropriating $1,000,000 toward the deficiencies in payments on star-route account, the $6,000,000 originally voted having been exhausted. It was explained that the phrase "Star routes"—originating from the star mark placed against them in blue books—comprehended all mail service not done by steam, and that it included a service of 215,000 miles, against 21,000 miles by steamboat and 79,000 miles by railway. Senator Wallace had called the attention of the Senate to certain inconsistent requests of the Postmaster General and his subordinates as to the star-route deficiencies and had remarked that "either they did not know their own needs, or they had some purpose to serve." Senator Beck forthwith proceeded to demonstrate the nature of the purposes that had been served. He caused to be read the letter from Gen. Brady to the Committee on Appropriations, dated in the autumn of 1879, in which that official asked a turning over to the credit of the star route the sum of $2,000,000 which remained unexpended to the credit of the other routes; and Senator Beck showed that Brady was attempting a nullification of law, because the Democrats succeeded to the control of Congress before all unexpended balances were systematically turned over from one to another account at the will of Cabinet officers until a law forbid such methods. Senator Beck next invited attention to the fact that the statutes required from the Postoffice Department a blue-book every September, which was to contain all possible details as to contracts, contractors, service, and increases of speed or money, yet that the book, although partially published at that time, was silent as to details of star routes, and that six months had passed without additions as to these details having been made to the blue-book. Senator Beck then read an answer from Gen. Brady to a committee request for explanation of these delays, in which the Second Assistant Postmaster General had said: "I should be compelled to investigate before I can answer." In connection with this the Senator read a statement from Mr. Cranstoun Lawrie, of the Statistical Bureau, in which he stated he had every week regularly furnished to Gen. Brady in person all the facts which were kept out of the blue-book, which Gen. Brady wished to "investigate." Senator Beck next indicated how all this led to investigation and to a refusal of the committee to permit any transfer of the $2,000,000—which in consequence of the investigation had dwindled to a demand for $1,000,000 of deficiency. Senator Beck then denounced the consequent process of coercion that the Postoffice Department at once began. He read a letter from Postmaster General Key, by which he informed Congress that because of its refusal of Brady's request he must reduce all the star-route service to one trip per week and must cease all extensions of postal service. Mr. Key was immediately summoned before the committee to answer by what authority he had already expended the whole of the $6,000,000 appropriated for star routes; or by what authority he proposed to cripple the postal service by reducing it on at least 10,000 routes, but he escaped answering by immediately withdrawing his proposition for the reduction. These postal officers, Senator Beck pointedly said, "did not exceed the appropriation by accident; they did it by design. Thus we are coerced. Road agents order us to stand and deliver—to furnish them with money, or the mails shall be stopped." This brought Senator Beck to a sharp analysis of three star routes in order to show how the plundering was done. The route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma was let for a contract price of $134,000, but $165,000 was soon added because a mile—one whole mile—per hour had been added to the contract speed, yet without one additional mail being carried or one additional office es- fitting only fourteen postoffices, was let for $13,000 the first contractor threw up his service, and Gen. Brady, at an increase of $78,700, payment for supposed "expedition," put it into the hands of a tablished along the route—and all without competitive bids. When another route from Prescott to Santa Fe, bene- man named Walsh upon Walsh's own unsupported statement that such increase was absolutely essential. When summoned before the committee for an explanation of this extraordinary conduct Gen. Brady was forced to admit that he had himself theretofore, upon his own sworn testimony, procured in New Orleans while a revenue officer the indictment of this very Walsh for defrauding the Government. Indeed, upon the indictment in the Department of Justice, Senator Beck found Brady's name indorsed as the principal witness against Walsh. Gen. Brady having absolutely no explanation to offer for presenting $78,700 to a man whom he had under oath pronounced dishonest, Walsh himself was summoned, who brazenly said, "If I had been longer in mail service I would have made the extra claim $200,000, and you would now have been investigating me at that figure." The third route to which Senator Beck paid attention extended from Vinita to Las Vegas—a service done on a buckboard, and the mails of which filled only three sacks, yet for which service Gen. Brady had of his own will increased the compensation from $6,330 to $144,200. "Here are three star routes," repeated Senator Beck, "increased $430,000 when there is only an increase of $300,000 on 10,000 of the other routes throughout the United States." Senator Beck passed by Brady because, as he said, Brady was a subordinate and he must fasten the complicity in the transactions upon Judge Key, in regard to whom he showed by testimony from Judge Key himself that with a full knowledge of a statute providing that no head of department could exceed the periodical quotas of appropriation for his department, Judge Key had suffered the star-route appropriations to become exhausted in half a year, so that at first $2,000,000 and at last $1,000,000 of deficiency had been impudently demanded.

When, two months later, the regular Postoffice Appropriation bill for the approaching year came before the Senate, Senator Beck renewed this contest, and repeated all his previous statements and arguments, and on each occasion without success. The Record shows how Kirkwood—now Secretary of the Interior—defended the claims for deficiency and for the huge appropriations on star-route account, and even referred to Gen. Brady as "a faithful, honest and capable public servant." Senator Blaine then added his voice and vote in championing the requests of Gen. Brady for deficiency moneys. A stringent restrictive amendment offered by Senator Beck was lost by a vote of 28 to 32—there voting with him such representative men as Bayard, Eaton, Edmunds, Hamlin, Kernan, McDonald, Morrill and Voorhees, and there voting with Blaine and Kirkwood and for Gen. Brady such allies as Allison, Cameron, Dawes, Hoar and Windom. Conkling had been present at the first debate, but had said nothing, and his name is absent from the roll on each occasion. Of the Senators who voted for the fraudulent deficiencies and appropriations after Senator Beck's exposure Blaine, Kirkwood and Windom are colleagues of the successor of Key and Maynard, who has practically turned out Brady and Brady's principal, Dorsey. It becomes an interesting question why Garfield, Blaine, Kirkwood and Windom when in Congress did not upon Senator Beck's exposures do what they now approve when it is done upon Mr. James' motion.

Patriotic Mission of the Republican Party.

It is a Republican quarrel. It is a Republican war. It is a Republican wrangle. It indicates that there is nothing left of the Republican party but petty wrangling. The great national question under the guidance of the Republican party is suddenly shifted. A few days ago the national Republican party stood before the country on a peculiar platform of twins, Gorham and Riddleberger. The Republican position was that the only patriotic business of the United States was to make Gorham, Brady's partner, Secretary of the Senate of the United States, and Riddleberger, who only became notorious because he was a notorious Repudiator and the next friend of a traitor, Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate. The Republican party has been compelled to abandon this position by the splendid tenacity of the Democratic Senators; and the Republican attitude is changed. The Republican party is no longer fighting for Gorham and Riddleberger as great national issues, but it is quarreling with itself as to a Custom House officer. The question is still one of small and local spoils. The jump from the national issue, which related to two servants of the United States Senate, to the national issue which relates to a Custom House officer, is not a change of character. A few days ago the fuss was about two small offices. The Senatorial agents of the Republican party obstructed the public business two months in the endeavor to put two worthy men out of office and to put two unworthy men in their places. When the Republican party abandoned this small position it immediately began quarreling with itself about one office—a Custom House office. These simple facts seem to indicate the length and breadth and thickness of the patriotic mission of the Republican party at this moment.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"My Dear Hubbell."

The explanation of Gen. Brady's organ, the National Republican, touching the Garfield letter to Hubbell, is this:

Gen. Garfield was a member of Congress when the star-route investigation took place in 1880, and was fully cognizant of all that has recently been paraded by Detective Woodward and his subordinates of the Postoffice Department as cause for Brady's removal. His confidence in Brady's integrity, and of the proper and honest management of the star-route service, is abundantly proven by his letter in reply to Chairman Hubbell, of August last. Hubbell had asked Brady to solicit subscriptions. The latter declined, unless advised to do so by President Hayes. This advice was sought for, and refused. Brady was asked if Gen. Garfield's approval would overcome the obstacle. He assented. Hubbell wrote Garfield on the subject. How, then, could Garfield be ignorant of what was wanted? He knew that mail contractors were the only persons with whom Brady had any official contact. There was no other aid he could render. When appealed to by Hubbell to write a letter to encourage Brady in the work he replies:

> MY DEAR HUBBELL: Yours of the 19th inst. received and contents noted. Please say to Brady, I hope he will give us all the assistance he can. I think he can help effectively. Please tell me how the departments generally are doing.

What Gen. Brady shrank from doing Gen. Garfield pushed him on to do. That is plain English and plain truth. An honest official might well hesitate to even place himself under implied obligations to contractors of the performance of whose work honestly contracted for he was to judge. Unwilling to refuse absolutely to do as requested by a campaign committee, he agreed to comply only upon condition that the candidate for President would say that he considered it right and proper. The 'please say to Brady' letter was Gen. Garfield's ready response. It was all anxiety for help, and not a word as to the methods."

INDIANA NEWS.

THEODORE SHOCKLEY, of Moore's Hill, had twenty-three sheep killed and ten wounded by dogs the other night.

MRS. PETER BANEY, of Cass county, who had been married only three weeks when her husband died, attempted to follow him a few days ago by taking strychnine.

WILLIAM PECONGA, a Miami Indian, was called on a jury in the Grant county Circuit Court, the first instance, perhaps, of an Indian acting as a juror in Indiana.

HON. ROBERT L. POLK died at his home in New Castle, after an illness of several months' duration, aged 40 years. He was elected Circuit Judge in 1876, and the term expires in 1882.

A NEW ALBANY family came near being poisoned to death by eating corn cakes made of dough that had stood over night in a glazed crockery dish.

ARTICLES of incorporation of the Willard Library have been filed at Evansville. It is the intention to establish a free public library, gallery of art, public reading-rooms and a public park.

ELDER R. L. HOWE has received the appointment as Postmaster at Charlestown, succeeding M. P. Alpha, who had held the office thirty-two years.

COL. A. W. PRATHER, a prominent Republican politician of Columbus, has just been tendered a $2,000 position in the Treasury Department at Washington.

ELDER MILLER, of the Baptist Church, baptized twenty-seven persons in the Ohio river, near the ferry dock, at Jeffersonville, Sunday morning. The elder was attired in a white robe and the candidates wore white turbans.

THERE is much excitement in Perry county on account of the many murders and daring robberies that have occurred in the past two years. Three murders have take place in the past four months, and other crimes of a notorious character have been committed.

GOV. PORTER has appointed as Chief of the State Bureau of Statistics John B. Conner, editor of the Indiana Farmer, who was the author of the act by which the bureau was created in 1879, and has ever since taken great interest in the working of the department.

THE Howards are now employing 300 men in their shipyard at Jeffersonville. They will launch three boats next week, and will then put up the frame-work of two immense steamers for the Anchor line of St. Louis. These boats will have a capacity of 2,500 tons.

DR. JOSEPH GARDNER has just returned to Bedford from Dubois county, where he went at the request of Prof. Collett to examine some mineral lands in search of silica and fine whetstone grits. The doctor reports his researches as being very satisfactory.

THERE was a meeting of the Methodist pastors and laymen of New Albany at the Centenary Church to take steps looking to the holding of a semi-centennial of Indiana Methodism in that city in 1882. The first Methodist conference held in Indiana convened in a church owned by the Wesley Chapel Society.

MRS. HENSON, an old lady of Jackson township, Harrison county, met with a very serious accident. While climbing over a fence one end of a crochet needle which she was carrying in her dress-pocket struck against a rail with such force as to drive the other end into the left side of her abdomen, and, as the lady straightened herself up, the needle was drawn inward. A surgeon probed the wound and found that the needle had penetrated entirely into the cavity, and was unable to find or remove it.

THE large carriage manufacturing establishment of Paul Hirschauer, at Rising Sun, together with four dwelling-houses, was entirely consumed by fire. Hirschauer's loss is about $2,500, with $500 insurance. The dwellings were not insured. Several persons were injured by falling timbers. It is supposed to have been set on fire.

GOV. PORTER recently appointed Mark E. Forkner Judge of the Henry Circuit Court, vice Judge Polk, deceased. The new Judge was born in Henry county, and read law with and afterward became a partner of Judge Willett, of Newcastle. He was a candidate for the Judgeship when it was thought the constitutional amendments were in force last summer. Mr. Forkner was a prominent member of the Legislature of 1878.

A YOUNG couple of South Bend, who got married recently against their parent's wishes and partly against their own, also, called to pay their respects to the bridegroom's mother, the other evening, and were met with a kettle of hot water. The boy now threatens to have the old lady arrested for an assault, and there is likely to be some lively sport come out of the matter yet.

SIX years ago Aaron Swarthout brought suit at North Vernon against the Ohio and Mississippi railroad for carrying him by a station at which the train on which he was riding never stopped. A change of venue was taken to Ripley county, and the plaintiff recovered a small judgment. Not satisfied with this he appealed to the Supreme Court, and the case was remanded back to the Ripley Circuit Court for a new trial, which has resulted in a verdict for the defendant.

BRITAIN'S RULERS.

The Kings and Queens of England—Length of the Reigns of the Several Houses.

The Norman line began with William the Conqueror; then came in succession the houses of Plantagenet, Lancaster, York, Tudor, Stuart, the Commonwealth, Stuart-Orange, Stuart and Hanover. William the Conqueror was the sixth sovereign of Normandy. Henry II., the first of the Plantagenets, was the son of Matilda of Scotland, a direct descendant of Edmund II., surnamed Ironside, who was the son and successor of Ethelred II., born in 989, and King of the Anglo-Saxons in 1016. Henry IV., as the last of the Plantagenets (Richard II.) left no children, was the eldest son of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, fourth son of Edward III., and of Blanche, daughter and heiress of Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Lancaster, great-grandson of Henry III. Edward IV., the first of the House of York, was descended from the fifth son of Edward III., as the Lancastrian Kings had descended from the fourth son of the same sovereign. Henry VII., the first of the Tudors, was a descendant of Henry V. James I. of England, and VI. of Scotland, was the son of Lord Darnley and Mary Queen of Scots, and his right to the succession rested on his descent from Henry VII., through his great-grandmother, Margaret. Charles II. was the second child among six of Charles I., and started anew the Stuart line at the restoration. Mary, who with William of Orange, ruled Britain, was a Stuart, as was also Anne, "the good Queen." George I., of the House of Hanover, was descended on his mother's side from James I. The following will show the length of the reigns of the several houses:

	Years.
The Norman line	1066-1154
Plantagenet	1154-1399
Lancaster	1399-1461

The Old Banking System.

The banking system in vogue previous to the act of 1864 was simply that which placed the charter of all banks of issue and deposit in the hands of the several States. In 1856 and 1857 there were about 1,400 of these State institutions; in New England alone there were 507 banks and branches, with a capital of $114,611,752. At that time an important feature in New England banking was the "Suffolk banking system," through which the notes of all New England banks were collected and redeemed at the Suffolk Bank at Boston, each bank making a stipulated deposit for that purpose, amounting in the aggregate to $300,000. The older banking system of the United States dates back of the State banks. During the revolutionary war the country was extremely poor, with few industries except agriculture, and with no precious metal to speak of. Congress, May 10, 1775, made preparation to issue Continental paper, $2,000,000 of which were put in circulation on June 22 following. These issues aggregated $300,000,000, and depreciated so much that eventually they became valueless, although laws were passed making them a legal tender for the payments of debts. Then a plan was submitted to Congress, May 17, 1781, by Robert Morris, for a National Bank, the principal provisions of which were: The capital to be $400,000, in shares of $400 each, each share to have a vote; that twelve directors be chosen from those entitled to vote, who at their first meeting shall choose a president; that the directors meet quarterly; that the board be empowered from time to time to open new subscriptions for the purpose of increasing the capital of the bank; statements to be made to the Superintendent of the Finances of America; that the bank notes payable on demand shall by law be made receivable for duties and taxes in every State, and from the respective States by the Treasury of the United States; that the Superintendent of the Finances of America shall have the right at all times to examine into the affairs of the bank. This bank became an important auxilary in aid of the finances of the Government, and so continued to the end of the war. Then followed the Bank of the United States, commonly called Hamilton's bank, which was chartered in 1791, and continued till 1811. From that time to 1816 the fiscal service of the Government was performed by banks operated under the State law. In 1816 the second Bank of the United States was created; its capital was to be $35,000,000, in 350,000 shares of $100 each; $7,000,000 of the stock to be subscribed by the United States, and the remaining $28,000,000 by individuals, companies or corporations. The bank went into operation Jan. 7, 1817, and continued till 1836, when it ceased to act under the charter granted by the United States, but the same year was rechartered by the State of Pennsylvania, with the same capital. On winding up its affairs in 1840, after paying its debts there remained nothing to the stockholders, the entire capital being sunk.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Fifteen Puzzle.

A correspondent of London Truth says in reference to the fifteen puzzle, which at one time created so great a sensation in the United States, that it may be found worked out and the principles of the various arrangements lucidly explained in Hutton's "Recreations of Mathematical Science," which was published more than fifty years ago. The writer adds: "So far from being any new discovery, the Hindoos, Chinese and Egyptians are said to have been acquainted with these arrangements at a very early period, attributing powers of divination to such squares—the square of sixteen figures (the fifteen puzzle) being consigned or consecrated to Jupiter. The oldest writing extant in reference to this mathematical curiosity is a MS. of the sixteenth century now in the Paris Bibliotheque."

CENTAUR LINIMENTS; the World's great Pain-Relieving remedies. They heal, soothe and cure Burns, Wounds, Weak Back and Rheumatism upon Man, and Sprains, Galls, and Lameness upon Beasts. Cheap, quick and reliable.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

"I Don't Want That Stuff!"

Is what a lady in Boston said to her husband when he brought home some medicine to cure her of sick headache and neuralgia which had made her miserable for fourteen years. At the first attack, thereafter, it was administered to her with such good results, that she continued its use until cured, and so enthusiastic was she in its praise, that she induced twenty-two of the best families in her circle to adopt it as their regular family medicine. DROPPING INTO POETRY.

The Exchange Editor Does it Naturally.

"If you please sir," said the young lady timidly, as the exchange editor handed her a chair, "I have composed a few verses, or partially composed them, and I thought you might help me finish them, and then print them. Ma says that they are real nice as far as they go, and pa takes the Eagle every day.

She was a handsome creature, with beautiful blue eyes, and a crowning glory as yellow as golden rods. There was an expectant look on her face, a hopelessness that appealed to the holiest emotions, and the exchange editor made up his mind not to crush the longing of that pure heart if he never struck another lick.

"May I show you the poetry?" continued the ripe, red mouth. "You will see that I couldn't get the last lines of the verses, and if you would please be so kind as to help me——"

"Help her! though he never even read a piece of poetry, the exchange editor felt the spirit of the divine art flood his soul as he yielded to the bewildering music. Help her! Well he should smile.

"The first verse runs like this," she went on, taking courage from his eyes:

"How softly sweet the autumn air
The dying woodland fills,
And nature turns from restful care—"

"To anti-bilious pills," added the exchange editor with a jerk. "Just the thing. It rhymes and it's so. You take anybody now. Half the people you meet are——"

"I suppose you know best," interrupted the young girl. "I had not thought of it in that way, but you have a better idea of such things. Now the second verse is like this:"

"The dove eyed kine upon the moor
Look tender, meek and sad;
While from the valley comes the roar—"

"Of the matchless liver-pad," roared the exchange editor. "There you get it. That finishes the second so as to match the first. It combines the fashions with poetry, and carries the right idea right home to the fireside. If I only had your ability in starting a verse, and my genius in winding it up, I would quit the shears and open in the poetry business to-morrow."

"Think so?" asked the fair young lady. "It don't strike me as keeping up the theme."

"You don't want to. You want to break the theme here and there. The reader likes it better. O yes! we e you to keep up the theme it gets monotonous."

"Perhaps that's so," rejoined the beauty, brightening up. "I did not think of that. Now I will read the third verse"

"How sadly droops the dying day
As night springs from the glen.
And moaning twilight seems to say—"

"The old man's drunk again, would not do, would it?" asked the exchange editor. "Somebody else wrote that, and we might be accused of plagiarism. We must have this thing orginal. Suppose we say—now just suppose we say: "Why did I spout my ben?"

"Is that new?" inquired the sweet, rosy lips. "At least I never heard it before. I don't know what it means."

"New? Indeed it is new. Ben is the Presbyterian name for overcoat, and spout means to hock. 'Why did I spout my ben,' means, 'Why did I shove my topper?' That is just what twilight would think of first, you know. O don't be afraid, that's just immense."

"Well, I'll leave it to you," said the glorious girl with a smile that pinned the exchange editor's heart to his spine. This is the fourth verse:"

"The merry milkmaid's somber song
Re-echoes from the rocks,
As silently she trips along—"

"With holes in both her socks, by Jove!" cried the delighted exchange editor. "You see——"

"Oh, no, no!" remonstrated the blushing maiden. "Not that."

"Certainly," protested the exchange editor warming up. "Nine to four she's got 'em, and you get fidelity to fact with wealth of poetical expression. The worst of poetry generally is, you can't state things as they are. It ain't like prose. But here we have busted all the established notions, and put up an actual existence with a veil of genuine poetry over it. I think that is the best idea we have struck yet."

"I do not seem to look at it as you do, but of course you are the best judge. Pa thought I ought to say:

'As silently she trips along
In autumn's yellow tracks.'

Wouldn' that do?"

"No! Just look at it. Does tracks rhyme with rocks? Not in the Brooklyn Eagle it don't. Besides when you say 'tracks' and 'rocks' you give the impression of some fellow who is scratching for safety. 'Socks' on the other hand rhymes with 'rocks' and beautifies them, while it touches up the milkmaid, and, by describing her condition, shows her to be a child of the very nature you are showing up."

"I think you are right, and I'll tell pa where he was wrong. This is the way the fifth verse runs:"

"And close behind the farmer's boy
Trills forth his simple tunes.
And slips beside the maiden coy—"

"And splits his pantaloons! Done it myself; know just exactly how it is. Why, bless your heart, you—"

Snip, snip, snip. Paste, paste, paste. But it is with the saddest heart that the snips and pastes among his exchanges now. The beautiful vision that for a moment dawned upon him has left, but the recollection in his heart of one sunbeam in his life, quenched by the shower of tears with which she denounced him as a "nasty brute" and went out from him forever.—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements it having been carried for over twenty years and it still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold seamless pendants and center, solid joints, crown pieces etc, all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

Lines on the Death of Little Neva Kuhlman.

Oh, transitory earth,
How soon thy joys decay,
Say, would it not enhance their worth
To lengthen out their stay?

Sweet Neva, thus didst thou
A moment with us stay;
But lovely child, where art thou now,
Why fled from us away?

"That is a world of sin
Dear mother, thou dost know;
Why wish thy child to stay therein,
And share in all its woe?"

"Then go thou lovely one,
Go and enjoy thy rest;
Thy Savior hath thy victory won,
Go, be forever blest."

Methinks a voice I hear
From a far-distant one;
A voice of woe a father dear
Cries, "Lord, Thy will be done."

The mournful tidings now
Have reached his anxious ear;
Oh may he in submission bow,
Although the stroke's severe.

Correspondence.

The following letter written to Mr John S. Boots by his brother, in San Jose, California, has been given us for publication

SAN JOSE, CAL., April 28, 1881.

John S. Boots, Spencerville, Indiana

DEAR BROTHER: About twenty minutes ago I got your letter, and I think there is no other time a trail is so easily followed as when warm, so I will answer briefly Now about the prunes. I have now 440 Petit Prune Diogen, of French variety. From the six year old trees I dried and sold last fall over five tons of prunes, which I sold in bulk at home at ten cents a pound. I have five varieties and 2,400 prune trees in all We take the pits out of some varieties, and get sixteen cents a pound for them I cleared about $2,000 out of the lot, and the cost of all work for the year was $600. There are many others in the business, but it will never be outdone, as we have all of northern Europe and the Atlantic states for a market. Apricots are going to be the monied fruit of the world, and this is the country to raise them

We are still raising berries, but not so extensively as formerly. I sent off a wagon load a few minutes ago, also a wagon load of asparagus. I am sometimes troubled in getting labor, that is white labor, for white men do not, as a rule, take to hard work I am working three white men and sixty Chinamen. and I would rather farm 100 acres than to have the care of and milk five cows.

I wish you could see our horses I know that you do not see as much beauty in a fine horse as I do. Fondness for horses perhaps has been my weak point all through life. I love a fine horse, and am willing to pay my money to look at him and keep him in moving condition. In about 1863 there was brought from England to this neighborhood an English thoroughbred stallion at a cost of $5,000 About eight years later I bought the animal, which was a dappled bay, 16 hands high and weighed 1,200 pounds. I bred him to common mares for work horses and roadsters, and have some of the finest carriage horses you ever saw, and I very frequently drive down to the city, a distance of 48 miles, put my team up for two or three hours and drive home again the same day, all in daylight. I once drove my horse 75 miles after working him a half day, and drove in the rain at that. When I bought the stallion I purchased two thoroughbred mares which weighed 1,000 pounds each and my oldest colts are now nine years old. I have five stallions on hand and only one has ever served mares I have a training track of my own, where I work and train them. Last Saturday I went out and had two young stallions tried one half mile. They made the distance in just 53 1-2 seconds. We repeated them in the same time. This was done in their training shoes and without urging; of course when we sharpen up for a race they must do a little better. I will send away two fine young thoroughbreds in a few days to break to the harness for trotters. I have young horses here which, as soon as they are gentle enough to drive, can trot right away in three minutes, and for work horses they can't be beat. I have no use for a horse that weighs over 1,200 pounds. About 20 years ago I commenced raising big horses, from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds, but after using them awhile I soon disposed of them, for, should I happen to get a few miles from home I would most likely have to camp out for the night, and if there is anything I dislike, it is to camp within sight of home. All you have to do with the horses I have now is to point out the road and they will find the end of it, if there is such a thing to be done that day, and still they are gentle and kind.

Our crop prospects are good. I never saw such heavy growth as at present. Wheat and barley is low in price, the former being $1 35 per hundred pounds, and the latter 90 cents. Everything is sold by the pound here. Good bye.

WM. BOOTS.

Bibles with Funny Nicknames.

An addition of Matthew's Bible, published in 1551, was called "The Bug Bible," because the passage in psalm xci, 5, which in our version reads, "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night," was rendered in that book, "So that thou shalt not be afraid for any bugges by night." Another edition, the Genevan, was called the "Breeches Bible," because it rendered Genesis 3 7, "They sewed fig leaves together and made themselves breeches." The Bishop's Bible, 1568, on account of rendering Jer. viii, 22, as "Is there no treacle in Gilead?" was dignified with the sobriquet "The Treacle Bible" The same passage being rendered in the Douay Version, "Is there no rosin in Gilead?" that has been nicknamed the "Rosin Bible" An edition of the Authorized Version, published in Oxford in 1717, is known as the "Vinegar Bible," a name given it because of a printer's blunder in rendering the title to Luke 20. The parable of the Vinegar,' instead of the parable of the Vineyard.' The worst nickname of all is that given to an edition of the Authorized Version, printed in London by Barker & Lucas in 1631. In this edition an important word is left out of the seventh commandment, making it read: "Thou shalt commit adultery" Naturally this is called the "Wicked Bible." Other mistakes, grave or gray, have been made in different editions of the Bible by printers; as, for instance, where Paul is made to say, "Purge your conscience from good works," instead of from dead works; and again, where our Savior's words, in the beatitudes, "Blessed are the peace-makers," are made to read—for the special comfort, we suppose, of office-seekers—"Blessed are the place-makers."

In view of these typographical blunders, it seems only in accordance with the fitness of things that one Bible should have made David say, in psalms 119, 161, instead of "Princes have persecuted me without a cause," "Printers have persecuted me without a cause."

THE HE AND SHE BIBLE.

Two editions of the Authorized Version were published in 1611, and some differences were detected in them One of these consisted in the use in one passage of the name of "Judas" for that of "Jesus." Another occurred in Ruth 3 15, one edition having the words, "He went into the city," referring to Ruth; the other, the statement that 'She went into the city' This has caused the two editions to be humorously designated as "The Great He Bible" and "The Great She Bible.

Impurities in Ice.

The popular delusion that water in the process of freezing somehow eliminates any impurity it may contain, or that the vitality by the cold, is now very generally exploded.

An American naturalist has been microscopically examining fragments of ice taken from various canals and ponds. He took only such specimens as appeared clean, and were quite transparent to the eye. On melting them and subjecting to magnifying powers, varying up to nine hundred diameters, he says that vegetable tissue and confervoid growth were in most cases observable at once. He found no instance in which animalculæ were present in an active state after freezing, but after being allowed to stand for awhile in a moderate temperature, the water presented monads whose movements were easily distinguished with a magnifying power of from two to four hundred diameters. After a while, confervæ were observed growing and taking form similar to the nests occupied by the young of the Paramecium, common in stagnant water. The result of the observations is to prove beyond question that freezing does not in any way eliminate impurity or prevent the subsequent development of animal or vegetable germs.

This is merely a confirmation of what has already been asserted and proved before, but the matter is of such importance that it is not likely to be argued with unnecessary frequency. Many persons who will look askance at a glass of unfiltered water will not hesitate to cool their drinks by dropping a knob of ice into it. That from ponds and canals is, of course, ostensibled gathered for non dietetic purposes; but it is to be feared that in hot weather ice is ice, and that much risk of mischief is often incurred.—[London Globe.

We have had rather an exciting time here on account of tramps or somebody else breaking into and robbing stores. Five tramps were arrested on suspicion and searched, but no goods were found in their possession. J. L. Hall acted as detective. A part of the goods taken from Gettell's store at Altona were found in the ice-house near the tamarack. Two of the tramps were arrested at Garrett, two at the ice-house and one west of Altona. Sheriff Leas and Prosecutor Peterson were notified, but after searching and examining them, they were all released. Had we been sure that the parties arrested were guilty, some stringent and effective mode of dealing with them would have been adopted, so the industrious part of the community would be protected against tramps, thieves and beggars.

General Synod of the Reformed Church.

The following brief notes of this meeting will be of interest to many of our readers, especially to those connected with that organization. The synod convened in triennial session at Tiffin, Ohio, May 18. The opening sermon was preached by Dr Van Horne, of Philadelphia, after which, Dr J H Good was made president, Rev. J G Brown and Dr. Rutenick vice-presidents and Rev. G. B. Kniest corresponding secretary. The synod remained in session until May 25. The following are among the items of greatest interest: The report of the committee on foreign missions, giving more particularly a history of the work of Rev. Gring and wife at Tokio Japan, which is reported to have been very successful. The different committees were then appointed. Rev. Kneist made an interesting speech to the same effect, advocating the erection of a monument to the memory of Caspar Olevianus in the church at Herbon, Germany. Resolution adopted. The report of the Peace commission, detailing in full its labors and results, was then read and adopted. The report sets forth that the Reformed church adheres to the doctrines of the scripture, as set forth in the Heidelberg Catechism, taking the same in the historical sense, and directs that these doctrines be taught and defended at all times. Several doctrinal points were also embodied in the report, but their great length prevents their insertion in full.

Dr Thomas G. Apple reported that the delegates to the Pan Presbyterian Alliance at Philadelphia last fall, had attended to the duties assigned. Delegates were present from the different Reformed churches in Europe and America, holding to the Presbyterial polity, and the results of the Alliance will evidently promote the spirit of christian fellowship and unity between the different members of the reformed family of churches. At another time, the subject of deaconess was fully discussed, the speakers generally believing that the name and office to be not only scriptural, but useful. At the close of the discussion a resolution was adopted, renewing and embodying the office of deaconess in the records of the church. The synod adjourned to meet about June 1, 1884, in the city of Baltimore. Rev. F. F. Christine, of the Reformed church in Waterloo, was in attendance, and furnished the papers from which we compile this abstract.

SONGS OF THE SCIENCES—MEDICINE.

Oh, would you study medicine, get learning anatomical,
First fill your mind with all the lore of muscles and of veins;
The names that they can boast of sound, you'll say, extremely comical,
But you must learn them ere you try to ease our aches and pains.
We grin derisively you see the musculus risorius,
The sterno-cleido-mastoid serves to turn the head away;
We'd land upon Reil's island, nor will think the work laborious,
To cross the Pons Varolii many times a day.

In course of time you'll learn, no doubt, the laws of physiology,
With all that Foster, Carpenter and Huxley well must know;
We'll hope you'll pay attention to professors of pathology,
And gaze on all the wonders that the microscope can show.
You'll find how blood goes through the lungs, and how they're oxidizing it;
How certain foods can do us good, while others do us harm;
The body's like a steam engine, 'tis really not surprising it
Should take a regular amount of fuel to keep warm.

With chemistry, and pharmacy, and surgery, and botany,
And jurisprudence medical, I fancy you will find
Enough to fill a busy brain—that is, if you have got any;
You cannot cure the body till you've amply stored the mind.
You'll come when we are ill, like some benevolent inquisitor;
Or gallant feats of surgery shall startle all the town;
While plunging into lunacy you may become a visitor
Appointed by the Chancellor, like Dr. Crichton-Browne.

Here, surely, is a grand career—to cure our poor humanity
Of all the ills to which our flesh is heir—a noble strife
To wage against each fell disease, disorder and insanity—
To wrest the victory from death, and give the patient life.
And when you've studied all you can, in order categorical,
When you have worked at every branch of science under sun,
You'll find—the illustration's not my own, but is historical—
You pick up pebbles on the shore—you've only just begun!

LODGINGS TO LET.

An Episode of the French Exhibition.

During the Exposition, Paris was visited by mania for lodge-letting. From the middle of April, hanging up at the doors of the houses, in the fashionable and central neighborhoods of the French capital might be seen bills with "Joli appartement meuble a louer presentement"—"Handsome furnished apartments to let;" and many a family, many a widow, many a bachelor or widower emigrated to some distant outskirt, giving up their apartments to strangers or foreigners, in consideration of receiving some thousand francs, while they themselves nestled down, during the great influx, in some humble locality, within or without the walls. In letting, there was no distinction of nation made; the terms were the same for one and all—for the native compatriot, as well as the Milord Anglais—for the German Baron, as well as the Russian Boyard, the Polish Count, the dollar-laden American—for everybody, in short, who could pay; that was the one condition.

Madame de Y——, a young and handsome widow of 25, who, on the first of April in that memorable year, had thrown off her weeds, resigned herself, among the rest, to the reigning epidemic. One morning she sent for the lodge-keeper of the house in which she resided in the Chaussee d'Antin, and ordered him to nail up at the portecochere the universal bill.

"Bless my soul! what running up and down I shall have of it!" exclaimed, in sotto voce, with a piteous shrug, the seemingly-disconsolate porter, but who inwardly rejoiced at the circumstance; for he, also, hoped to reap a golden harvest from the new-comers.

"N'importe, Andre," continued the charming young widow—"N'importe; let my apartment for 8,000 francs, and you shall have your commission of—let me see—5 per cent., if to a bachelor or widower; 4 per cent., if to a married couple without any infantile encumbrances; and 3 per cent., if to a family—and there are 5 francs to drink my health."

"Alas! alas!" groaned the portecochere Cerberus, as he pocketed the silver piece and promised, in a tone of melancholy devotedness, to do his best. That evening the widow, accompanied by her femme de chambre, took up her quarters in a small cottage near the village of Fontenay-aux Roses, outside the Barriere d'Enfer, and contiguous to the pretty Bois de Meudon, where she rusticated in the full enjoyment of her independent widowhood till the expiration of the term.

On the 2d of August following, Madame de Y—— returned to Paris, and drove to her residence, believing that her apartment, which had been let by the concierge, was vacated and ready for her.

"Madame," said Andre, "the gentleman has not yet gone."

"What gentleman, Andre?"

"The lodger, madame, Monsieur de B——, a provincial gentleman, very comme il faut. Yet it is not my fault, for I informed him, three days ago, that his time was up, and that he must go; but he said to me that it was all right; it was his affair, and he would square all matters with madame."

"Go and inform him, Andre, that I have returned, and want my apartments immediately."

"Useless, madame—completely useless. He was headstrong as a donkey; he wouldn't listen to me; it is with you alone he wishes to confer."

"Be it so, Andre. Go before and announce me."

Madame de Y—— was received most graciously and politely by the provincial tenant, who thus addressed her:

"You cannot conceive, madame, how comfortable I find myself in this your pretty apartment, and how much I desire to spend in it the remaining time I have to stay in your charming capital; I fondly hope you will have the goodness to allow me so to do. Whatever be your terms, I accept them beforehand."

To this the widow replied, somewhat surprised, that she had no terms to propose; that she wanted her apartment, and must have it. But greater still was her surprise when she heard the provincial declare his determination to keep it, even if it was necessary to stand a regular siege. Madame de Y—— endeavored, as gently as possible, to make him understand the impropriety of his conduct; but all to no avail, for the tenant pleaded his cause with grace, eloquence and wit. The debate became warmer and warmer, the gentleman losing, and the lady gaining no ground, while Andre slipped away to his lodge, informing his better-half that the storm was gathering above. At last, after much speechifying on both sides, the gentleman, breaking a pause of apparently deep reflection, spoke again:

"Well, madame," said he, "there remains but one way to arrange our little dispute, so as to enable you to resume possession of your delightful residence, without ousting me from it."

"What is your meaning, sir?" demanded the bewildered young widow, looking still more charming in her amazement.

"My meaning is this, madame; my name is Arthur—Baron Arthur de B—. I belong to an old and honorable family—am a bachelor, and 32 years of age. My estates are worth 50,000 francs a year—but this I mention out of respect to the laws of business; and despite the originality and queerness of my conduct, which may perhaps have offended you, I am considered a very good-natured person; and, upon the whole, I flatter myself I am a man fully capable of making a lady happy. Will you, therefore, do me the honor of accepting my heart, my hand, and my fortune?"

To this sudden proposal Madame de Y— replied with dignity: "Your jest is not in very good taste, sir, and all I can do is to laugh at it."

"Serious, most serious, madame, I am indeed—and, on the faith of a gentleman, I beg you to believe it."

"What, sir! you propose marriage merely that you may not have to give up my apartments!"

"A little upon that account, madame, but still more because of a more overpowering reason; for among the many considerations I have had the honor of laying before you, there is one I dare not mention, but allow me now to confess it—I love you."

At this avowal, Madame de Y— blushed to the eyes. What lady, young or old, would not have done so, particularly when the avowal came from a young, handsome and wealthy man? However, she took it in good part, and laughed outright at her interlocutor?

"You are laughing, madame, and however—"

"Your folly provokes my laughter, Monsieur le Baron. I really cannot help it."

"Nevertheless, madame, I can assure you I am fully master of my reason, or at least as much of it as remains, subdued as it is by intense passion."

"What, sir! intense passion at first sight!"

"You forget, madame, that I have been living three long months in your apartments, and that your portrait, which I now see is an adorable likeness, is hanging up there in the next room. It was the first object that caught my attention on entering, and I have looked at and admired it every day since. Nor was I captivated by the charms of your beauty alone, for I am well acquainted with your merit in every way, your many superior qualities and your irreproachable character. A man, however so little he may be versed in womanly affairs, cannot spend three months in a lady's apartment without noticing and studying many things disclosing her habits, her tastes, her feelings. I have been an acute, and, perhaps, an indiscreet, observer, madame; and what I have discovered has captivated my heart forever. That heart I offer you again, and humbly wait your answer to know my fate."

There was no bombast, no fanfaronade in the Baron's language, it was the resolve of a man who had made up his mind, and was determined to succeed. But the more he urged his suit, the less he advanced in it; till at last the widow signified to him, in due form and unmistakable phraseology, that he must instantly shift his quarters—thus giving him his leave, and intimating to him at the same time that he must never think of setting foot in her residence again.

"Very well, madame—I withdraw, and will not return till you invite me to do so;" the answer to which parting words was a saucy smile, and a toss of the head which evidently meant, "You have long to wait, Monsieur le Baron, before receiving such an invitation."

However, at the end of a few days, the invitation was sent, and the Baron arrived just as the widow had completed making herself more charming than ever.

"What have I been apprised of, sir?" said Madame de Y—— to him, as he seated himself in an arm-chair a la Voltaire right opposite to her. "During my absence, you brought my long-pending lawsuit to an amicable arrangement."

"Why, yes, madame; but you must be neither pleased nor displeased with me on that account, as I acted only in my own interest."

"How so, if you please, Baron?"

"The fact is, the lawyers' clerks were calling here with their papers every day; and, owing to a heavy and protracted suit I once had myself, I have an utter aversion to every 'limb of the law,' as our allies, Messieurs les Anglais, have it. Being acquainted with your plaintiff, who is a debtor of mine, I made use of my influence over him, and soon got him to forego his unfounded claim, and he made over to me what he called his rights. It is therefore an affair between him and me. But rest assured, madame, that your delicacy and susceptibility shall never have to complain of my proceedings. Your lawsuit is forever quashed, and that is all!" Whereon the Baron looked the widow steadfastly but respectfully in the face, and gave no further explanation.

Madame de Y—— was somewhat confused; but, in spite of herself, she was continually forced to think of her ex-tenant. In every room of her apartment he had left some souvenir of his sojourn—poetry, pencilling, songs, music composed by himself, thoughts and maxims, etc., written in her albums and scrap-book. All these gallant attentions seemed most charming to her, while they piqued her curiosity; and when that important part of the female constitution is awakened other sentiments soon come forth and blossom.

Now it happened that, the day after the Baron's invited visit, a poor woman, the mother of a family to whom Madame de Y—— was in the habit of giving stated pecuniary relief, called to thank her for her last munificent donation, which, she said, would keep her and hers forever.

"You were absent, my too generous benefactress, but I had the honor of meeting here with your husband."

"My husband?" ejaculated the widow.

"Ah, madame, what an excellent, what a kind-hearted gentleman! Ah, how well you are mated, for you suit each other admirably. Yes, madame, I told him everything and how kind, how Providence-like you were to me. He seems to love you very much, and how could that be otherwise? 'Good woman,' says your husband to me, madame, 'your benefactress is absent for the time being; but, before she went, she left this with me for you, and thereon he put in my hands a pocket-book containing bank notes—a fortune, madame. I was loth to accept it at first, but he would have me take it, although God knows you have already done much for me and my poor fatherless children. Ah, dear madame, how happy you must be with such a husband! But it is only the just reward of your excellent heart and Christian virtues. May Heaven bless and preserve you both for years and years to come."

"Strange, strange, passing strange!" thought the widow. "Settle my tedious lawsuit—provide for my poor widow and her children—leave some trace of himself everywhere around me! But men are such queer characters, such originals nowadays." She resolved, however, not to speak to the Baron of his generous conduct toward her protegee, fearful lest she might betray her sensibilite at so noble an action. But another circumstance soon came to light, and caused the Baron to be invited, suddenly and nervously, to call a second time. This circumstance was as follows: A young coxcomb, Leopold de R——, imagining he had fallen in love with Madame de Y——, because, living in the house opposite to hers, he had chanced now and then to see her at the balcony before missing her all on a sudden at her departure from her apartment. After many days' anxiety he determined upon writing her a billet doux, informing her of his love, and stating that he would call that evening for an answer. Having written his note, he wrapped it up in a small paper parcel and jerked it over the balcony into the window. It happened that the Baron had just finished the second breakfast he had taken in the house, and was poring over the newspaper when the parcel dropped into the room. He took it up, and, finding no superscription, he opened it and read the following:

> Charming neighbor, for weeks and weeks have I admired you from my window-seat opposite. O how superlatively happy should I be were you to do me the honor of admitting me to your presence, and allowing me to declare myself and crave pardon for my presumption. At 8 this evening, I will call, ask for admission and learn my fate. Till then, minutes will glide away like years from my impatient heart. Farewell till then, goddess of my adoration. LEOPOLD.

He came, and the door was opened to him by the Baron in propria persona.

"Is Madame de Y—— at home?"

"She is not at home for you."

"And pray, by what right do you refuse me admission?"

"Methinks that right is very evident."

"And you are here in her apartment?"

"True; but for the time being it is my own."

The dialogue went rapidly on from cross words to a challenge; and on the morrow a duel took place in one of the coppice-woods of the Bois de Boulogne.

This time, Madame de Y—— had every reason, she thought, for blaming the Baron's conduct; so another invitation was sent to him, which he duly attended to.

"How is this, Monsieur le Baron?" said the widow in tremulous and reproachful accents—"expose your life with such a puppy—a life so useful, so precious! O, truly, I cannot but think you more foolish than wise."

"I confess, madame, that I was wrong; but I merely wanted to put the young puppy, as you justly call him, in his right place, and save you forever from his importunities. He scratched me, but I gave him a gentle sword-thrust which will prevent him from annoying you for some time to come. Was that not a service worth having, my charming landlady?"

"Yes; but at such a price—the risk of your life and my reputation! Gracious! Baron, what will my friends think of me after such an affair? You have compromised me terribly by your generous, your noble, your magnanimous conduct."

"'Tis true, very true, dear lady, and I now begin to see I acted too rashly upon the impulse of the moment; and that, in fact, I owe you a reparation."

Madame de Y—— thought so likewise. "Well, my dear Baron," said she, proffering her hand, "since it was to be, it must be, so let it be—we are friends."

"And betrothed ones, my charmer," cried the enamored Baron, fondly pressing to his lips the widow's ripe, red lips. "And the marriage-day? When?"

"Oh, dear me! Mon Dieu, what a man! In a month hence." And the compact was sealed.

A Horrible Ride.

A freight train broke away from the control of the brakes while rushing down at a mad rate a heavy grade on a New Mexican mountain railroad. At the rate of sixty miles an hour the engineer jumped off and was landed seventy feet away. The conductor in the caboose at the rear, with Pawnee Charlie and his squaw, cut the way-car loose and held it with his brakes. But the brakesmen in the other cars had to lie flat on top, and, for six miles, hang on for dear life. While the engine was plunging down the flight at a giddy speed, the fireman crawled out on the foot-board and poked sand through the sand-box, thinking that it might give the wheels a grip upon the rails. As the train sped around a curve the velocity was so great that the locomotive ran on one rail, and came within an ace of losing its equilibrium. But it escaped all perils and on a long three-mile level it was at last brought to a stand-still. It made Pawnee Charley act like shake-knee Charley.

A BANK in Lyons uses paper colored with ultramarine green. The bills of exchange are lithographed and the figures are written with an acidulated ink, so as to appear white upon a green ground. This seems to furnish a perfect security against alterations.

WHAT IS NICKEL?

The Material Out of Which Our Five-Cent Coin Is Made.

Since the convenient five-cent coin, which is common talk is called "a nickel," has come into general circulation, the question above is asked, either mentally or orally, hundreds of times every day, and but few get an intelligent answer. In China and India a white copper, called pack tong, has long been known, and has been extensively used, both there and in Europe, for counterfeiting silver coin. About the year 1700 a peculiar ore was discovered in the copper mines of Saxony, which had the appearance of being very rich, but in smelting it yielded no copper, and the miners called it kupfer-nickel, or false copper. In 1754 Constadt announced the discovery of a new metal in kupfernickel, to which he gave the name of nickel. It was in combination with arsenic, from which he could relieve it only in parts. The alloy of nickel and arsenic which he obtained was white, brittle and very hard, and had a melting point nearly as high as cast-iron. It was not until 1823 that pure nickel was obtained by analysis of German silver, which had for a number of years been produced at Suhl, in Saxony. Its composition was ascertained to be copper 10 parts, zinc 5 and nickel 4. If more nickel be used the alloy is as white as silver and susceptible of a very high polish, but becomes too brittle and hard to be hammered or rolled, and can be worked only by casting. Pure nickel is a white metal which tarnishes readily in the air. Unlike silver, it is not acted on by the vapor of sulphur, and even the strong mineral acids attract it but slightly. Nickel has the hardness of iron, and, like it, has strong magnetic properties, but cannot be welded and is soldered with difficulty. Pure nickel has heretofore been used chiefly for plating, for which purpose its hardness and power to resist atmospheric influences admirably adapt it. The French have succeeded in rolling the metal into plates, from which spoons and other table furniture may be pressed. Nickel bronze, which consists of equal parts of copper and nickel, with a little tin, may be cast into very delicate forms, and is susceptible of a high polish. Mines of nickel are worked at Chatham, Ct., and Lancaster, Pa., and it is said to be found at Mine La Motte, Mo., and at several points in Colorado and New Mexico, where but little attention is paid to it. It is extensively mined in Saxony and in Sweden, but the late discovery of a new ore (a silicate of nickel) in New Caledonia will probably suspend the use of the arsenical ores, and yet bring nickel into common use. Switzerland, in the year 1852, made a coin of German silver, which is identical in composition with our nickel coin. The United States made nickel cents in 1856, and eight years later coined the 5-cent pieces. Belgium adopted nickel coinage in 1860 and Germany in 1873. England has lately coined pennies for Jamaica, but at home she and France adhere to the clumsy copper small change.

A Broker's Mistake.

The following story is told of Francis Drexel, the father of the well-known Philadelphia bankers. Soon after the close of the war with Mexico many Spanish and Mexican silver dollars found their way into the United States, and were bought up by bankers and money dealers all over the country. The price paid for them varied greatly, according to the demand and supply and the condition of the pieces themselves. At the close of a rainy day, during which Dr. Drexel—then doing a very modest business on Third street, Philadelphia, as a money and exchange broker—had been a large buyer of Mexican silver, and while he was engaged in recounting his purchases preparatory to settling his cash account, the door of his banking house was suddenly opened by a plainly-dressed man, who exclaimed: "I only have 100 left; do you want them?"

Mr. Drexel, without raising his head, replied: "I'll give you 50 cents for them?"

"No," said the man, "I've sold all the others at 75 cents, and only have 100 left."

Mr. Drexel replied: "I have bought them all day at 60 cents, and if yours have no holes in them I will take them at the same price, and that is the most you can get for them."

"I never saw any with holes in them," said the man.

"Didn't you?" said Mr. Drexel. "Half of what we get are full of holes, where they have been used as buttons."

The man scratched his head a moment, and then said: "Very well; I'll bring them in right away."

Five minutes afterward he appeared with a small tin kettle, and, walking up to the counter, said: "Where shall I put them?"

"Pour them out here," said Mr. Drexel, indicating a particular spot on the counter.

"I can't," said the seller, "they will all slip off on the floor."

Mr. Drexel, without withdrawing his attention from the counting of his purchases of the day, called to his son Frank to "bring a tray." When the tray was brought it was found to have a large crack across it, to which the man strenuously objected, saying: "They will all fall through." This nettled old Mr. Drexel, who, in rather sharp words, told him: "That tray has held thousands and thousands of them every day," and furthermore, in peremptory terms, bade him "pour them out quick."

Accordingly, the kettle was raised to the level of the counter, and 100 fat, raw oysters were poured into the cracked tray, much to the chagrin and disgust of the banker and his son, the former of whom exclaimed: "Why, these are oysters!"

"Well," said the oysterman (who knew nothing of Mexican silver), "what the d— did you think they were?"

They Let Him Hunt.

In making change on the Woodward avenue car yesterday a passenger dropped a penny on the floor, and it went under the gratings. Before he made a move to find it, he stood up in the middle of the car and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I know just how you feel about this matter. I've been there myself. I know that any one of you had rather put your hand in your pockets and give me 2 cents than to see me get down on my knees and hunt around for that cent. But let me explain. I do not care for the money, having over 15 cents left in my pocket, but that penny is an heirloom in the family—a sacred relic to remember the dead and gone—and I appeal to your sentiment to induce you to draw your feet under the seats while I make a general hunt."

The passengers good-naturedly complied, and, after being carried four blocks past his corner, the man recovered his sacred relic and jumped off the car.—Detroit Free Press.

Telegraphic Reminiscences.

"I think," said General Stager, "that I was about the first to read messages by sound. Certainly I had so read them before I knew of any one else doing it. Erasius Brooks, just about that time, came to Pittsburg and bought out the Gazette. It was a very responsible duty to collect the telegraphic dispatches, and the chief editor used to come himself to my office for that purpose. The markets were sent in cipher. One day my register broke down while Brooks was waiting for the report. A steamer had just landed in New York, and the news was important. But the register was in such a state that patching wouldn't do. Mr. Brooks was in despair. Now the office call of a telegraph station is easily learned. You have 'DE,' for instance, for Detroit; 'BU' for Buffalo, and 'H' for Cleveland—the 'C's' being taken up somewhere else on the line. The constant reiteration of DE, DE, or BU, BU, or whatever the office call is, makes it familiar, and as easily recognized as the sound of a man's name. The very boys learn in short order. Of course, in those days, just as now, our office calls were recognizable to the ear. It was with this in mind that I said to Brooks, 'Wait a little and I'll try another plan.' I explained matters to the operator at the other end, and asked him to go slow, and between my knowledge of the cipher and the good-natured repetitions of each link of it by my down-East friend, I managed to get the whole of the report. It came slow, but came in time. Brooks left a delighted man."

"Now, General, that's a historical fact worth noting."

"I make no claims," continued General Stager, "but I'll tell you my own experience. It was always a question among us whether Mr. Barnes or Governor Cornell was the first to read and send by sound. Some say it was Barnes, some Cornell."

"The present Governor of New York?"

"The very same. Governor Cornell was an old-time telegraph operator."

"Did the new improvement take?"

"On the contrary," said the General, "the officers fought against it. Every commercial message, they said, must be read from the tapes. They insisted that they wanted something for a record. We used to bundle up the tapes and keep them for reference, to compare for errors and find out whether the receiver or sender was to blame. It was a long time before the officers discovered that such errors would be detected just as well by taking a letter-press copy of the message. But reading by sound is now the only thing. It has immensely increased the efficiency and capacity of the telegraph.—An Interview in the Detroit Free Press.

Irish Bulls.

There are some good old Irish bulls which are too good to die of neglect. Of this order was the exclamation of the Irish gentleman, who, on getting a £10 prize in the lottery, and, finding that the prize was less than the money which he had paid for it, cried out:

"What luck it was I did not get the £20,000! I must have been entirely ruined!"

During the time when Ireland had a Parliament of her own, a member of the Irish House of Commons was describing the inordinate love of praise which characterized his opponent.

"The honorable member," said he, "is so fond of being praised that I really believe that he would be content to give up the ghost if it were but to look up and read the stonecutter's puff on his grave."

"Contempt of money," was the expression of another. "The honorable member professes to play the philosopher. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that, if there is any one office that glitters in the eyes of the honorable member, it is that of purse-bearer; a pension to him is a compendium of all the cardinal virtues. All his statesmanship is comprehended in the art of taxing; and for good, better and best, in the scale of human nature, he invariably reads pence, shillings and pounds. I verily believe," exclaimed the orator, rising to the height of his conception, "that, if the honorable gentleman were an undertaker, it would be the delight of his heart to see all mankind seized with a common mortality, that he might have the benefit of the general burial, and provide scarfs and hatbands for the survivors."

"Is there any ford there?" asked an English tourist, who came suddenly to a full stop before one of the little mountain torrents in the West of Ireland. "Oh, to be sure, your honor, there was a ford," said a peasant standing at the brink, and making a hundred grimaces of civility. "When was it?" said the tourist. "Before the bridge was built," said the peasant; "but when man and horse went over the bridge the ford got out of the habit." "Well, now that the bridge is broken down, I suppose the ford may have got into the habit again. Is it safe?" "To be sure, your honor, all but in the middle, but that is nothing; and, if you can swim, there is not a better ford in the country." "But I cannot swim." "Then, you honor, the only safe way that I know of is, as soon as you get beyond your depth, to walk back again."

How to Save Lamp Chimneys.

A Leipsic journal, which makes a specialty of matters relating to glass, gives a method which it asserts will prevent chimneys from cracking. The treatment will not only render lamp chimneys, tumblers, and like articles more durable, but may be applied with advantage to crockery, stoneware, porcelain, etc. The chimneys, tumblers, etc., are put into a pot filled with cold water, to which some common table salt has been added. The water is well boiled over a fire, and then allowed to cool slowly. When the articles are taken out and washed, they will be found to resist afterward any sudden changes of temperature. The process is simply one of annealing, and the slower the cooling part of it is conducted the more effective will be the work.

HOLMAN'S PAD
CURES Without Dosing
Simply by Absorption
TRADE MARK.

Is a sovereign remedy for all forms of Liver and Stomach troubles, and is the ONLY SAFE and ABSOLUTE cure for Malaria in its various types.

Dr. Holman's Pad is a genuine and radical remedy, WITHOUT TAKING MEDICINE.

It was the FIRST article of the kind that was introduced to the public generally. It was the ORIGINAL PAD, and was devised by DR. HOLMAN alone.

He struck out from the beaten path and made a NEW WAY. No sooner had he rendered the undertaking a CERTAINTY than the IMITATORS and PIRATES who hang to and infest ever successful enterprise, started up and have since followed in his footsteps as closely as the law will tolerate.

Against these DR. HOLMAN gives SPECIAL WARNING. Not only do they FAIL TO CURE, but in disappointing the purchaser they bring doubt and odium on the principal of Absorption, of which Dr. Holman's Pad is the GENUINE and ONLY TRUE EXPONENT.

Every Imitation is an emphatic endorsement of the substantial worth of the genuine article. A poor one is never copied.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD CO., with the above Trade-Mark printed in green. Buy None Without It.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At the time I began the use of your Iron Tonic, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,
J. P. WATSON.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

Certain sounds from a musical instrument will affect the flame from a gas-jet, causing it to dance about.

It is claimed that more rain falls now in Nebraska than formerly, and that this rainfall is increasing with the march of settlement and consequent cultivation.

A machine for making laces hitherto produced only by hand-work is reported in France. Even old styles of laces, the art of making which has been lost, can readily be produced. The machine employs from 1,800 to 2,000 spindles, and from 200 to 800 pins. The Moniteur des Fils et Tissus speaks in high terms of the machine and its products, which is said to be fully equal to the best hand-made laces.

At various points in the heavens there are clusters of stars, some of these containing as many as 2,000 distinct orbs. Astronomers have established the fact that the smallest of these stars has a diameter of 180,000,000 of miles—orbs compared with which our earth is as an orange to the dome of St. Paul's; and yet there are thousands of such suns, in one of these faintly luminous clusters, scarcely visible to the eye!

The effect of the vibrations of sound is very peculiar. Here is an example: A plate of glass or metal may be held between the finger and thumb at one corner, having been previously strewn over with fine sand, then a fiddle-bow be drawn near one of its angles, the sand becomes agitated, and finally resolves itself into the form of a Latin cross. If the bow be drawn near the middle of one of the sides, a St. Andrew's cross will be formed.

In Colorado is a ten-acre field which is no more nor less than a subterranean lake covered with soil about eighteen inches deep. On the soil is cultivated a field of corn which produces thirty or forty bushels to the acre. If one will take the trouble to dig a hole the depth of a spade handle he will find it to fill with water, and by using a hook and line fish four or five inches long can be caught. The fish have neither scales nor eyes and are perch-like shape.

Meteorologists have found that United States storms usually advance from the Upper Mississippi Valley toward New York and New England, less frequently toward Virginia and seldom toward the Carolinas. American storm centres most frequently pass off the coast between 45 and 50 degrees north latitude. The great waves of high barometer, with fierce northwest winds in their front, usually advance from the Rock Mountains toward Virginia and the Carolinas, but less frequently toward New England.

By keeping the soil beneath charged with moisture, forest regions tend to make gradual and constant the supply of waters to the rivers and give uniformity to the flow; and hence, when forests are cut away, the rains reach speedily the streams, making them liable to alternate periods of wasteful violence and worthless feebleness. The cutting away of the forest has led, in the French Alps, to uncontrollable floods, despoiled fields and an impoverished people; and, in America, to annual seasons of dry mill-ponds, an immense sacrifice of available water power and the desertion of many a mill site.

While our knowledge of the regions surrounding the North Pole has been greatly extended by the energy and enterprise of modern explorers, comparatively little has been done in the exploration of corresponding portions of the southern hemisphere. At the head of an American expedition Lieut. Wilkes believed that he had established the existence of an Antarctic continent; and this discovery was verified a year later by Sir James Ross, who found the extensive Victoria Land, with mountains 14,000 feet high and an active volcano.

Edwin Booth's First Appearance on the Stage.

Edwin Booth's first appearance on the regular stage was made Sept. 10, 1849, at the Boston Museum, in the little part of Tressil, in Cibber's version of "Richard III." Junius Brutus Booth, his father—the rival of Edmund Kean, and one of the greatest tragedians that ever lived—was then keeping an engagement at the Museum, and Edwin was in attendance on him as dresser. Tressil had been cast to the prompter of the theater; but it chanced that this person wished to avoid the duty of acting it, and that he succeeded in persuading Edwin to undertake it. This arrangement was made without the elder Booth's knowledge, and he only became aware of it by reading in the play-bill the announcement of his son's first appearance, duly underlined. "Fool!" was all he said when he read this announcement; and this remark was not understood to signify encouragement. When the night came, and Edwin had dressed his father for Gloster, and himself for Tressil, the eccentric parent—who, beneath an outward aspect of indifference, loved this son with the fondest affection—took a chair, lit a cigar, and, viewing the youth with a critical eye, made this inquiry, "Do you know that you are supposed to have been riding hard and far?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where are your spurs?"

"I haven't any."

"Take mine"—holding out one booted leg.

The boy took the spurs, and went on for his little scene with King Henry VI. When he returned, his father was still sitting negligently in the chair, and smoking the cigar. "Give me my spurs," he said, again holding out his leg; and this was all the comment that Edwin Booth's first professional appearance ever elicited from the parent whom he idolized. He learned subsequently, though, that his father had been down at the wing, and had watched the first effort with evident interest and satisfaction, and then hastened back to his nonchalant pose in the dressing-room. There never, surely, could have been a more singular being than Junius Brutus Booth. This little trait of character is but one of thousands that marked him as a unique person.—Harper's Magazine.

The Nuisance of Fences.

An exchange remarks that the New York law forbidding the pasturing of cattle in the streets and roads has abated "many nuisances in the shape of unsightly fences. The most costly and artistic fence deforms a fine landscape. Fences must sometimes be tolerated as necessities but should never be regarded as ornaments. The necessity for them is far less than has been supposed. The modern discovery that fences are to keep cattle in, not to keep them out, is a valuable one. If you have a sow and pigs, fence off a lot big enough to keep them in, but don't oblige your neighbor to support two miles of road fence to keep them out. Unsightly fences are disappearing in many districts, and it is probable that, where little stock is kept, it will soon be cheaper to cut their feed and carry it to them than to fence pastures. If the pens that we see in our country villages were taken away, with proper care, all would live in a beautiful park; this would foreshadow and aid the removal of social and sectarian barriers, a consummation devoutly to be wished. The change of public opinion in regard to fencing has been a pleasure and a surprise. In many places we can hardly see a fence, and rods of old fencing may be had for the asking."

Idle Men in the House of Commons.

Everybody who has ever read it remembers Carlyle's famous description of the work-house of St. Ives, in Huntingdonshire, and what the picturesque tourist saw: "I saw sitting on wooden benches, in front of their bastile, and within their ringwall and its railings some half hundred or more of these men. Tall, robust figures, young mostly, or middle age; of honest countenance, many of them thoughtful and even intelligent looking men. They sat there, near by one another, but in a kind of torpor, and especially in a silence which was very striking. In silence; for alas! what word was to be said? An earth all lying round crying: 'Come and till me, come and reap me;' yet we here set enchanted! In the eyes and brows of these men hung the gloomiest expression, not of anger, but of grief and shame and manifold inarticulate distress and weariness; they returned my glance with a glance that seemed to say, 'Do not look at us; we sit enchanted here we know not why.' The sun shines and the earth calls, and, by the governing powers and impotences of this England, we are forbidden to obey. It is impossible, they tell us! There was something that reminded me of Dante's hell in the look of all this; and I rode swiftly away."

An exactly similar scene may be witnessed any night by a tourist, picturesque or otherwise, who finds his way to the House of Commons. There they are, moody and listless on their benches, flitting aimlessly hither and thither from corridor to corridor, sauntering through the tea room, idling in the smoking room, all at their wits' ends how to get through the dreary hours, and hoping against hope that the morrow may break the horrid spell. And so "many of them thoughtful and intelligent looking men."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the South.

A recent attempt to render the play, Uncle Tom's Cabin at Atlanta, Georgia, is reported as follows: "While the Jubilee Singers were gathered upon the stage in the first act of Uncle Tom's Cabin, they were saluted with a shower of unhealthy hen fruit, by bummers in the gallery. Despite the frantic efforts at dodging the actor who personated "Uncle Tom" was smitten full in the face. The lion in his nature at once sprang to the surface and advancing to the front of the stage he fiercely dared the man who threw that egg to a fair fight right there. The gallery rat did not squeal. Quite a number of the dark performers were stricken, and the "Eliza" of the evening was so astonished and dismantled by a plump blow in the neck that she left the stage with all possible speed. The police bagged the egg-throwers, the curtain dropped, the play ended and the disgusted but amused audience dispersed. The proceeding is strongly condemned by the community."

The play, however, was differently received at Rome, Georgia. The account says: "The reception the company playing Uncle Tom's Cabin received here at Rome convinced us that the people of the South have passed beyond repining for the dead past. The large audience of intelligent whites that sat through the performance, greeting the actors with applause when they deserved it, and their stillness while "Uncle Tom" received a thrashing, contrasted strongly with the jollity of the full gallery of colored people and their guffaws while the whip was laid to "Uncle Tom's" back."

Grizzly Dan.

"Grizzly Dan," the hero of Montana, led a wonderful life. He was once set upon by a whole tribe of Indians and obliged to run for his life. He headed for a cliff 700 feet high, dodging the bullets fired at him as he ran, being able through long practice to tell the course of a ball by the sound as it approached from the rear. Grizzly Dan unhesitatingly leaped over the cliff, to the amazement of the Indians. As he was falling Dan turned, raised his Winchester rifle to his shoulder and pulled the trigger. An Indian toppled over with a ball through his left eye, and while he kept falling Dan kept pulling the trigger until seventeen redskins had balls through their left eyes and were falling over the cliff after him. The eighteenth shot only carried away an Indian's nose as the air was so full of falling Indians between him and the top of the cliff that his aim was a little confused. He struck feet foremost in the stream below, and swam to the opposite shore before the last Indian's dead body struck the water.

Dangerous Liquids.

Ammonia, especially the stronger kind, is dangerous, a few drops being enough to injure a person. When used for cleaning purposes it should be handled with great care, that the gas, which is given off freely in a warm room, be not breathed in large quantities and do injury to the delicate lining of the nose and mouth. Benzine is a liquid in the handling of which much caution should be exercised. It is very volatile, and its vapor, as well as the liquid itself, is inflamable. When employed for removing grease or other stains from clothing, gloves, etc., it should never be used at night, nor any other time, near a fire. Ether is another dangerous liquid, and in other than the physician's hands it had best not be employed in the household. Alcohol must also be used with great care, especially at night.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

English physicians report the obtaining of purgative effects from the external application of castor oil over the abdomen.

If the skin of the head becomes very tender during confinement to the bed make a narrow pillow, cylinder shaped, and unite the ends. The head can rest on such a pillow and the ear not come in contact with the surface. The ears suffer most when the skin of the head is tender.

Sprains are always promptly relieved by allowing the coldest water to fall upon the part steadily, until no discomfort is experienced. Repeat as often as necessary; keep the sprained joint elevated if about the hands, and horizontal if about the feet, so as to promote the flow of blood from the parts by gravity; and live for a few days on fruits and coarse bread mainly.

Dr. Guillasse, of the French navy, reports that in the early stage of the disease coffee is almost a specific against typhoid fever. He gives to adults two or three tablespoonfuls of strong black coffee every two hours, alternating with one or two tea-spoonfuls of claret or Burgundy wine. The beneficial effect is immediate. A little lemonade or citrate of magnesia should be given daily, and after a while a little quinine.

A superior remedy for a sore throat is, on retiring to rest, to rub on the outside a little volatile liniment, and swallow slowly a few drops of paregoric, letting it dissolve in the saliva and spread along down the inflamed parts. The liniment is generally sufficient alone. Volatile liniment is simply a mixture of sweet oil and aqua ammonia (called liquid hartshorn). These are put into a vial and shaken, using such proportion as to form a semi-liquid soap. An ounce or two can be got cheaply at the druggist's; and, if tightly corked, it will keep for months. Rub it on with the fingers. This is also good for soreness of the chest or joints, or for lameness, stiff neck, etc.

Nasal Catarrh.—Snuff up each nostril about as much iodoform as would lie on a 3-penny piece. I did this about 6 o'clock in the evening, and about 11 o'clock I was immediately relieved, so that the coryza was markedly diminished. In that short time my cold had been transported from the cold stage to the stage of resolution. Next morning I was almost well. I resolved to try this drug on various friends and patients, and have done so with great success. The coryza and accompanying pain and discomfort disappeared in a few hours or in the course of a night. In cases of mild catarrh I found it made the symptoms a great deal worse. I generally find one application enough, and give a smaller quantity than I used myself.—British Medical Journal.

On the subject of preparing drinks for fever patients, an exchange says: "Drinks made from fresh or preserved fruits are sometimes useful in fevers. Rhubarb tea is a very refreshing spring beverage. Slice about two pounds of rhubarb, and boil for a quarter of an hour in a quart of water; strain the liquor into a jug, adding a small quantity of lemon peel and some sugar to taste; when cold it is fit for use. Apple water may be made in the same manner. The apples should be peeled and cored. Sugar should not be added to either of the above until after the liquor is removed from the fire. In the absence of fresh fruit, a pleasant beverage may be prepared by stirring sufficient raspberry jam or currant jelly into the required quantity of water, straining the liquor before giving it to the patient."

Excess of Fat.

Dr. George Johnson's diet for excess of fat: The patient may eat: Lean mutton and beef; veal; lamb; tongue; sweetbread; soups, not thickened; beef tea and broths; poultry; game; fish; cheese; eggs; bread, in moderation; greens; spinach; watercress; mustard and cress; lettuce; asparagus; celery; radishes; French beans; green peas; Brussels sprouts; cauliflower; onions; broccoli; sea-kale; jellies, flavored but not sweetened; fresh fruit in moderation, without sugar or cream; pickles.

May not eat: Fat bacon and ham; fat of meat; butter; cream; sugar; potatoes; carrots; parsnips; beet root; rice; arrowroot; sago; tapioca; macaroni; vermicelli; semolina; custard; pastry and pudding of all kinds; sweet cakes.

May drink: Tea; coffee; cocoa from nibs, with milk, but without cream or sugar; dry wines of any kind, in moderation; brandy, whisky, or gin, in moderation, without sugar; light bitter beer; Apollinaris water; soda water; seltzer water.

May not drink: Milk, except sparingly; porter and stout; sweet ales; sweet wines. As a rule, alcoholic liquors should be taken very sparingly, and never without food.

Raw Oysters.

Dr. William Roberts, in an interesting series of lectures on digestive ferments, published in the Lancet, says: The practice of cooking is not equally necessary in regard to all articles of food. There are important differences in this respect, and it is interesting to note how correctly the experience of mankind has guided them in this matter. The articles of food which we still use in the uncooked state are comparatively few, and it is not difficult in each case to indicate the reason of the exemption. Fruits, which we consume largely in the raw state, owe their dietetic value chiefly to the sugar which they contain; but sugar is not altered by cooking. Milk is consumed by us both cooked and uncooked, indifferently, and experiment justifies this indifference; for I have found on trial that the digestion of milk by pancreatic extract was not appreciably hastened by previously boiling the milk. Our practice in regard to the oyster is quite exceptional, and furnishes a striking example of the general correctness of the popular judgment on dietetic questions. The oyster is almost the only animal substance which we eat habitually, and by preference, in the raw or uncooked state, and it is interesting to know that there is a sound physiological reason at the bottom of this preference. The fawn-colored mass which constitutes the dainty part of the oyster is its liver, and this is little else than a heap of glycogen. Associated with the glycogen, but withheld from actual contact with it during life, is its appropriative digestive ferment—the hepatic diastase. The mere crushing of the dainty between the teeth brings these two bodies together, and the glycogen is at once digested, without other help, by its own diastase. The oyster in the uncooked state, or merely warmed, is, in fact, self-digestive. But the advantage of this provision is wholly lost by cooking, for the heat employed immediately destroys the associated ferment, and a cooked oyster has to be digested, like any other food, by the eater's own digestive powers.

Eilert's Extract of Tar and Wild Cherry has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. Try this excellent remedy, and we are sure you will be convinced of its merits. Chronic Coughs, and even Consumptives, are cured by following the directions. Every bottle is warranted to give satisfaction. Prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago. Sold by all good druggists.

As a part of Dr. Holman's Absorption theory of cure the Holman Plasters are of the utmost importance. They are especially intended to act as an adjuvant of Holman's Pads in stubborn cases, where there is persistent local pain or deficient circulation; but they may be used without the Pad, if desired, in any spot or place where a powerful and really curative Plaster is useful.

A CYCLOPÆDIA WAR.

An honored publishing house, whose history is reputed to extend back into the last century, and whose wealth has been estimated at $5,000,000, is that of J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. The largest and most important publication ever issued by them [illegible] in connection with the great publishing house of Chambers, of Edinburgh, Scotland, and London, England, that of Chambers' Encyclopædia, which, many years ago, they published at the (so-called) low price of $60, afterward reducing the price to $40, and some years later, as the result of a rupture with the British house (it was sold) in consequence of Lippincott's making changes in the American edition, contrary to the spirit while still using the name of Chambers, the same Encyclopædia was brought down to the still lower price of $25. Now, in the glorious year of 1881, moved, of course, not by the spirit of rivalry, but by the generous and laudable purpose of placing useful knowledge within reach of the people, without regard to the question of profit or of loss to themselves, they are issuing an edition of this same great work, Chambers' Encyclopædia, which is said to be revised to date (edition of 18-sixty something, with census figures altered), which they are offering at the wonderfully low price of $15 for the work complete, in 10 great octavo volumes. Even at this astoundingly low price they allow the large discount of 40 per cent. when purchases are made in large quantity. The army of the Literary Revolution always rejoices at the multiplication of good books at low prices, and the AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE is delighted with the opportunity of uniting with the great publishing house of Lippincott in furthering the sale of this work; and to demonstrate the earnestness of their good-will they propose, so long as the Lippincotts choose to continue the manufacture at this nominal price, to furnish the public with the Lippincott edition at the low price of $9.10 per set (the 10 cents for cost of handling), delivered in New York city, or sent by express or freight to any part of the United States or Canada. Considering the munificent liberality of the Lippincotts' terms, it has seemed a great pity that their modesty should prevent them from advertising more widely, and we therefore supplement their generosity by scattering this advertisement broadcast for them at our expense.

The Literary Revolution

Has not the honor of a century's history, and its present cash capital is only about $175,000. It was started only so long ago as September, 1875, with $70 cash and a few old books, and two years thereafter had reached the dignity of a garret in an Ann street junk-shop, its "army" consisting of one man and a small boy, and from the character of the place, aimiss lectores (b—d-b—gs) being far more numerous than customers for books. But by January, 1878, the Revolution had accumulated sufficient strength to print one small volume, which was increased to a product in 1880 of over one million volumes. Its business offices and retail store now occupy entire a magnificent six-story building on Broadway, and its factories several other buildings elsewhere in the city, and it gives employment to about 600 hands. One item of its present large list of standard publications is an edition of Chambers' Encyclopædia, in 15 handy beautiful cloth-bound volumes, which it is selling at the low price of $6 per set (lately reduced from $7.50). This edition is a verbatim reprint of the London edition of 1880 (instead of the 18-sixty something, as in the case of the Lippincotts, with the alteration of a few census figures). Chambers' Encyclopædia, however, is a foreign work, and it could scarcely be expected that such a work, edited and published for a foreign market, would give as much prominence to American topics as American readers might desire. To supply these and other deficiencies, we are now issuing, under the title of the "Library of Universal Knowledge," a new edition in fifteen large octavo volumes, large type, in which a large force of American editors and writers have added about 15,000 topics, covering about 3,000 octavo pages, thus thoroughly Americanizing the work, and making it nearly 40 per cent. larger than the original Chambers', 20 per cent. larger than Appleton's, and 25 per cent. larger than Johnson's Cyclopædias. Of this edition, ten volumes are now ready for delivery. Volume XI. will be ready May 20, and the remaining volumes at intervals of a few days thereafter. Price per volume in cloth, $1; in half Russia, gilt top, $1.50.

"First come, first served," is an old motto which we have supplemented by "Lowest prices to earliest purchasers," and accordingly, on this edition, we are for a few days offering the 10 volumes now published at the net price of $6.50. This price will very shortly be increased.

Of course the 15,000 topics and 3,000 pages of new matter added in this edition are not to be found either in the Lippincott edition or in our own $6 edition. Both of them, however, are excellent works, remarkably cheap, and serve a good purpose for those who cannot afford the new and enlarged edition. Specimen pages, showing type, and giving full particulars, will be sent free on request.

Throughout the United States and Canada are prepared to either abundantly supply or liberally slander our publications. We give liberal terms to clubs where no bookseller acts as agent. Descriptive catalogue and illustrated pamphlet, describing book-making and type-setting by steam, will be sent free on request.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND. JUNE 2, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

THE prosecution of the star-route thieves seems to hang fire. The powder is getting damp, probably.

SENATOR BRUCE has been confirmed as register of the treasury at Washington. This act of the senate took place at a time when the democrats were in the majority, and is probably one of the most sensible appointments made this session.

THE first ballot for senators to fill the places of Conkling and Platt, was taken Tuesday noon. It stood, for the short term, Jacobs, democrat, 53; Conkling, 35; scattering republican vote, 63; for the long term, Kernan, democrat, 54; Platt, 29, scattering, 69.

JUDGING by the material generally selected for republican office-holders, the crop will be a full one by the time the present star-route and treasury-department thieves are all drawn out and exposed. First investigate, then whitewash, then an important office where they can be useful to the party.

THERE was no more wasting time in the senate after Conkling and Platt resigned. The democrats had a majority which gave them a safe control of the house, and business was at once resumed, appointments were confirmed or rejected in the usual lawful and business-like way, the work was finished, and the senate then was ready to do what might have been done two months ago—adjourn and go home.

CONKLING and Platt are both trying to be re-elected. The assembly seems to be divided into three nearly equal parts. There are 105 republican members, and there seems to be about half for Conkling and the rest against him. The other third represents the democratic members. These latter met Monday afternoon and nominated candidates of their own—John C. Jacobs for the short term recently filled by Conkling, and Francis P. Kernan for the long term, which was Platt's. The democrats will likely vote solidly for their own candidates, unless they can carry a vote to adjourn without electing any one. This, many of them prefer to do.

INQUIRIES are made as to what is meant by the term "star-route" in the postoffice department. It is used to designate those mail routes not on railroads, that is, those on which the mails are carried overland on stages and other conveyances. The cheating is done in the following manner: Take for example the overland route from Butler via St. Joe and Spencerville to Ft. Wayne. Suppose a man takes this route for four years, at $500 a year. Then after awhile he will get some man having influence with the authorities at Washington to get the contract changed, raising the price to three or four times the original amount, he agreeing to make the trips oftener, and in less time. This, of course, he never does, but takes care to get his increased pay from the government. Those who make the bids on these routes are seldom present in person, but have other parties make the bids, and then the contracts are so arranged that the real parties step in and get the compensation.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Should the earth be such as used in the manufacture of fire brick, this city will have another opportunity to give its manufacturing interests a boost and one that should not be slighted.

The new fair association, at South Bend, are making arrangements to put their grounds in shape, plans for buildings &c., are discussed and negotiations have been opened to secure a side-track to the Grand Trunk railroad.

A Wabash man, while on a trip to Boston, to sell a car-load of horses, was offered the trotter, Whalebone for $800. That was a year ago. Since then the horse has developed speed so rapidly, that he was recently sold for $15,000

Messrs. James and J. D. Oliver returned on Saturday from the Lake Superior country where they have been inspecting their smelting works. These works will eventually turn out all the iron used by the Oliver Chilled Plow Works.—[St. Joe Valley Register.

DePuy, the Wabash man, who advertised for a preacher, has found one at last, but it is more than likely that the dilatory brothers have let the day of grace slip by, as the pulpit and other furniture of the unoccupied church were lately sold.

A crazy man in Plymouth county, Iowa, concluded that the Lord wanted a sacrifice, and proceeded with a pitchfork to kill his pig and cow, and had just begun on his wife and children, when the neighbors interfered and ended his violent piety.

For promptness the Mishawaka folks take the cake. Within seven hours after the break occurred in the south race a coffer-dam had been constructed and all the shops except the pulp mill were in operation. It will take a month to put the pulp mill in running order.—[St. Joe Valley Register.

Ground was broken for the construction of the Valparaiso and Joliet railroad, May 26. This road has been in contemplation for sometime, and the Messenger now feels certain that the work will be pushed to an early completion.

Miss Arabella Root, whom our readers remember as the charming young lady vocalist, who gave an entertainment here this winter, in connection with Prof. Williams, the elocutionist, was married to the latter, at Petersburg, Ill., May 14.

On last Saturday night as Mrs. T. J. Cuppy was returning home from choir meeting at the M. E. church, she made a misstep upon entering her own door yard and sustained a painful though not serious injury to one of her feet.—[Columbia City Commercial.

Robert Derby while watching some young men jump on Tuesday evening, was accidentally struck by two bricks thrown by Henry Neer, one striking him in the breast and the other in the mouth, knocking out two teeth and severing a portion of the lip. Dr. Otis sewed up the wound.—[Hicksvill News.

Nelson Good (alias "Snow Ball") the colored man who attempted to load his revolver by hammering a cartridge into it some two weeks ago, and was severely wounded in the leg by the explosion, has recovered sufficiently to be upon the street again. Snow Ball's spirit doesn't seem to be a particle tamed by his mishap.—[Wabash Plain Dealer.

A RICH FIND.—Col. H. G. Depuy, living just south of town on the Lafontaine pike, last week brought in a specimen of clay found on his farm which appears to be of the quality used for fire brick. Quite a number of people examined the clay, and those competent to judge seem to think the Colonel has a bonanza if properly worked up.

The Wabash Plain Dealer has adopted the quarto style, and under the new management bids fair to be a most excellent paper. We are glad to see that the quarrel between the papers there, is being discontinued. Both the Courier and the Plain Dealer are ably conducted, and should rise above the undignified quarrels that disgrace so many of their weaker brethren.

An innumerable swarm of grasshoppers suddenly made their appearance on the farms of commissioner Edgcomb and Rev. D. M. Truby in Lima township this week. They completely cover the ground and fences, and have already stripped several fields of their growing crops of grass and clover. We do not however, apprehend that the country will be scourged with this pestilence. —[Lagrange Register.

A farmer, of Kosciusko county, went out on Chapman's lake last week, taking his three children, a boy and two girls with him. After being on the lake sometime, they started for shore, when the children noticed their father fall over backwards, with his head in the water. They pulled him into the boat, but found he was dead. It was probably a case of heart desease. The children pulled the boat containing their father's body to the shore in safety.

Geo. A. Cutting, a very promising young lawyer, of Lagrange, Ind., died of consumption on Saturday, May 21, aged 34 years. Mr. Cutting was a graduate of the university of Michigan. He was an able lawyer, a true friend, sympathetic, generous, noble. Those who knew him best will mourn him most. The entire bar of Lagrange united in a fitting memorial attesting their great sorrow in losing so bright and estimable a member as brother Cutting.

There is but one fire brick manufactory in Indiana and that has, for a great length of time, had all the orders it could conveniently fill. Were a yard to be started here it could not fail to be profitable to its owners and at the same time afford Wabash an addition to its manufacturing enterprises of which she could be proud. It is to be hoped that a careful investigation will be set on foot and if there is anything in the matter some man who has the city's welfare at heart, together with an inclination to accumulate wealth, will work the mine discovered.—[Wabash Courier.

KILLED BY A VICIOUS STALLION.—Washington Benson and family, of Porter township, Cass county, Mich., drove through this city yesterday morning, on their way to Iowa. They stopped by the roadside for dinner about 1½ miles beyond Mt. Pleasant. The old gentleman was leading a stallion to water and stooped to pick up a stick with which to hurry the horse along. As he did so the animal reared and threw himself upon the old man, tearing the flesh, ear and all, completely off the right side of the head. The maddened horse then bit the poor man through the breast breaking all his ribs from the breast bone. Dr. McGill was summoned and arrived just as the man was breathing his last.—[St. Joe Valley Register.

Pleasant Lake will celebrate the 4th this year in the regular old fashioned style, weather and providence permitting.

Col. Thos. A. Scott, so long president of the Pennsylvania railroad company, and one of the most powerful railroad men in the United States, died at his home near Philadelphia about a week ago.

On Thursday night of last week, John R. Anderson, of Richland township, heard a noise in his kitchen and upon entering the same to inquire the cause, was fiercely attacked by a wild coon that had entered the house through a door that had been left ajar. The animal bit both of Mr. Anderson's feet in a serious manner and when he undertook to grapple with it with his hands it bit one of his fingers severely. By this time the dog, who had been attracted by the noise, came to Mr. Anderson's rescue, when the coon took refuge under the stove and was finally shot and killed by a son of Mr. Anderson, who had also been attracted to the scene of action by the noise. At last accounts Mr. Anderson was suffering very much from his wounds and it will doubtless take some weeks for him to fully recover from his injuries. —[Columbia City Commercial.

Decoration at Waterloo.

The day was observed here with the usual solemnity and ceremonies. The Waterloo Rifles, headed by the band, were out in force, and an excellent choir furnished vocal music. The following are those who sang in the choir: C. K. Reed, J. W. Patterson, Mrs. Jennie Patterson and Miss Rose Blair, Mrs. L. A. Caro, organist. The exercises at Haines' hall began with music by the band, followed by prayer by Rev. H. J. Lacy and singing by the choir. The address was then delivered by F. W. Willis, and was well received. After another song by the choir, the names of soldiers who were buried on the field of battle, or in different cemeteries, were read. A poem was read by Dick Lock, after which the order of exercise was read by the president, Dr. Chamberlain. The procession was then formed as follows:

First came the band, followed by the Waterloo Rifles in full uniform; next were the old soldiers; then the officers and committees in carriages; then the girls who were to assist in placing the flowers. These were nicely attired in red, white and blue, with black sashes. Lastly, came the citizens generally.

At the cemetery, prayer was offered by Rev. Lacy and song by the choir, after which the rifles escorted the little girls to the different graves in the order prescribed, when the flowers were deposited in the usual manner, and the ceremonies concluded. The hall at which the meeting took place was beautifully decorated with evergreen, as was also the large gate at the cemetery. The scarcity of flowers this spring made the work of decoration unusually difficult, but it was accomplished in a way that was decidedly creditable to all concerned. The observance of these solemn ceremonies, the honoring of the brave men who lost their lives in the service of their country, has come to be considered a a pleasant and a sacred duty, which the patriotic living unite in paying to the patriotic dead.

The Pioneer Association of DeKalb County, comprising all who became residents of Northern Indiana, prior to January 1st, 1846, will hold their 4th annual re-union at Auburn, on Thursday, June 16th, 1881. It is expected and hoped that all the old settlers of DeKalb county will be present and participate in the enjoyments of the occasion. No effort will be spared to make the exercises highly interesting and enjoyable.

PROGRAMME:

Call to order at 10:30 a. m.
Music by band
Prayer by Chaplain, Jas. McCurdy.
Vocal music by choir.
Address by W. H. Dills, secretary of the association.
Vocal music by choir.
Recess until 1:30 p. m.
Music by band.
Report of officers.
Election of officers.
Short speeches by old settlers.
Benediction at 3:30

Come one and all. Let everybody come, old and young and bring their baskets well filled, and do as the old settlers did in early times, dispense your hospitalities to those who have not, and eat in the shady grove.

P. B. NIMMONS, Pres.
T. D. GRUSE, Vice Pres.
J. E. RUSH, Biographer,
CYRUS BOWMAN, Treas.

—The farmers say the fly is destroying what wheat the drouth has spared. Also that the look-out for crops of any kind is discouraging.

—Ladies should use Dr. Marshall's Bromoline for constipation, or any liver complaint. Big bottles fifty cents. Your druggist sells it.

—For a torpid liver, biliousness, dyspepsia and all liver complaints, the Big Blood and Liver Cure, (Dr. Marshall's Bromoline) is just the thing. Ask your druggist for a bottle.

—The M. E. society will give a strawberry and ice cream festival at Ensley's hall, Saturday evening June 4th. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

MRS. E. J. CODER, Sec'y.

—While we were at Garrett the other evening we called on our old friend, F Palmer, at the Garrett branch of the Pioneer hardware store, and found him as fat and good natured as ever. He reports a good trade.

—An exchange says: Saturate clayey ground with water just before dark, and the angle-worms will come to the surface, when they can easily be gathered by the help of a lantern, if sought two or three hours after the soil is drenched.

—Some new music books have been compiled by J. F Kinsey, with whom our people are all familiar. They are for use in Sunday-schools, conventions, choirs, etc. The titles are, "The Singers' Delight," price 60 cents; "Convention King," 75 cents, and "Golden Shore," price 30 cents For sale by Kell Brothers, Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

—Four covered Gypsy wagons, and an open one containing two sons of Ham, passed through town Wednesday. The negroes were not allowed in the covered wagons, and were left to pine outside at the imminent risk of spoiling their complexions. Another case for the civil rights bill. Send up a United States marshal and let no guilty Gypsy escape.

—Last week we jokingly made a remark about one of our citizens visiting Waterloo evenings, etc. The citizen referred to came in, and, in a pleasant good natured way, denied a part of the allegation, and wanted to see the "alligator." Of course he was only exercising the constitutional rights of an American citizen when he went to Waterloo. Besides that, he says he can pack away a "whole lot" of clothes driers under the seat of his buggy, and declares that he had some along with him. Dot vos all right my friend.

—Last week Mr. C Sneets, living just south of town, was splitting a large, hard maple tree into stove wood. In doing so, he noticed some ax marks that were still very plainly marked away in toward the heart of the tree. This of course excited his curiosity, and he brought the stick to town. From the marks to the outside of the tree, measured nearly ten inches, and a count of the growths revealed the fact that the chopping was done about 114 years ago, which takes us back to 1767. Just who was here at that time we shall not undertake to say, but that somebody with an ax passed through here is a certainty.

Accident at Butler.

At about seven o'clock Monday evening a man from Banford, Ontario county, Canada, attempted to board a freight train while in motion on the L. S. road at Butler, but missed his hold, and falling under the train had both legs badly mangled from the knees down. A telegram was at once sent to Waterloo for Dr. Chamberlain, followed by an engine, which was detached from the train for that purpose. The doctor was found visiting a patient in Uniontown. He hurried home, got his instruments, mounted the cab of the engine and was soon at the side of the injured man. Both legs were amputated, but the man did not rally after it, and died about 10 o'clock p. m. The doctor thinks he was injured internally, in addition to the crushing of his legs. The man was evidently drunk when he tried to board the train, and was cautioned not to attempt it. He gave his name as David Larkin, and he leaves a wife and two children in Canada.

Summer Excursions to Colorado.

SEASON OF 1881.

The sale of tourists' tickets to Denver, Colorado, via Ft. Wayne route Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago railway, and direct connecting lines, commenced on May 1st. This season the Rocky Mountain tourist can obtain round-trip tickets good by one route going and another returning. Arriving at Denver, the tourist may make excursions to all the notable mining districts and popular resorts in Colorado. Returning to Denver, the tourist, instead of retracing his steps homeward, can make a detour taking another route. Tourist tickets will be sold also to Pueblo and Colorado Springs at same rates as to Denver.

Tourists' guides, time-tables, round-trip rates, and information respecting routes, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application to the nearest agent of the P., F., W. & C. railroad, or to E. A. Ford, general passenger agent, Pittsburgh, Pa.

A Meeting to Organize a Township Sunday-School Institute was held in the lecture-room of the M. E. church, Auburn, May 26. R. D. Elson presiding. After devotional exercises, the following officers were elected and committees appointed: Vice-president, W. L. Meese; secretary, Mrs. A Robbins; treasurer, J. Treesh; executive committee, R. D. Elson, L. Rice and James Cosper; to draft constitution, H. J. Norris, M. A. Ehlers, J Baughman, Wm. McGinnis and J. W. McClellan. The meeting then adjourned to meet Thursday, September 1, at such hour and place as the executive committee may decide.

Wanted

Everybody to know that J. W. Wagoner, over at Garrett, has just purchased the stock of drugs formerly owned by F. B. Bacon, and is fitting up the room immediately south of his restaurant, for a drug store, where you can in the future find a nice fresh and complete stock of drugs. Mr. Bacon will be in Mr. Wagoner's employ. He understands the business, and will sell you good goods at low prices. Mr Wagoner has always been noted for his straight forwardness in business matters, and all those who favor him with a call can rely on being fairly dealt with. We wish him success in his new enterprise, and bespeak for him a big trade. 2 t.

20-2w. J. J. MARTIN, Agent, Auburn.

The circus came, and the deacon went
To show the children the great big tent,
And the steam piano and the coach of gold,
And the gorgeous lion tamer bold.
The children looked with mute surprise
On the beast, but the deacon's eyes
Fell mostly on the famous fair
Who flew in spangled tights through the air.
Deacons are good men no doubt,
But the circus season draws them out."

The Press says we "gave the thing away" by publishing Comer's letter with the preface attached. Well, we can't help that. The preface contained an account of a republican who wanted an office, and wanted it bad, and you can't get up an article on republican political management without that feature.

—The train going north on the Jackson road at 12:40 and the one going south at 3:40 p. m., now stop at the Junction long enough to take meals.

—P. J. Lockwood is the owner of a new bycicle. We simply mention this, so that in case he should carry any portion of himself in a sling, you will know the reason without asking him any questions.

—The universal desire for a rain was gratified yesterday morning by a fine shower lasting about an hour. It was just such a one as was needed—a still, steady rain—only we could put up with a great deal more of it. But we have cause to be thankful for what we did get.

—Madame Fry and her company of musicians will be in Waterloo and give one of their unrivalled concerts, Thursday evening, June 2d. Their cornet band, composed of three ladies, the daughters of Madame, and three gentlemen, is pronounced by competent judges to be the best now in this country.

—General Blair indulged in a little runaway on our streets the other day. Coming over to court, a nut came off his buggy, letting the near fore wheel run off just as he turned east along the north side of the court house square. The horse was stopped with some difficulty, but no serious injury done except a general shaking up, and some dust. On his return to Waterloo, he found the nut near Jacob McEntaffer's place. This shows that the buggy had run on its own responsibility for over three miles.

—We have received a number of instantaneous views of the great snow blockade in the south part of Minnesota. They were taken in March, and show more than any words, the terrible winter through which the people of that part of the country have just passed. They were forwarded to us by Miss Lucinda Daniels, whom all our citizens will remember, and she writes that they do not do the subject justice. They were taken after the snow began to thaw. She adds that a fine spring immediately succeeded these snow storms, making the contrast more marked than it would otherwise have been.

—The junior editor of the COURIER is well acquainted with and has done business for a number of years for D. M. Osborne & Co., of Auburn, New York, one of the largest reaper and mower manufacturing institutions in the world. This company has a binder that seems to be as near perfection as any we have seen. They built ten thousand of these binders this year. We were shown a dispatch a few days ago from their agent at Dallas, Texas, saying that he had started six binders that day and all of them worked to perfection. We are pleased to notice that the farmers are appreciating these machines. The agents for these justly celebrated machines, in this corner of the state, are Messrs. Hunter & Parker at Huntertown, D. D. Snyder at Auburn, and Wm. Kennedy at Waterloo. They are all gentlemen in whom the farmers can place confidence, and in dealing with them you need have no fears of getting an inferior machine.

—Decoration services here last Monday were largely attended. The ceremonies were impressive, appropriate and suitable to the occasion. The Auburn Cornet band furnished good music. The little girls and boys in uniform made a good appearance, and did credit to themselves and the occasion.

The soldiers and children met at the Soldiers' hall at one o'clock p. m. The march to the cemetery was in the following order: First came the band; then reader, speaker, biographer and other officers; next the little girls, followed by the little boys, all dressed in red, white and blue; then the veterans, followed by citizens generally. After reaching the cemetery, the band played a piece, and this was followed by prayer by Rev. L. Rice, of the Lutheran church. After another piece by the band, W L. Penfield, Esq., delivered the address in his usual able and felicitous manner. The names and biographies of the deceased soldiers were then read by W. H. McIntosh. Prof. W. P. Myers read the well-known poem, "Cover them over with beautiful flowers," after which came the ceremony of decorating the graves. The procession for return was formed in the same order as at first. The residence of Mrs. Mott was next visited, and the band played a piece while flowers were placed on the grave of her son, who is buried there. The entire programme was well arranged and successfully carried out, and reflects much credit on all concerned.

Personal Mention.

Will. Rose left yesterday for Lincoln, Nebraska.

—H. E. Braun, of Waterloo, was in town Tuesday.

—Miss Ida Bell returned home yesterday afternoon.

—Mrs. H. C. Bell went to Butler last week on a visit to friends there.

—J. A. Provines, of Spencerville, made us a pleasant call Tuesday.

—Dr. Allyn is a good looking gentleman since removing his burnsides.

—O. P. Learned, Esq., of Franklin township, called on us Wednesday.

—Mrs. Clarence Rowman, of Angola, is paying Mrs. Leb. Anderson a visit this week.

—Mrs. Edward Orr and daughter, and Miss Kline, of Corunna, were in town Tuesday.

—Mike Boland and family went to Toledo Tuesday to remain a few days visiting friends.

—Frank Rush, of Orland, Indiana, formerly of this place, is in town visiting his parents.

—Holly Lawrence, formerly of this place, got his foot smashed on the B. & O last Thursday.

—Mr. Shorter has moved her carpet-weaving establishment into the room opposite the Auburn House.

—J. B. Hoffman, of Ligonier, made us a brief call last week. He had been visiting relatives in this county.

—Two of Steuben county's most substantial citizens, David Thresher and Mr. Closson, called on us last week.

—Frank Hollis, a young man who has been working on the Republican, returned to Columbia City yesterday.

—Mrs. Carson of Fort Wayne, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Allen, this week. She is almost ninety years old.

—Will. Shaffer, Frank Cobler and several others left yesterday for New Mexico. Our best wishes go with the boys.

—R Elson has a parrot at his office. It is a young bird, and was raised in a German family, and will probably be a good linguist.

—J W. Squires, of Corunna, dropped in to see us Monday. He is determined to write "M. D." to his name if it takes all summer.

—George Stealy, one of Anderson Bros. employes, has gone to his home in Angola for a week's vacation, and Pete Bowman is filling his place.

—Kittie Dills and Emma Rother gladdened the hearts of the COURIER people by presenting the office a nice bouquet last Friday. We tender our thanks.

—Rev L Rice expects to start for Altoona, Pa., next Monday. He goes as a delegate from the synod of northern Indiana to attend the general synod of the Lutheran church which meets June 8, 1881. He will be back within ten days or two weeks.

—Mrs. Maggie Sibert called and paid for another copy of the COURIER last Monday. She is now paying for two copies, and the best of it is, she pays in advance. That's business, and her example might well be followed by several hundred men we know of.

Waterloo.

O. C. Dickinson is now night agent at the Lake Shore depot.

General Blair is repainting his house and making other substantial improvements.

Mrs. Henry Willis and Mrs. J. C. Boyer are visiting relatives in Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Dr. Winslow has so far recovered, as to be able to attend at the store a part of the time.

The Madame Fry company are billed to give an entertainment in Haines' Hall Thursday evening.

J. D. McAnally has returned from his trip to Ohio. His wife still remains in attendance on her sick daughter.

It is said there were 151 peanut and lemonade stands in town show day, but this is believed to be an invention of the enemy.

Geo. Smith met with a painful, and possibly a serious accident last Saturday. While getting on the cars at Kendallville his foot slipped, and in falling he cut his knee badly.

Somebody and his family tipped over into the creek by Uniontown on show day. As a substitute for rain, this was a very good thing, but rather sudden, and not likely to be generally adopted.

Flush times make people generous. We saw a young man last Saturday, dividing a paper sack of crackers with his lady love. And yet envious people insist that the days of chivalry are over.

Sunday was as still as the usual sabbath day. No one passing along the streets would have thought that one or two hundred showmen were staying in town. This speaks well for the management.

A boy had a fit near the show tents, and every one, including the marshal, thought he was drunk. When his mother put in an appearance, the matter was explained, and he was properly cared for.

Some hungry sneaks broke into F. P. Day's cellar recently, and helped themselves to about twenty five cans of fruit, besides other eatables. Frank is anxious to become acquainted with his hollow stomached visitors.

The afternoon trains on both roads, passing here at 3 p. m., now make connections at the crossing, and transfer passengers and baggage over the little platform there. Rumor has it that the two roads contemplate building a union depot there at an early day.

The M. E. sabbath school elected the following officers last Sunday: Superintendent, A. M. Lommert; assistant superintendent, H. E. Coe; secretary, Geo. Haines; treasurer, Annie Darling; choristers F. N. Beidler and A. C. Jackman; organists, Mrs. L. A. Caro and Tinie Haines.

Alonzo Lower was severely injured last week, while unloading timber for the new building to be used for storing barrels and other cooperage. His left arm was badly cut, and both bones of the forearm broken. He was also much hurt about the head. Dr. Chamberlain set the broken arm, reports him as doing well.

The following officers of the Presbyterian Sunday school were elected, May 29: Superintendent, Philip Plum; assistant superintendent, Mrs. W. B. Duncan; secretary, Carrie Morrill; treasurer, Edgar Best; organists, Lydia North and Mary Homer; chorister, M. W. Johnson; librarians, Maude Best and Dora Beck; delegates to county Sunday school convention, Mrs. T. Y. Dickinson, Ida Blair and Fannie Clark.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Congressman O'Brien, of New York, has obtained a divorce from his wife on the ground that she was an habitual drunkard.

Col. Thomas A. Scott, the famous railroad king, died at his country residence near Darby, Pa., from paralysis, in the 58th year of his age. The primary cause of the paralysis in his case was a fall from a locomotive when Superintendent of the Western division of the Pennsylvania railroad, more than thirty years ago, by which he suffered a violent concussion of the brain....The steamship Ganos, from Matanzas, with a cargo of sugar, was sunk when within twenty miles of the light-house at Boston by collision with the steamer Pembroke. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

Seven students of Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., have been expelled and three suspended for riotous and ungentlemanly conduct.

A controlling interest in the New York Evening Post, of which journal William Cullen Bryant was for so many years the leading spirit, has been purchased by Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin. The former assumes editorial control....Little Commodore Nutt, the dwarf, died in New York of Bright's disease, aged 37.

Through an attempt to light a fire with kerosene, Mrs. Egler, of Pittsburgh, was fatally charred, her husband rendered insane, and her little daughter burned to death. Seven frame buildings were consumed, and a fireman was badly scorched.

THE WEST.

A desperate gang of four ruffians has long been the terror of Southeastern Missouri. Recently a committee of citizens, under the lead of a Sheriff, went in search of the outlaws, and at different times found them and exchanged shots with them. Two of the desperadoes were killed, and the others were captured. Two members of the attacking force were also killed, and one or two others wounded. This desperate quartette were known as the "Hamilton gang," from the name of their leader, and their depredations have extended over a period of nearly a year.....A memorial tablet, marking the site of Fort Dearborn, was unveiled at Chicago with appropriate exercises in the presence of a large assembly... Jefferson Davis, the ex-President of the ex-Confederacy, spent a day in Chicago last week. He was the guest of his old friend, Gen. Crafts J. Wright, of the Marine Hospital service.....Two female patients at the Central Ohio Lunatic Asylum drowned themselves in a lake on the grounds.

One hundred barrels of Danforth's fluid exploded in a cellar at St. Joseph, Mo. The floor over the cellar was occupied as a saloon and billiard room by a colored man, and a number of colored men were in there at the time, all of whom lost their lives. The building was totally demolished, and instantly the inmates were all buried in the debris, which was completely enveloped by hot flames of the burning fluid. Water was freely used by the fire department, but was of no avail....The citizens of Del Norte, Col., lynched Bill Leroy and Sam Potter within an hour of their arrival in custody.

The 16-year-old daughter of James Westover, of Markesan, near Ripon, Wis., committed suicide because her father would not permit Dan Murray, a youth of 18, whom she said she loved, to call on her. Murray, on hearing of the young girl's act, was so grief-stricken that he also committed suicide.

THE SOUTH.

A steam saw mill near Oakland, Md., was blown to atoms by the explosion of a boiler. The fireman was blown 600 feet, and one boiler was carried 1,000 feet up the hillside.

The Revenue Collector at Atlanta, Ga., reports that the jails of Fannin and Pickens counties were emptied of moonshiners by armed mobs. Commissioner Raum has given orders to have warrants issued for the arrest of the rescuing parties and see that they are hunted down.

Memorial Day was observed by the New England Templar commanderies visiting in Richmond, Va., by the adornment of the statues of "Stonewall" Jackson and George Washington with floral wreaths.

WASHINGTON.

A Washington dispatch says the "national-bank circulation is higher than ever before, and is steadily rising. It is nearly $362,000,000. Gold-note circulation remains about where it is, because the law limits the circulation of a bank to $50,000. Otherwise it, too, would increase. It is understood that an attempt will be made at the next session to extend the circulation limit so that a bank in California can issue as many gold certificates as it desires. Despite the increase of national-bank circulation, the demand for new notes still continues. New England is the most clamorous."

The exposure of a treasury ring, which has been growing fat by a long series of systematic peculations, is the latest sensation at Washington. The ringsters, so far as unearthed, are Upton, the Assistant Secretary; Lamphere, the appointment clerk, and Pitney, the superintendent of the Treasury building. The records show the purchase of twenty thousand yards of carpet for the Treasury Department during the last fiscal year, although a deficit of 700 yards was discovered several months ago. A few local dealers have furnished such supplies at retail prices, there having been no advertisements for proposals. In taking an inventory of Pitney's supplies, a barrel of bay rum and a lot of Lubin's perfumes and soaps were found.

A Washington dispatch of May 24 says: "Secretary Windom's policy in the matter of the continuance of the 5-per-cents is as complete a success as it was with the 6's. At the close of treasury hours to-day the total amount of the $2.0,000,000 included in the call had been received. Secretary Windom congratulates himself that his views in opposition to the calling of an extra session of Congress prevailed. He has accomplished all that Congress could have done with much less friction."....The President has made the following recess appointments: Consuls of the United States—Jesse H. Moore, of Illinois, at Callao; John M. Bailey, of New York, at Hamburg; Selah Merrill, of Massachusetts, at Jerusalem; George W. Roosevelt, of Pennsylvania, at Bordeaux. Collectors of Internal Revenue for Texas—William H. Sinclair, First district; B. C. Ludlow, Third district; William Umbenstock, Fourth district....The Postoffice Department present some interesting figures showing the amount of mail transmitted by the department last year. They are based upon an actual count of the mail at different postoffices throughout the country in the first seven days of December, 1880. During the year every man, woman and child in the United States wrote an average of twenty-one letters each. The number of newspapers mailed was 812,032,000.... Gen. J. A. Williamson, Commissioner of the General Land Office, has tendered his resignation, and will become Land Commissioner of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company.

The State Department has been officially advised of the seizure of the American bark Ameria, of Boston, by the customs authorities at Merida, Mexico, which harbor she entered in distress. A request by the American Consul for her release was refused. The Navy Department has ordered a war vessel to the scene of the trouble.

POLITICAL.

The German Republican Central Committee of New York passed resolutions congratulating the people on the emphatic victory won by the President over Conkling and Platt, and asking the Legislature not to re-elect the Senatorial suicides....The Democratic State Convention of Ohio has been called to meet at Columbus on July 13.

At a conference of the friends of Mr. Conkling, in New York city, it was decided that both Conkling and Platt should be vigorously urged upon the Legislature for re-election. It was agreed that neither of the resigned Senators should return without the other. The belief was confidently expressed that both of them could be returned.—A secret conference of prominent Democrats, with Speaker Randall at the head, was held in Washington, at which the political situation in New York was carefully considered. They decided to recommend to the Democratic members of the New York Legislature not to enter into any coalition with either of the Republican factions that will enable them to fill vacancies occasioned by the resignation of Conkling and Platt.

An Albany (N. Y.) telegram of May 23, says that city "has become the center of intense political activity. The sensation of the day was an editorial in the Conkling organ warning that gentleman not to place himself in the way of being humiliated. Opinions differ widely as to the connection of Gov. Cornell with the pronunciamento, it being generally believed that he hopes to occupy one of the vacant seats in the Senate. Among the rumors which have gained credence is one that Gen. Grant will hurry northward from Galveston and take a hand in behalf of Conkling. Thirty-two Republicans have signed a pledge not to go into caucus with the supporters of the Senators who abandoned their seats, or with Republicans not in sympathy with the administration. The leading administration candidates are Chauncey M. Depew and James Wadsworth."...Senators Cameron and Mitchell (says a Washington telegram) are very much put out with the President because he refused to accept their advice and appoint a man they recommended as Surveyor of the Port of Philadelphia. The President ignored both the Pennsylvania Senators and made the appointment to suit himself, but Cameron succeeded in inducing the Senate not to act on the nominations. Both Senators are very angry at the President for his action.... A mass-meeting of Republicans who indorse the action of President Garfield was held in Chickering Hall, New York. Ex-Judge Fithian presided. Resolutions were adopted indorsing Robertson's nomination as Collector of the Port of New York, and characterizing the action of the resigning Senators as nothing more than a high-handed attempt to usurp the Presidential functions....The Iowa Republican Convention, for the selection of candidates for State offices, will meet at Des Moines, on Wednesday, the 29th of June.

Senators Conkling and Platt and Vice President Arthur arrived at Albany, N. Y., on the 24th of May, and were received with enthusiastic cheers by a large party of political friends who had assembled at the depot to give them welcome. At the hotel they were joined by Gov. Cornell, and in the evening a general levee was held. The room was constantly crowded, and Senator Conkling shook hands with everybody presenting himself, and to each saying a pleasant word. The Grant Club appeared in a body, and presented an address to Mr. Conkling.—The departure of Secretary Blaine for New York, on pretense of official business, caused several influential gentlemen to visit the President and enter a protest against the administration taking part in the Senatorial struggle at Albany. The chief magistrate appeared surprised to learn of the Secretary's trip.

In the New York Senate, Mr. Woodin opened the Senatorial campaign, May 26, by offering a remonstrance against returning Messrs. Conkling and Platt to the United States Senate, and made an extended speech in support of his action. During the day Mr. Conkling sent notes to several Senators and Representatives asking for a private interview. A conference with forty-seven members had been arranged by Conkling, but was postponed because only half the number made their appearance. The friends of the administration met and resolved not to go into caucus. A private telegram was received by a friend of Conkling from Gen. Grant, expressing the hope that the Legislature would re-elect the former.

GENERAL.

The sale of the revised edition of the New Testament began in New York on the 20th of May. There was a great rush to obtain copies, and the sales were enormous. The Chicago Times and Inter Ocean printed in their editions of the following morning the greater portion of the revised work.

The value of the breadstuffs exported from the United States during the ten months ending April, 1881, was $225,155,901, as compared with $233,844,387 worth exported during the corresponding ten months of last year.

Senator Sherman lately tendered to Gov. Foster the amount of the hotel bill for the delegates to the Chicago Convention, but it was not accepted.

Hon. George W. Williams, of Ohio, a colored delegate to the Baptist home mission gathering at Indianapolis, informed that body that 30,000 negroes are preparing to emigrate from Louisiana to New Mexico.

The number of people drowned by the sinking of the steamer Victoria, at London, Canada, is known to be over 200. A dispatch from London of the 26th ult. says the funeral of the victims lasted all day and all the preceding night. There were not hearses nor coffins enough to meet the emergency, and vehicles of all kinds were used to convey the dead to the cemeteries. The behavior of rough characters on board the ill-starred vessel is said to have had much to do with causing the disaster. The calamity is to be commemorated by a monument in a cemetery overlooking the scene of the disaster.

Gen. J. S. Casement states that the right of way for the New York, Chicago and St. Louis road has been secured through New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio; that immense quantities of ties are being delivered from Alpena, Mich., and the roadbed will be ready for the rails in September....Max Strakosch, the well-known impresario and operatic manager, has again failed.

FOREIGN.

In the British House of Lords Granville said Russia, with the support of Germany, recently proposed a conference of the powers with a view to joint action against assassination. From no sympathy with Nihilism, he said, her Majesty's Government declined to participate in the conference, believing it would have no practical result.

The Jews are fleeing from Moscow, in advance of a rumored attack. The police are taking every precaution to prevent an outbreak. Hebrew fugitives are arriving at Warsaw from all parts of Russia. In a proclamation forbidding the persecution of the Jews, the Governor General of Charkoff declares that he will not hesitate to put the region under martial law and punish rioters with the greatest severity.... The Czar has given his sanction to a project for lowering the rental of lands, and for compelling some of the nobles to sell portions of their estates to the emancipated serfs.....Very serious disturbances are reported in several parts of Ireland, including collisions between the people and police.

The Russian revolutionists are out in another manifesto. They ask that the Czar shall listen to his people rather than to his present counselors, and remove the evils from which they suffer. The demand is surely a reasonable one....The Swedish Government is said to be alarmed over the exodus to the United States, and contemplates restrictive legislation.

Russian social and political affairs have had their due effect upon trade. Imports of cotton material have diminished from 8 to 40 per cent. The cloth and iron trade are paralyzed, and Anglo-Russian merchants, tired of waiting for better times, are preparing to leave with their capital for England.....The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh had a narrow escape from drowning at Sidmouth. While out on a small cape they were cut off by a change in the tide, and were rescued by a life-boat.... Mr. G. H. Heap, United States Consul General at Constantinople, has reported to the Government the continued prevalence and extension of the plague in spite of the most vigorous efforts to confine it....Eighteen thousand people have been rendered homeless by the burning of the Russian city of Pinsk.... England declines to intercede for the persecuted Jews of Russia.

Johann Most, the publisher of the Socialist journal Freiheit, was tried in London for the charge of inciting to murder the Czar. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy on account of the prisoner being a foreigner.

A new coin, composed of equal parts of gold and silver, and intended to circulate as a 5-franc piece, has been struck in France and will be presented to the Monetary Conference for approval as an international coin.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The Senate on Friday, May 20, confirmed the New York nominations sent in the day before; also Glenni W. Schofield for Judge of the Court of Claims, and all the other nominations made by President Garfield and not already acted on, save that of William E. Chandler for Solicitor General and four others. After having adopted resolutions complimentary to the Vice President, and having ascertained that the President had no other nominations to make this session, the Senate then adjourned sine die. The vote on the confirmation of Mr. Chandler is understood to have been substantially a party vote, Don Cameron being the only Republican Senator who voted with the Democrats against the confirmation.

THE TIDE OF IMMIGRATION.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The renewed prosperity of the nation, and the hardships of military service in Europe, are regarded as the principal causes for the increasing tide of emigration which is now setting toward these shores. In 1877 the number of immigrants who came to this country was less than 150,000. Last year the number reached 457,257. Of these 327,371 were landed at the port of New York. Judging from the arrivals at Castle Garden so far this year, Superintendent Jackson estimates that the arrivals at this port this year may reach 500,000. The arrivals at this port for the first four months of last year, and corresponding period of this year, with the countries from which the immigrants come, as shown by returns made to the United States Treasury Department, were as follows:

Nationalities.	Four months ending May 1, 1880.	Four months ending May 1, 1881.
England	11,224	10,674
Scotland	2,067	2,319
Ireland	17,639	11,006
Germany	28,118	53,293
Austria	2,118	2,763
Sweden	9,962	4,850
Norway	1,976	1,689
Denmark	1,697	1,709
France	1,068	1,098
Switzerland	2,659	3,112
Italy	3,399	8,410
Holland	1,200	3,336
Belgium	270	503
Russia	728	794
Poland	691	898
Hungary	1,584	4,294
Other countries	541	1,390
Totals	82,648	109,123

The rate of increase this year is nearly 33 per cent. This would give a total immigration of over 600,000, of which about 450,000 would be due at this port. The rate of increase for New York, however, according to estimates of the Commissioners of Emigration, will probably be greater, as, owing to the backwardness of the season this year, and the late dates at which the Scandinavian ports were opened, the tide was kept back. In the first ten days of the present month 27,898 immigrants arrived at Castle Garden, and it is estimated that 70,000 will arrive this month, against 45,578 for the same time last year. On Monday of this week 6,521 immigrants arrived, the largest number on any day yet this year. Yesterday the number of arrivals was 3,208.

The greater part of the immigrants arriving consists of men under 40 years of age, who would be subject to military duty if they remained in Europe. Of the 109,123 immigrants who arrived in the first four months of this year 72,773 were men and 36,350 women. In the same time last year the men numbered 54,985 and the women 27,661, the proportion being the same each year.

The number of immigrants arriving at this port last year—327,000—was greater than in any previous year. In 1854, 319,223 immigrants arrived—the largest number in any year previous to 1880. The arrivals at Castle Garden for eleven years past with the five leading nationalities were as follow:

Year.	Total Arrivals.	Irish.	Germans.
1870	212,170	65,168	72,350
1871	229,634	66,506	88,601
1872	294,581	68,747	132,705
1873	266,818	68,612	104,214
1874	140,041	35,008	46,302
1875	84,560	19,924	25,859
1876	66,264	10,314	21,036
1877	54,536	8,221	17,760
1878	75,347	13,014	23,051
1879	135,070	22,024	33,574
1880	327,311	66,399	104,264
Year.	English.	Swedes.	Italians.
1870	38,940	11,551	2,081
1871	36,964	10,749	2,909

1876	8,447	3,602	2,618
1877	6,652	3,716	2,821
1878	9,344	4,102	4,208
1879	21,555	19,894	7,320
1880	33,766	35,217	11,190

The total number of immigrants brought into this country since the establishment of the Union, not including those arriving in 1880, was 10,136,760. Of this aggregate Ireland and Germany furnished about 3,000,000 each, England 900,000, France 313,000, Sweden and Norway 306,000, Switzerland 88,000, and other countries ranged from 70,000 for Italy to 613 for Turkey and 383 for Greece. Very few immigrants now come from Spain, Portugal or Turkey.

The German immigrants nearly all bring considerable money with them, estimated on an average from $500 to $2,000 each. Each immigrant is estimated to add at least $1,000 to the wealth of the country, in addition to the money he brings with him. At this rate the United States will have over $600,000,000 added to its wealth this year by means of emigration. The poorest class of immigrants come from Austria—the Sclavonians. Many of them arrive here utterly destitute.

Cousin Dick's Reply.

The late Bishop Wilmer, of Louisiana (the Cousin Joe), and Bishop Wilmer, of Alabama (the Cousin Dick, of the following anecdote), being in Italy together, the latter was enthusiastically pointing out to the former the architectural beauties of a ruin, when his Louisiana reverence rather wearily protested, "It's all very fine, Cousin Dick, but, nevertheless, a cheerful field, fragrant with new-mown hay, would please me better." The Bishop of Alabama replied: "Well, Cousin Joe, there is this in favor of your view of it—there is not an ass in all Italy that would not be of the same opinion."—Harper's Drawer.

WATERWAYS.

Proceedings of the Northwestern River and Canal Improvement Convention, at Davenport, Iowa.

The Northwestern Convention in aid of river and canal improvement met at the Opera House, in Davenport, on Wednesday, May 25. There were 370 delegates, representing all the Northwestern States, in attendance. Judge J. H. Murphy, of Davenport, was made temporary Chairman. Col. J. M. Allen addressed the convention. He stated that the survey from Rock Island to Hennepin is sixty-five miles in length, and that the canal can be cut for less than $5,000,000, thus completing a highway from Chicago to the extreme northern boundary of the Northwest.

Hon. James F. Wilson also addressed the convention. He said it was the "transportation problem" and not simply the construction of a canal that had called them together. People believed that the transportation system was at present too expensive and too unstable, and should be reformed. Waterways were the conservators of cheap and stable transportation, and those which nature had provided should be kept in the highest state of efficiency and supplemented by such artificial ways as were needed to effect a complete system. Such ways were not the swift ones of commerce, but were the maintainers of reasonable rates and better prices for products whose value depended on getting to market. Transportation by rail had been depended on so largely that the waterway had been neglected, and hence the superb railway system had been a failure in that it had not produced that standard of equity and fairness which the country of right had expected. By the creation of an efficient water competition the railway service could be brought to realize what its duties were in this regard.

After the appointment of Committees on Credentials and Permanent Organization, an adjournment was voted until 3 p. m.

On reassembling, the convention was addressed by the Hon. J. B. Henderson, who represents the Sixth Illinois district in Congress. He said the question of cheap transportation from the grain-growing districts to the seaboard was the important question before the people of the West. He wanted to see direct water communication between the Upper Mississippi and Chicago. St. Louis and New Orleans must not think the commerce of the great Northwest could be confined to one beaten track. That trade must take in Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Baltimore, and other cities. He did not advocate a ship-canal, but believed a water-way ample for present requirements could be constructed for $5,000,000, or about as much as was paid for a Custom House in any one of the large cities. The practicability of the route from Hennepin to Rock Island had been affirmed by successive Boards of Engineers.

Gov. John H. Gear, of Iowa, was introduced, and addressed the convention. He said that they had assembled for a most laudable purpose, having for its object the promotion of the welfare of the producers of the Mississippi valley, by devising ways and means to lessen the cost of transportation of the products of the farm and factory. It was true that less than half of the lands in Iowa were under cultivation, yet the resources of 5,000 miles of railway in operation in the State were taxed to their fullest extent last year to move the surplus product. In 1880 from the State of Iowa alone there were exported 52,000,000 bushels of corn, 9,000,000 bushels of wheat, 12,000,000 bushels of oats, to say nothing of other cereals. There were packed 658,000 hogs in the State, and 2,570,000 were shipped away alive out of the State over six lines of railroads. There were 372,000 head of live cattle shipped East. With the exception of a portion of the cattle and hogs, the other things were the growth of Iowa alone. From this it would be seen that much depended upon this convention in giving such tone to public sentiment as would best accomplish the desirable results to the producers of the Mississippi valley.

The Hon. Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, came next, and opened his speech by saying that in his opinion waterways were the only means of regulating freight charges and keeping railroad monopolies within bounds. Two specters threatened the perpetuity of republican institutions, and the worst of these was corporate monopoly, which had no soul and never died. Behind this stood a maddened and exasperated people, who might in the end be goaded to destroy the whole machinery of government in order to get rid of its excrescences. It behooved mankind to follow the plans of the great Engineer of the universe, and to dig canals on the lines marked out. Mr. Harrison advocated building a ship canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, and deepening the Illinois and Michigan canal.

The Committee on Permanent Organization and Rules reported the following as permanent officers of the convention: President, R. S. Horr, East Saginaw, Mich.; Vice Presidents, J. W. Palmer, Detroit; J. L. Switz, New York; J. W. Chapman, Council Bluffs; George Schneider, Chicago; W. I. Walker, Toledo; Charles Seymour, La Crosse, Wis.; John Dement, Dixon, Ill.; E. O. Stannard, St. Louis; Charles P. King, Peoria; C. F. Clarkson, Des Moines; William Pettit, Minneapolis; John W. Burdette, Secretary, Burlington, Iowa.

Charles A. Randolph, Secretary of the Chicago Board of Trade, spoke at great length on the subject before the convention and in favor of the Hennepin canal.

Letters of regret were read from Horatio Seymour, Secretary Windom, Govs. Pillsbury, Jerome and Cullom, Senators Allison, McDill, Saunders, Davis, Logan, Ingalls and Sawyer, and Congressman Farwell.

After the appointment by the chair of the necessary committees, the convention adjourned for the day.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

After the appointment of a Committee on Resolutions, speeches were called for. Ex-Gov. Stannard, of Missouri, complained of some strictures made by the Davenport Gazette, with reference to the position of the St. Louis delegates. He denied that there was opposition to the canal project, but Missouri men do not want to see the Mississippi river improvement slighted. They had thought the list of committees and the earlier form of the convention had a little too much Chicago in them. But that was all.

Ex-Gov. William Bross, of Chicago, replied to the St. Louis representative, and said Chicago was as much interested as St. Louis in the improvement of the Mississippi. There could be no difficulty between St. Louis and Chicago. Gov. Stannard had talked about the shipments of wheat amounting to 6,000,000 bushels. That amount would not fill one Chicago warehouse. Illinois paid last year $23,000,000 internal-revenue tax, and all she asked from the General Government was 5 per cent. of that amount for the improvement of her waterways.

The Hon. Julius C. Starr, of Peoria, pronounced in favor of improving all internal water ways and developing all possible highways of commerce. For this purpose the combination of all interests was needed. It was only by this means that Congress could be brought to appropriate money for improving the rivers and canals of the West.

At this point of the proceedings the welcome announcement was made that the Committee on Resolutions was ready to report, and the Chairman, Gen. Henderson, presented the following:

This convention, representing the people of the Mississippi valley and of the Northwest, in pursuance of the call of the convention, and in furtherance of the purposes thereof, unanimously declare:

1. That the Congress of the United States should devise by law and sustain by liberal and efficient appropriations a system of cheap transportation by water routes connecting the Mississippi river and its tributaries with the Eastern Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico.

2. That it has been the policy of Congress and the desire of the people of the Northwest for many years to inaugurate and complete a system of water-channel improvement, having the Mississippi for its base; that, to give greater efficiency to this policy, there should be constructed from the Mississippi river on the most direct and feasible route to the Illinois river at Hennepin, and thence to the lake at Chicago, a canal adequate to the present and future transportation needs of that great part of the Northwest to whose people such a work of internal improvement is an imperative necessity for relief from the excessive freight rates on the produce and commerce of the country, and that the work so long needed should be immediately commenced.

3. That the continued improvement of the Mississippi river under the auspices of the Mississippi River Commission, created by act of Congress, is a work of great national importance; that the Congress of the United States ought to prosecute that scheme of improvement by the most liberal appropriations, in a separate appropriation and bill therefor, and that we emphasize and enforce the united and earnest demand of the people of the entire Mississippi valley that Congress shall make prompt and adequate appropriations for the improvement of the river and its navigable tributaries from the falls of St. Anthony to the Gulf of Mexico, and that this convention has no sympathy with any policy that would depreciate or hinder this great enterprise of making fully navigable and building up a great commerce upon this central river—nature's great highway of the continent.

4. That we hail with peculiar satisfaction the increasing success of the barge-line system of transportation on the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the relief it was to the producers and shippers of the Mississippi valley in the cheapening of freights.

5. That we heartily favor the proposed cession of the Illinois and Michigan canal and the improvements on the Illinois river by the State of Illinois, and declare that the Erie canal should be made free of tolls; therefore, we hope for the early success of the efforts inaugurated to secure these results.

The following resolutions supplemental to the report of the Committee on Resolutions were presented by Mr. Russell, and adopted:

6. That the commission under the auspices of which this convention has been called be continued, with the proviso that its membership be enlarged by the selection of an additional member from each State represented in this body, which additional member shall be named by the delegates of the respective States, said commission to afterward elect its own officers and mature its own organization.

7. That the commission, when reorganized as contemplated herein, be requested to select two gentlemen from each State to present to Congress the appeal for the support to the work of internal improvement which is contemplated by the foregoing resolutions.

A number of resolutions handed to the committee were reported back without recommendation and without being read.

Mr. Edmusson, of Davenport, read the resolutions in regard to the continuance of the canal commission, which the committee has not considered germane to their work, but highly approved of.

Sam M. Clark, of Keokuk, moved to adopt the report.

A delegate from Council Bluffs moved to include the words "and Missouri valley" where the word "Mississippi" occurred.

Mr. Henderson said the committee had been unanimous throughout, and there had not been a ripple on the surface to disturb their harmony.

Mr. Starr, of Peoria, wanted something said about the Copperas Creek and Henry improvements in the resolutions.

Mr. Henderson thought it would do no good for the convention to say anything as to the cession by the State of Illinois to the General Government of these improvements.

Murry Nelson, of Chicago, moved to lay the Missouri valley amendment on the table. The vote was taken on the amendment direct, and it was sustained by a large majority.

Mr. Starr's resolution about Copperas creek was carried amid some confusion.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions was adopted unanimously, and the resolutions offered by Mr. Russell were also adopted.

Mr. Howard, of Toledo, called up and advocated the passage of the two resolutions in regard to Ohio canals.

Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, opposed the resolutions as inopportune.

Lieut. Gov. Campbell, of Missouri, favored, and Mayor Lake, of Minneapolis, opposed the resolutions as not germane.

Mr. Grinnell, of Iowa, pleaded for harmony, and asked the withdrawal of the Toledo resolutions.

They were voted down by a considerable majority.

After passing the customary resolutions of courtesy the convention adjourned sine die.

Appalling Catastrophe.

A terrible calamity, involving the loss of nearly 200 lives, occurred to the steamer Victoria at London, Ontario. "The ill-fated vessel," says a dispatch from London, "with over 600 excursionists on board, was returning from Spring Bank, and, when near the Cove railway bridge, one mile below the city, the boat suddenly collapsed like an egg shell and became a total wreck, level with the water's edge. All the passengers were instantly plunged into the stream, more than half of them being underneath the debris. The first news which reached the city was brought by survivors, who struggled through the streets wet and weary. The news fell like a thunderbolt, and a stampede took place for the spot. Arriving there, a terrible sight met the view. Fifty or sixty bodies had already been recovered and were lying on the green sward some distance up the bank. Those arriving from the city from every direction crowded around, anxious to see if any relatives were on board. Several hundred families were represented on the excursion, and the wail at the sight of the victims was heartrending. Fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters rushed about panic-stricken, endeavoring to identify relatives. By 7 o'clock about eighty bodies were recovered from under the wreck, where the water was twelve feet in depth. Almost every minute some victim was brought to the surface and conveyed to the boat. The steamer Princess Louise was early brought to the spot and the victims placed on the upper decks. Fires were lit on the bank overlooking the river, and petroleum torches were brought and the search continued. Up to the present hour about 150 corpses have been secured. Among the dead are James Robertson, Manager of the Bank of British North America; J. C. Meredith, Clerk of the Division Court; Wm. McBride, Assessor and Secretary of the Western Fair Association; Mrs. Wm. Ashbury, Wm. Millman, Montreal, commercial agent, and two sons of J. Rogers, plumber.

Mr. Matthews, night editor of the Advertiser, lost his wife and two children. Harry Smart, of the Free Press, lost wife, two children and a sister-in-law.

The whole city seems almost demented tonight. The accident was entirely due to gross carelessness. The boat was overcrowded to a disgraceful extent. The manager, George Parish, was expostulated with by several at Spring Bank, and urged not to let the boat go out in that overcrowded condition, but he is reported to have replied, "All right, I know my business," or something of that sort.

The Story of the Disaster, from Beginning to End.

[London Telegram to Chicago Tribune.]

Tuesday, the day of the horrible catastrophe, was the anniversary of Queen Victoria's birthday, and the great bulk of the people closed up their houses and went off for a day of innocent enjoyment. Several train loads took their departure for the lake shore at Port Stanley, others to Windsor and Sarnia, and about 2,000 went to Springbank, being carried thither by the three excursion steamers owned by the Thames Navigation Company. The day was pleasantly enjoyed in the customary recreations of a rural picnic, and, toward 5 o'clock, the homeward rush began. The rotten Victoria was the first boat up, and the rush to get on board and reach the city before supper-time was tremendous. Several people protested against the Captain of the craft allowing so many people to board her, but he was deaf to all entreaty, and allowed all who could find a place whereon to hang to come along. Groaning under the weight of some 600 people, who kept moving in masses from one side to another, the boat had a hard time of it. The main deck was packed so tightly that it was with difficulty that one could elbow his way; yet at times the mass of humanity would, as it were, congeal together, so as to leave a small vacant space, sometimes on one and sometimes on the other side of the deck. The hurricane deck also was crowded, but here there was none of that swaying back and forth, which marked the crowd below. A few adventurous spirits sought the seclusion of the boiler-deck and the engine-room, where they smoked their cigars and watched the movement of the machinery. All went well, or, at least, presumably, until a bend in the river was reached, about 200 yards below the Cove railroad bridge, and there the day of pleasure turned into a disaster. About 7 o'clock some persons arrived in the city with a wet and generally used-up appearance and spread the intelligence of what had befallen the Victoria. Rumors of all kinds began to spread like wildfire, but it was not for some time that the full significance of the news was realized. Then the general stampede for the river banks, to which the entire city seemed to join. Every road leading to the fatal spot had its line of people of both sexes, hurrying thither in a state of frenzied anxiety, some sobbing hysterically and questioning every one in their flight as to the fate of friends and relatives, whom they knew to have gone down the river. As each one arrived on the river bank overlooking the wreck and saw the ghastly upturned faces of the dead who had been taken out and laid upon the sod, or looked out upon the shattered bark which lay in fragments on the water, they gave vent to piteous exclamations of grief: "My God! such a sight I have never looked upon!" said one. "This is a dark day, indeed, for London!" exclaimed another. "My wife and child! Where are they?" "Oh, God, restore my little ones!" were prayers heard on all sides. On the wreck brave men, streaming with perspiration, and strong in their noble purpose, were working like heroes in recovering the bodies which lay underneath the shattered boards and timbers, and, as one after another were brought to the surface and carried tenderly to the green sward to add to the ghastly row, the crowds pressed forward eagerly to scan the features. Their faces lit with a strange anxiety. Here was some bereaved father or brother, clasping the limp form of a beloved daughter or sister, giving vent to their emotions in wails of anguish; there some mother or sister lamenting over the corpse of a son or brother, like Rachel weeping because they were not. Here and there knots of men worked vigorously to restore to life some beloved relative, practicing all the arts known to them, rubbing the hands and applying clothes heated at a neighboring fire, but all to no purpose. Vitality would not return, and the sorrowing friends gave up in despair. Meantime the work of rescuing went on, and the list swelled and swelled until it seemed as if the end would never come. As dusk deepened into the night the scene became more weird and terrible. Fires were lit upon the bank, shedding a lurid and fitful glare over the water, and showing the dreadful outlines in their most sinister aspect. The work of recovering the bodies was entered into with a heroic spirit by those who arrived early on the scene. Merchants, lawyers, workmen and all classes plunged into the water, and, borne up by rafts, began to hand the lifeless forms of the drowned ones out to those on the shore. Resuscitation was tried with all who were rescued within one-half hour, but only in one or two instances were the efforts successful. During the silent watches of the night, and by the lurid glare of wood-fires and petroleum torches, the work of rescuing the bodies of the drowned was carried on.

The Pay of Book-keepers.

In this city, where business is widely extended, a book-keeper who has his employer's confidence can keep the latter continually blinded in points of great importance. The merchant will inquire, "How much money have we in the bank, Mr. Brown?" Mr. Brown will reply generally in a correct manner; but he may, by ingeniously altering figures, make a delusive show. It is said that "figures will not lie." Naturally speaking they will not, but in the hands of a skillful accountant they may be made to do so in a very surprising manner. The book-keeper McGutchen, of the Ocean Bank, succeeded in robbing that institution of $66,000 before detection, while the book-keeper Leverich, of the City Bank, obtained $400,000 of that institution. This, however, was an unusual haul, and will not soon be equalled, but it shows what can be done. If lack of pay could be urged in extenuation, the book-keeper would have a powerful plea. This is always small in proportion to the work required. They are not and never will be paid more than enough to eke out a hard living. Some who have an unusually laborious and responsible position may get what is called a high salary—say $2,000; but such instances are very rare, and you can hire expert hands at $1,500. The hardest worked book-keeper I ever knew got only $2,000, and his labors nearly occasioned blindness. He had a very extensive set of books, and his neat hand and immense columns of figures were matters of admiration, but it was killing work. In large houses the book-keeper is occupied chiefly with the ledger, and has enough to do to attend to "posting accounts" and keeping the books balanced. He will have his monthly balance sheet, commonly called a "trial balance," ready by the first of the month, and the accurate balance between the debit and credit side will prove that the ledger has been kept correctly. If an error, even of only a dime, appear, it must be discovered at however great a cost of time and study, and I have known a book-keeper to spend three days looking up just such an item. Hence the work requires great care and an habitual exactness in figures.—New York Letter.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1881.

"THE doctrine of eternal punishment is a libel on God," said Pastor Brookman, of a Montreal Baptist church. Having made this declaration he lost no time in resigning.

ONE of the wealthiest settlers in Australia is Jem Mace, the noted champion of the prize ring, who landed in Melbourne two years ago with $50. He has made a fortune by speculating in mining stocks.

THE sons of a Cincinnati landlord scared an undesirable tenant out of a house by dangling a skeleton in the doorway at night, and then pulling the bell, thus creating the impression that death desired to call.

THE London Standard severely criticises the revised version of the New Testament. It is claimed that the revisers "have so revised the noblest book in the English language as to deprive it of much of its beauty, and they have destroyed many of its historical associations."

LAWYER SNYDER, of Cincinnati, took the occasion of a trial in court to say that Nannie Murray and Mary McKinney were "as bad in character as they were in face," and when he got outdoors they thrashed him soundly, but whether for the attack on their character or their looks is not explained.

WASHINGTON society is perturbed by the rumor that Secretary Lincoln has determined to send down among the alligators and out among the Indians those army officers who have for years been on detached duty in Washington, and have ornamented the drawing-rooms of the capital. We are told that this determination is the chief topic at weddings and other gatherings.

ON March 4, 1861, J. F. Morris, of Weathersford avenue, Hartford, Ct., set out in front of his residence a small elm tree which the neighbors christened the Lincoln Elm. It was planted at the day and hour of Lincoln's inauguration. It stands now a tree of fine proportions, about sixty feet high, in front of the Wetherbee residence, which was then Mr. Morris' home.

UTAH is just now the chosen field for considerable Christian missionary work. There are forty-four Presbyterian missionaries in the Territory, maintained at an annual cost of $36,000, the Congregationalists are spending $30,000 in new school houses and churches, the Methodists have twenty missionaries on the ground, and other denominations are represented. These tremendous onslaughts have incited the Mormons to renewed zeal.

THE church of Talmage in Brooklyn must be by far the largest Presbyterian church in the world. Last Sunday, after presenting the statistics of his late revival, as the result of which 310 persons had been added to the number, he gave the total membership of his flock at 2,589. There are few Protestant churches anywhere, and of any of the different varieties of religious belief, which can show so great a body of members as that.

"SECRETARY LINCOLN is said to be boyish in his official duties," says the Albany Journal. Commenting upon which the Chicago Inter Ocean patly remarks: "Yes, and they used to charge that his father was not solemn enough, and would tell a funny story even when great statesmen were getting out their handkerchiefs to weep. Critics will find out that the 'boyish' ways do not interfere with a wise discharge of official business. 'Bob' is not much of a spread eagle, and he could not be an owl if he tried."

NICHOLAS, the Grand Duke who has been exiled from Russia for his supposed relations with the Nihilists, is a cousin of the Czar and an inveterate scapegrace. His escapade with the American adventuress, Miss Hattie Blackford, better known as Fanny Lear, brought him into unenviable notoriety. He was the black sheep of the Romanoffs, and what with stealing diamonds, playing Don Juan and engaging in Nihilist plots, there was no other resource left but to put him where he can do no further harm to himself or the ruler of the Russias.

THE Rev. Mr. Anthony, a San Francisco Methodist pastor, said in a lecture pertinent to the unveiling of the Farragut statue: "A man was present who positively tied the ropes around the Admiral when he was in the maintop at the battle of Mobile. I would not believe it if a thousand men told it to me, for Farragut told me that he never was lashed to the masts at all. 'Why should I be tied?' said he. 'Were they afraid I would run away?' The truth of it was that during the fight there was so much smoke that he could not see from the deck, and so, taking his speaking tube, he ascended the shrouds, round after round, keeping above the smoke as it rose, so as to tell his gunners where to direct their fire, and these were his exact words about it to me, long afterward: 'I was well nigh up to the maintop when the battle was over, but certainly I was not lashed there.'"

THE official report of the crops of Russia in part explains the unexpected demand for wheat from Europe. The wheat crop of Russia is placed at 14,100,000 quintals, against 16,300,000 as the average crop, but the main loss was in rye. The yield is estimated at 32,000,000 quintals, whereas 58,200,000 is an average crop. There was also a deficiency of 3,000,000 quintals of barley and 9,000,000 of oats, beside about 70,000,000 quintals of potatoes. The deficiency in rye only, for all Germany, is estimated at 112,000,000 bushels. Nor can Russia supply the want, as usual. Hence, a greater demand for American wheat.

INDIANA NEWS.

NEW ALBANY is much dissatisfied with its police force.

THE Court House at Connersville is to be remodeled at a cost of $4,000.

GOLD is said to have been discovered in Scott county, near the Jefferson county line.

SUSPENSIONS of policemen in Evansville average one a week, mostly for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

ELDER MILLER, of the Jeffersonville colored Baptist church, on Sunday immersed, among others, Anna Mills, a negress whom he said was over 100 years old.

A DISEASE resembling lung fever has made its appearance among the horses of Jackson township, Huntington county, which causes death in a very short time.

THE Ohio Falls Car Company has in course of construction at Jeffersonville thirteen passenger coaches for Western roads. It has paid out to employes $45,000 the present week.

THE act constituting the State Board of Health does not go into effect until the laws are published, and the four physicians who are to compose the board will not, therefore, be chosen before the end of July.

A NUMBER of aligator gars, a fish very rarely found in Northern rivers, have been captured recently in the Wabash near Logansport. The gar has a snake-like body, a long, slim snout, and is altogether a villainous-looking reptile.

JUDGE A. B. CARLTON, of Terre Haute, has fallen heir to a large estate from a deceased bachelor relative who resided in Kentucky. It is estimated that the Judge's share in the estate will be over $20,000. The property lies chiefly at or near Chillicothe, Ohio.

THE work of making the soundings for the bridge at Sand island is in progress on the Kentucky side, and will soon be commenced on the Indiana side. The corner stone, it is announced, will be laid with great pomp and ceremony on or about the 4th of July.

THE United States snag boat K. W. Lind has arrived at Terre Haute for the purpose of commencing operations on the Wabash river. All obstructions between the city and the mouth of the river will be removed at once, and it is hoped to make the Wabash navigable for large boats the year round.

AS A skiff containing two women and three men was crossing the river at Evansville, it was run down by the steamer Thanhauser, with a tow of barges, and the women and one of the men were drowned. The occupants of the boat were all negroes with the exception of one of the women, who was white.

A SINGULAR story comes from Jackson township, Decatur county, of a bachelor who bought a neighbor's buxom wife of her impecunious husband for $100, with the understanding that the latter was to retain charge of the two children. He then sold his farm and "went West," and it is reported that the woman in the case has also disappeared.

DR. RAMEY, of Zenas, has a chicken which has four legs, the two rear ones being placed one behind the other. The third leg has a perfect foot, and, when it crows, the chicken leans back and rests on this third foot, being enabled thereby to get his head back in a more aristocratic manner than any other rooster can do.

MR. WM. C. SAMPSON, house father at the Reform School for some time past, last week received a telegram from Golden, Col., giving him notice of his appointment as Superintendent of the Colorado State Reform School, and Mrs. Sampson, his wife, as matron. Immediately upon receipt of this he telegraphed their acceptance.

THE examination of applicants for admission to the West Point and Annapolis military schools was held in Crawfordsville a short time ago. Nineteen young men presented themselves, and all passed very creditable examinations. The fortunate ones were: To West Point, Thomas J. Stunkord, of Terre Haute; alternate, Will Grimes, of Rockville. To Annapolis, Lewis Cumberland, of Crawfordsville; alternate, Percy Bates, of Rockville.

SAMUEL CUNNINGHAM, an old and well-known citizen of Crawford county, and a popular river pilot, was sent to the insane asylum at Indianapolis, ten or twelve days ago, from his home at Leavenworth, under the supposition of insanity. Twenty years ago he was bitten by a rabid dog. The wound healed, but the virus remained in his system. He died at the asylum, his symptoms being precisely those of hydrophobia.

IN relation to the wool clip of 1881, information has been gathered from nineteen counties in Southern Indiana, in which there were in 1880 232,634 sheep, and the wool clip of that year was given as 637,592 pounds, or nearly three pounds to the head, not counting off anything for lambs. The number of sheep in these nineteen counties has been considerably increased since the clip of 1880, as the farmers in the southern counties of Indiana are annually increasing their wool growing as well as improving the breeds of their flocks. It is safe to say that the clip of 1881 in these nineteen counties will exceed that of 1880 by from 75,000 to 100,000 pounds.

POLITICAL NOTES.

BUT what's to become of Gorham and Riddleberger? That's the question.

IN 1884, who will there be in the Republican camp to save Indiana and secure New York? For want of a Dorsey and a Roscoe, star-route steals and custom house sops, is this unhappy country to go headlong to the devil and the Democrats?

AND what is to become of repudiation in Virginia? Isn't the Republican party going to stand by the Readjusters of the Old Dominion? Is Mahone to be left upon the Senate floor to be swept out with the spittoons, among which he seems to have become entangled?

WHEN a mother finds her first-born and only babe doing the slightest thing unusual, says the Chicago Times, no matter how harmless it may seem to the practiced eye, she is in agony until the doctor, for whom she has dispatched in hot haste, arrives. And the Republican Senators—not a zephyr blows, not a rumor flies, but in an agony of fear they cry: "For God's sake, quick, another caucus!" They dare not step unless with the advice and consent of caucus. They are caucus-bound, caucus-governed, caucus-bossed.

MR. DAWES' hand continues on the rudder of the Steering Committee, but the pesky craft has sprung a leak. Mr. Dawes will not call up his resolution to proceed to the election of a shameless defender of the star-route thieves as Secretary of the Senate, and a Virginia Repudiationist as its Sergeant-at-Arms. Mr. Mahone's vote is of no consequence now, and the Republicans will doubtless swear that it is a great mistake and that they never meant to aid repudiation in Virginia. For the Senator from Massachusetts there is this consolation about it all: Dawes is still at liberty to go on telling whoppers, and no man in the Senate has given greater evidence of skill in that direction.

BITTERLY does Mahone rue the situation. Wringing his hands, he exclaims in the presence of a correspondent: "Well, this places me in a devil of a fix. I don't like it. I don't understand it, to begin with. Garfield's my friend and Conkling's my friend. I want them to be friends. I have regretted the events of the past few weeks, in connection with these New York nominations; still I hope that it will all come out right in the end. I want to see the Republican party solid—every element in it in harmony with every other. It is the party of progress, of liberty, of liberal ideas. It ought not to be torn with dissensions and strifes." Mahone used to labor under the impression that he was the center of the universe, but he's finding out that his importance was merely an accident, it being his vote, not himself, that was wanted. He now sinks back to his ordinary level, which is low-water mark. —Chicago Times.

When the Morey letter was unearthed Garfield shrieked to Jewell, "Pursue the villains." They are not caught yet. Nobody outside of the White House will ever know whether Garfield wrote the Morey letter or not. So will it be with Brady and the star-route contractors. Nobody in a high position will be molested. Brother Dorsey knows too much. He knows just how Indiana was carried, how much it cost and where the money came from. The story that Postmaster James does not care whither his investigation leads him will do to amuse the elderly children who swear by Harper's Weekly, but nobody who ever saw a national convention will believe it. A few contractors may be indicted, but neither Mr. James nor Atty. Gen. MacVeagh will be permitted to disturb a hair in the head of either Brady or Dorsey. A Democratic administration would have got to the bottom of the postal frauds in short order, but the money contributed by Brady and collected by Dorsey rendered a Democratic administration inconsistent with the "forms of law." If there was a thief in the case, Mr. Garfield consented to him, and the villain will not be pursued.—New York Mercury.

NEXT!

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

It is now the President's turn to tell what he knows and thinks of Conkling. Then the country will learn from the highest Republican sources of authority and information of what sort of material both wings of the Republican party are composed. From the lips of the commanding Republican Senator and from the lips of the Republican President the people of the United States will learn what are the purposes, what the mission, what the nature of the Republican party. Since the 4th of March last the Republican party has done more to impeach itself, more to bring itself into disrepute with the fair-minded people of the country than the entire Democratic party has been able to in fifteen years. The two parties were exactly evenly balanced last November. The accidents of the electoral machinery gave the Presidency to Garfield, while Gen. Hancock carried one-half of the States and one-half of the popular vote. Since that time, within two months, the Republican party has lost a big fraction of the public esteem. First came the Mahone bargain—a most disreputable affair. Then came Riddleberger, as the great national issue. Then came Gorham, Brady's partner, editor and defender, as another great national issue. Then came the Brady exposure, showing by what men and by what methods Garfield was elected. The people of the country suddenly opened their eyes to the fact that they had elected a President, not under the lead of patriotic impulses, but by the manipulations of public peculators, by the potency of stolen money; so that the same men raped the public treasury and the public opinion. The Dorseys, who were famously dined, and the Bradys, who were illustriously invited to do all they could to elect Garfield, were caught one day with their masks off. The country knows a part only of what was thus disclosed. But it may be urged that these men were not representative Republicans. To be sure, Mahone, who constitutes one-half of the Republican majority in the Senate, is not a Republican, and Riddleberger, to put whom in office the Republican Senators blockaded the public business two months, is not a Republican. These were the evidences of an infamous bargain whose end was spoiled. But Gorham had been Secretary of the Senate ten years, and is the editor of the Republican organ at the capital, and Brady was Second-Assistant Postmaster General of the United States. These may be called representative Republicans. But if it is still said that this is only the sole of the foot of the Republican party, let us look upward to the crown of its head. We shall find that it is spoils still.

The statement of the case of Conkling vs. The President, as given by the Senator, is before the public. It is in order now to hear the case of The President vs. Conkling, which we doubtless shall soon do. We shall then have heard from both wings of the Republican party, and shall have learned its character from the crown of its head to the sole of its foot. The country will note the fact that this quarrel in which the President and the leading Republican Senator are engaged has about it no aroma of patriotism, no suspicion of a great, broad principle, on either hand. The country knows that these charges, if true, indicate a disgraceful state of affairs in the party that elected the Executive. It will be useless to attempt to make the President the scapegoat for all of the offenses of the party. The country will also believe that it is in the power of the President to make truthful charges against Senator Conkling equally damaging or more damaging. The President should, in self-defense, state his side of the question or authorize a statement. The President owes this to himself, no matter what its effect upon Conkling, for Conkling has not spared him. Then, from the two great leaders, "representative Republicans," we shall all learn the truth about the entire Republican party. There is no wide-spread sympathy in the land for Conkling. At most, he has only been the victim of his own methods. The profound sympathy is for the republic which is controlled by such methods and such men. Conkling is probably the most distinguished representative of the spoils system in government to be found in the republic to-day. His own statement of his own game is a confession that he was, or may be, beaten at the spoils game by the President. He acknowledges himself guilty of the same offenses with which he charges the President. By his own statement, neither he nor the President rose in patriotism above the level of "the swag;" and of such is the Republican party. And thousands of people last fall were seduced by one of these spoils heroes into voting for the other. O ye hypocrites! We do not say that these representative men ought to be ashamed; they are beyond shame. The voters of the United States ought to be ashamed. We await the next development with interest. Mr. President: What of Senator Conkling?

Blood Letting in England Fifty Years Ago.

The Pharmacopœia of fifty years ago contained the names of 444 drugs and their preparations, whilst that of to-day contains no fewer than 802. The former did not contain the names of quinine, morphia, or iodine, three of the most commonly used drugs of the present day. In fact, so frequently are they prescribed in one form or other, that one wonders how the doctors managed without the two latter. Quinine was in use to a certain extent, though not officially sanctioned; but where one grain was then used I believe a hundred are now. The system of treating many diseases has indeed been completely revolutionized. Speaking generally, the practice used to be to pull down the system; now it is to build it up by a freer use of quinine and other tonics.

But in nothing is the change more striking than in regard to the common habit of blood letting, as it was called. I suppose that in the last century it was even more common than it was at the time we speak of, so that if a person fell down in the streets from exhaustion he was sure to be bled. Though the practice was becoming more restricted, yet it was very prevalent fifty years ago. I well remember my brother suffering from rheumatic fever, and seeing Mr. Gardom, one of the best surgeons in Salford, draw a basin full of blood from his arm—a thing which no sane medical man would do at the present day. Not only was the lancet used in this way, but cupping and the application of leeches was continually resorted to in cases of inflammation, which it was supposed otherwise impossible to subdue. It was no wonder if the doctors prescribed such treatment that the public believed in its utility. It was no uncommon thing to be told by persons that they found it conducive to their health to be bled periodically, and that such treatment was necessary for them. I remember a delicate gentleman who would always attribute his not feeling well to having neglected his periodical blood letting. No wonder he died in the prime of life. —Reminiscences of Manchester.

The Happy Gnat and the Bull.

A very short-lived, conceited little gnat settled on the horn of a bull, and sat there for some time. At last, in despair of attracting attention, the insect remarked that he supposed he had been a great burden to the bull all this time.

"Not in the least," responded the bull, pleasantly, becoming at last aware of the existence of the gnat. "I did not know you had come, and I shall not miss you when you go away. Shooh, fly, don't bodder me!"

"Ah!" exclaimed the gnat, in triumph, "I have at last compelled you to recognize me."

Moral: Some men are of more consequence in their own eyes than in the eyes of their neighbors.—Galveston News.

Oatmeal.

The use of this article of food has increased greatly during the past few years, and, if all we hear and read in its favor be true, it should be used to even a greater extent. The Scotch are noted as a robust and healthy people, and they make great use of oatmeal in various ways. We believe it would be better for our farmer friends to have this article on their breakfast tables every morning than to eat so much pork as many do. It must be healthful and nourishing for children as well as adults. Get a good article and have it well cooked, and served with cream and a little sugar, and it is good. Let those who do not think so try it for six months or a year, and they will not do without it ever after.

that are always wetting their beds, ought not to be scolded and punished for what they cannot help. They need a medicine having a tonic effect on the kidneys and urinary organs. Such a medicine is Kidney-Wort. It has specific action. Do not fail to get it for them.—[Exchange.

Examination Of Teachers.

Examinations for the year commencing June 1, 1879, will be held regularly, in the school building south of the jail, in Auburn, the last Saturday of each month. Special examinations at other points on due notice.

W. H. MACINTOSH.

"My Back Aches So, and I feel miserable," said a hard-working man. The doctor questioned him and found that he had been habitually costive for years, that now his kidneys were disordered and his whole system deranged. Kidney Wort was recommended and faithfully taken and in a short time every trouble was removd. The cleansing and tonic power of this medicine on the bowels and kidneys is wonderful.—[Congregationalist

Nitrate of Soda in Nevada.

The discovery of nitrate of soda at Brown's Station, Humboldt county Nevada, says the San Francisco Call, may lead to results vastly important to the Pacific slope and the country at large. This valuable salt has been found in extensive beds only in the Province of Tarapaca, among the hills which skirt the coast of Peru. These beds extend over a territory of one hundred and fifty miles. The hills are covered with a light sandy marl, mixed with minute fragment of shell. When this covering yields and crackles beneath the feet it indicates the presence of the nitrate of soda. On digging down a foot or two the salt is found, overlaid usually by a strata of common salt. Portions of this nitrate of soda, are of a sugar-like whiteness, other portions being colored reddish-brown, lemon-yellow and gray A large portion of the provincials find employment in extracting and refining the salt, which is shipped from Iquique. In 1887, the exportation aggregated 150,000 quintals, England consuming two-thirds and France one-third. The nitrate mines have long been the chief wealth of that section of the country, and their importance can be imagined, when it is remembered that the Peru-Chilian war grew out of disputes over the revenues of those fields.

Some time ago, the state Mineralogist of California, Mr. Hanks, received samples of crystalized nitrate of soda from the locality named above. Tests proved the salt to be of good quality and exceedingly valuable. Mr. Hanks advises prospecting the desert regions, where evidences of volcanic action are present, or where alkalies are plentiful The test is simple and admissible of no mistake. The suspected crystal or salt should be reduced to a powder, and intimately mixed with an equal amount of charcoal. This, when placed upon a heated iron, a red hot shovel for instance, will deflagrate flash like powder—the fire running from graid to grain in a similar manner. The compound is powder minus sulphur.

Where it is suspected that the earth is strongly impregnated with the nitrate take a kettle and fill it two thirds full of the earth and the remainder with water. Heat it, stirring the while, and when thoroughly mixed and heated, so that the water will have become saturated with the salt, allow the solution to settle. The liquid poured off, the mud will contain the salt, which is secured by evaporating. The crystal is then tested as before. The test is accurate, and may be applied by anyone, without apparatus.

A good nitrate mine is more valuable than a gold mine. The cost of extracting the salt at Tarapaca, where it is principally secured by the process of lixiviation, above described, is as follows: Reckoning for each 100 pounds, labor is set down at 62 cents; fuel, 38 cents; tools and powder, when blasting is necessary, 12 cents; transportation to Iquique, 75 cents; a total of about $1 87

In quantity, the salt sells for about $8 the hundred pounds. The profit is apparent. The uses to which nitrate of soda is put are numerous. It is substituted for nitrate of potash—saltpeter—to which it is closely allied, in preserving meats, as in curing hams, pickling pork and corned beef, the manufacture of nitric acid, and for various other purposes. Owing to its deliquescent properties, it has not been employed in the manufacture of gunpowder, although it is not known but in some varieties of explosives it might be employed, if it is not already. Careful search over the regions given over to arid plains and lava beds may result in the discovery of hitherto unsuspected mines of wealth.

From the Hub.

There is perhaps no tonic offered to the people that possesses as much real intrinsic value as the Hop Bitters. Just at this season of the year, when the stomach needs an appetizer, or the blood needs purifying, the cheapest and best remedy is Hop Bitters. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, don't wait until you are prostrated by a disease, that may take months for you to recover in.—[Boston Globe.

Woman's Wisdom.

"She insists that it is more importance, that her family shall be kept in full health, than that she should have all the fashionable dresses and styles of the times. She therefore sees to it, that each member of her family is supplied with enough Hop Bitters, at the first appearance of any symptoms of ill health, to prevent a fit of sickness with attendant expense, care and anxiety. All women should exercise their wisdom in this way."—[New Haven Palladium.

The Faculty of Purdue University, on receipt of one or more applications for admittance to that institution of learning, will send to the county superintendent, printed questions with full directions for their use, sets for applicants for admission to the Freshman class. Examination will be held at the July examination of teachers, and the papers will be sent for grading. Thus any person making application for such examination as early as July 10, can be examined at home, thereby saving the expense of a trip to Lafayette Any intended applicant will please send his name to the county superintendent on or before July 10.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements it having been carried for over twenty years and it remains perfect. We refer to the JAS BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold seamless pendants and center, solid joints crown pieces etc, all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

Organization of the State for Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment.

The state executive committee of the Grand Temperance Council of Indiana, met in Indianapolis, May 26 and 26, to perfect more fully the plans determined upon by the council, for the prohibitory constitutional amendment work in the state. The financial plan was carefully considered and revised, with a view to making it more successful in raising the funds absolutely necessary to carry out the campaign for constitutional prohibition. A state central committee of one man from each political party in each county was selected, so far as suitable persons were known, and arrangements made to correspond with counties and secure the remainder, and perfect the organization of the committee, and call it together as early as practicable. The object of such a committee is to organize the entire temperance sentiment of the state in all parties, and preserve the work from becoming partisan, and to secure united and universal counsel among the temperance people of the state, and bring to bear upon the work the higest and best political wisdom and experience. Miss Auretta Hoyt, of Indianapolis, was appointed permanent secretary of the state executive committee. The executive committee adopted the following as the sense and policy of the committee and requested its publication by the press of the state:

The anti prohibition league, at a recent meeting at Indianapolis, after protracted discussion of the prohibition question, passed certain resolutions. Among other things they

Resolved, that as citizens and electors of this state, we pledge ourselves to support no candi dates in the coming state and legislative election, who do not with us condemn and oppose the tyranical prohibition system, the proposed prohibitory constitutional amendment, and other prohibitory legislation.

Thus the issue is made a false one to start with. A dishonest man will resort to dishonest means to carry his point. The question for the next legislature is not one of prohibiton. No member of it will be called upon to cast a vote for prohibition. The legislature will have nothing to do with that question. That question is one for the people, and not for the legislature.

Our people are composed of three classes—native Americans, law-obeying, law-respecting citizens of foreign birth, and a third class who respect neither law, morals nor public opinion when they would gratify their selfish desires.

We are not yet tired of American institutions. Our government was formed by wise men, with pure hearts. Its foundation principle is, the people shall control. "The people" means a majority of the people.

By looking at the names signed to these anti-prohibition resolutions, it will be seen that they were not drafted or signed by men born under a free flag. They may be naturalized, but naturalized citizenship does not give them the right to maintain an evil by the destruction of the American idea that the people have the right to control, and the wisdom and patriotism of an American citizen will not permit the foundation to be taken from under the structure, erected by patriotic hands, under the shadow of whose dome the oppressed of all nations may find rest and peace.

Majorities do control, and will control this government. The question for the next legislature, as presented by these anti-prohibitionists, is not whether we shall have prohibition or not, but is: Shall the legislature permit the people to enjoy the privilege of being American citizens?

The question is not now presented whether, as they say, men are to have their property or business ruined, but the question they present is deeper and broader. It is this: Shall an American be robbed of his citizenship, and our government of its cardinal virtue? And this destruction of citizenship is evoked in order to maintain the greatest curse and crime of the age.

If prohibition is wrong, let the people, not the saloon-keepers, say so. If the government is wrong, let the American people—its friends—say so, not its enemies, who would destroy it in order to satisfy selfish appetites and cupidity.

The people of Indiana will not be deceived by a false issue. The question for the next legislature is not, "shall we have prohibition," but "shall we have the right to vote upon it?" Temperance men only ask that the question be submitted. When the proper time comes, their appeal will be to the judgment and heart of the voter.

But from the candidate—especially since the action of the liquor interests—the dem [illegible] will be that the people have the right to exercise their citizenship. Therefore, in order that no misunderstandings arise,

Resolved, that each candidate, in each political party, for the state senate and house of representatives, in the year 1883, in Indiana, be asked to answer the following question; said answer to be positively in the affirmative or negative: "If elected to the state legislature, in the house or senate, will you support and vote to submit the pending prohibitory constitutional amendment to the vote of the people for their adoption or rejection?" Said question to be given in writing by the state central committee of the Grand Temperance Council, and to be answered in writing by the candidate. A refusal to reply to said question by said candidate, to be considered equivalent to a negative answer.

Dr. J. W. F. Gerrish, Seymour, president; M. E. Shiel, Seymour, corresponding secretary; F. A. Friedley, New Albany, H. W. Harrington, Indianapolis, J. V. R. Miller, Evansville, J. W. Copner, Covington, C. Buchanan, Evansville, E. B. Reynolds, Hagerstown, executive committee; Auretta Hoyt, secretary executive committee.

W. H. Trammel, of Huntington, A. E. Pierce, of LaFayette, members of the executive committee, were unavoidably detained from the meeting.

Whistling to a Squirrel.

One afternoon last summer, when out looking for game, I sat down on a pile of rails to rest. Pretty soon I discovered in an oak tree some twenty yards away, a red squirrel stretched at full length on a limb taking a sunbath. Instead of raising my rifle and sending a ball through the little fellow—it's a mighty mean sportsman that endeavors to kill all he sees—I decided to give him a little pleasure if I could, so I began to whistle the airof that popular ditty, "I love thee, sweet Nora O'Neil." In a twinkling the squirrel was on his legs, his tail over his back, his head cocked to one side listening to me; a moment of irresolution and then he scampered down the trunk of the tree to the ground and started toward me. He came a few yards, stopped, sat up on end and listened again. I was careful not to move and kept on whistling. After waiting a moment, the little beauty came on, jumped up on the pile of rails ran along within four feet of me, halted, went up on end again, made an umbrella of his tail, tipped his head to one side, looked at me with all the gravity of a justice of the peace at his first trial, and yet if ever a creature's eyes beamed with pleasure, his did.

I did not move, but after a little I abruptly changed the tune to the "Sweet By and By." Chut! Why, with the first notes of the different tune away went the squirrel. I did not move, only I shook with surpressed laughter, and as well as I could kept on whistling. In a minute or two, back came the squirrel, going through all the cunning maneuvers of his first approach, and once more took a seat before me on the rails. I watched him, and actually thought he was trying to pucker up his mouth and whistle.

Once again I changed the tune, this time to "Yankee Doodle," and as before, with the first note of change, away scampered the squirrel. Unable to control my resibilities longer, I laughed aloud, and after that I couldn't call my little friend to me.

I wonder how many of my so-called true sportsmen ever seek to think of any pleasure in connection with such beautiful little creatures, save the savage and unmanly pleasure of taking away their lives.

A New American Gem.

At the last meeting of the New York Academy of Science, Mr G. F. Kunz read a short paper upon the new mineral "hiddenite," discovered not long ago in North Carolina by Wm. E. Hidden, mineralogist. The mineral constitutes a new gem, of the emerald class, and is known in the trade as lithia emerald, owing to the presence of lithia as one of its chemical constituents. We have seen some specimens of this gem, and they are indeed most beautiful objects to the eye. The stone has a pure delightful green tint with a liquid brilliancy that is quite distinctive and remarkable. It sells for about the same price as the diamond. Mr. Hidden tells us that the mineral is found in a narrow chimney in the rocks not more than two feet long by two and a half inches wide and having an inclination of almost seven degrees.—Scientific American.

New York Letter.

NEW YORK, MAY 24, 1881.

From time immemorial, the "merry month of May" has been deemed the season for rejoicing, and New York has had, for once, her grand jubilee over the return of spring, in the Musical Festival which took place last week. Nothing could be happier than the thought of holding such a festival at this time of the year. It was like ushering in the spring with a grand burst of melody.

The festival was held in the Seventh Regiment Armory, which accommodates over twelve thousand people. There were over two thousand musicians in the chorus and orchestra led by Dr. Damrosch. Among these were two hundred and fifty boys, whose sweet voices resembled the singing of seraphs in Paradise more than anything else which fancy could suggest. The leading soloists were Mme. Gerster, Miss Cary, Signor Campanini, and Herr Remmertz. Eighty thousand people attended the festival, and the receipts were about $90,000.

CONEY ISLAND.

As the summer draws near, New Yorkers turn their eyes longingly towards Coney Island, which is such a little distance away and already one of the most charmig seaside resorts. It will be the rendezvous of politicians this summer for it is said that Secretary Blaine, Vice-President Arthur, and other political lights have already engaged their rooms there for the season. Thenthe modest individual who receives no high office from Uncle Sam, will have at least the delight of laughing at these grave dignitaries as they go down into the solemn waves, looking as forlorn and as absurd as the humblest, in the grotesque bathing costume of the period.

SCIENCE, LITERATURE AND ART.

New York is fast becoming the great centre for much that is distinguished in the scientific, literary and artistic world. Edison, the great inventor of the age, now lives in Fifth avenue, and soon our streets will be ablaze with electric lights. Little did Franklin dream of the vast resources of electricity, when he went flying that historical kite, and of the millions there was in it for posterity. Edison is rich, and still has innumerable gold mines in his brain; but he is not the only inventive genus of the age. Just now, the talk of the town, in scientific and other circles, is of an electric hair brush, whose inventor is said to have already reaped his million. The lucky man this time is a Dr. Scott, an English gentleman, we believe from London; and our fashionable swells have a serious grudge against him for crossing the seas to rejuvenate the old beaux. For, not only is this marvellous brush warranted to cure a headache in five minutes, but it is also averred that it will make an ancient maiden as youthful and bright as Hebe, by restoring her faded tresses; and, moreover, that under its magical skill, even an old bachelor's pate may become,

A thing of beauty and a joy forever!

So much for the new marvel in electricity; and when will the age of wonders cease? In the people are discussing Carlyle's unlucky "Reminiscences," and since Lord Beaconfield's death, "Lothair" and "Endymion" are the novels mostly in demand. Disraeli, like Thackeray, is sure to introduce you into good society, and to keep you there until the end of the volume. Even his "heavy villains" move in the first circles and are apparently gentlemen of high degree. As for Carlyle, women and Americans have little reason to be charmed with his "Reminiscences." The bitterness of the cynic is upon every page, and it might have been better, perhaps, for Carlyle, had some blundering housemaid stolen his MSS. also with which to light the kitchen fire, as did the damsel in John Stuart Mills' household, who cooked the philosopher's breakfast with the first MSS. volume of Carlyle's "French Revolution."

Mr. Joaquin Miller, the "Poet of the Sierras," has settled down in New York, and has recently published a novel entitled "The Shadows of Shasta," in which the cause of the poor Indian is warmly espoused, and the army handled without gloves. Mr Miller looks the romantic poet he is. He has deep blue eyes, a Shaksperian head with brown, flowing locks, and, although quite civilized, still clings to moccasins and other mementoes of the days when he dwelt among his "good friends the Modocs." The poet's novel is dedicated to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the editor of the New York Tribune, who has recently married a California heiress of millions, and gone to Europe to pass his honey moon—where may all good wishes follow him!

Editors do sometimes fall into luck, although the public does not always give them the credit for having deserved it. Rumor has it that Mr. James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald, is engaged to a veritable princess—and now journalists are more aspiring than ever in their ideas!

THEATRICAL CELEBRITIES.

Lotta is once more beguiling our susceptible youths with her quips and capers, and Mary Anderson, having completed a most prosperous season, will summer in her cottage at Long Branch. Poor little Mauricio Dengremont, the boy violinist, who has charmed all the world with his art, is said to be dangerously ill. The musical world will lose one of its brightest stars should this young genius be taken from us, and it is ardently hoped that his life will be spared. Mlle. Sarah Bernhardt has sailed gayly away for Europe, bearing with her $200,000, a snug little sum, which would last a New York belle a life time for pin money. Who would not be a theatrical star of the first magnitude?

A NEW YORK CREMATORY.

New York has already its cremation society, and there are those in our midst malicious enough to suggest, that if the street commissioners could only be furnaced at once, other citizens of this great metropolis might have a new lease of life. This is rather sarcastic upon the City Fathers of Gotham. But the grumblers are always abroad, and, in despite of them all, New York is still one of the merriest places on this side of the Atlantic, and may her domains and her pleasures never grow less!

An Old Offender Arrested.

(London Telegraph.)

In a Galician village not far from Cracow a modern version of the old farce, the devil to pay, with some entirely new effects, would appear to have been recently produced. The hero of this diverting performance proved to be an official personage, the judge of the village in question, who had assumed the character of "Old Nick" for highly reprehensible purposes. Having learned that an old peasant woman, resident of this district, had won a prize of 300 florins in the Cracow lottery, he bethought him of a strategem by which those ill-gotten gains might by transferred to his own possession. Accordingly, dressed like the devil, he presented himself, as the clock struck midnight, at the old woman's lonely dwelling, aroused her from her slumbers, and in a hollow voice, commanded her to hand over her winnings, upon the ground that "all sums accruing from lottery speculations were his perquisite, by him to be applied to the corruption of human souls." The terrified woman at once produced seventy-five florins, protesting that she had that day lodged the balance in the Cracow Savings Bank; whereupon the devil informed her, with dreadful threats of infernal torment should she fail to fulfill his behests, that he would return the following night, at the same hour, to receive the remainder. Next morning the poor old lady applied to the savings bank for her deposit. The manager, surprised that she should wish to draw it out so soon after having lodged it, inquired into her reason for so doing, and elicited a full confession of her adventure of the previous night. When his satanic majesty called, at 12 p. m., for the balance of his "perquisite," he was received by two gendarmes, who hand-cuffed him, marched him off to Cracow, and there delivered him to the secular arm, which will probably disable him from playing the devil for some time to come.

The First Circus in Wabash.

Jim Baylor's reminiscences of olden times in Wabash are probably accurate and we interviewed him the other day in regard to the first circus that visited Wabash. Jim couldn't give the name of the "Monster aggregation," but said it was just before the August election in 1841, and that the show pitched its tents on the corner of Wabash and Canal streets, upon the ground now occupied by McClure's grocery store, the Wabash county bank, &c. Incidentaly Jim accounted for the fact of his recollecting the date so well by a circumstance which occured in the ring after the show. Jim was the hero of the "circumstance." It was a wrestling match between himself and James Ambers, now a resident of Iowa, in which Wabash was victorious over the surrounding county.—[Wabash Plain Dealer.

Why the Prairies are Treeless.

(Philadelphia Press.)

A curious and interesting explanation of the absence of trees on the great western prairies was given at the meeting of the Academy of Natural Science by Mr. Thomas Meeham. Numberless theories have been advanced by students in natural history why the great feeding ground of the buffalo should be without arborescent vegetation, the principal one which is supported by distinguished authors being that of climatic influences. Mr. Meeham's theory is, that the absence of trees is due to artificial causes altogether. Taught by their necessities the early Indians made it a practice annually to fire the high grass of the prairies, which had the effect of making the growth more luxuriant and consequently more inviting to the vast herds of buffalo, on which the aborigines depended greatly for sustenance. It has been conclusively settled that no vegetation, save the hardy prairie grass, will appear on ground over which fires have swept until another season, so that the yearly prairie fires extended the area of the plateau until they had become almost measureless. Mr. Meeham cited several instances where trees had grown when the firing had been discontinued. The hypothesis was both pleasing and plausible, and has excited some discussion among the savants.

The Census in Hindostan.

The singular fears of the East Indians respecting the late census were highly remarkable. In Calcutta on the eventful night the streets were deserted from early in the evening, as it was firmly believed that any one perambulating the Queen's highway after dark would be decapitated. Moreover, a rumor had been spread that at nine p. m. all gas-lamps were to be extinguished, and every inhabitant must then keep burning a lamp or candle. Consequently quantities of oil were bought up, and on the census night not a candle was to be purchased. In one quarter of the city it was rumored that a male and female European would enter each house and decapitate the inhabitants, while a more amusing report was that the government wanted to provide wives for the soldiers returned from Afghanistan, and were going to count the available brides. The coolies in the Darjeeling district bolted en masse to the jungle, dreading some unknown horror; while the Nepaulese believed that a child would be taken from each house, and its head put under the foundation of a neighboring bridge, the trunk being placed on the tramway for the engine to run over.

A Curious Phenomenon.

A correspondent writes to Nature: "As I was riding along the highway late one afternoon, my attention was attracted to a phenomenon no less curious than beautiful. A couple of days ago there was a fall of a few inches of very damp snow, after which the temperature fell rapidly, and this morning everything was frozen hard. A large dog had trotted along in the snow while it was yet damp, and where it lay upon the old drifts by the road-side. The next day the sun shone very warm, cutting away all the new snow and leaving the tracks of the dog in exquisitely perfect ice casts, thin as writing paper, and standing on the most delicate thread-like columns, about an inch above the surface of the old snow."

LITTLE FEET.

Hark! I hear the little feet
Of the tiny Maykin sweet
  Pattering on the floor;
Back and forward, to and fro,
How they come, and now they go,
  Restless ever more!

First a pattering, then a pause,
Faster now, and now they cease,
  Waiting at the door;
Now renew their little part,
Practice all their tiny art
  Freshly o'er and o'er.

Music springs from every beat,
Comes so softly and so sweet,
  Thrills us through and through;
Like a poet's soothing rhymes,
Or the evening's mellow chimes
  O'er the waters blue.

Now I hear them on the stair!
Yes, the little feet are there,
  Coming sure and slow;
Now they patter, now they stay,
Feeling out their little way
  To the room below.

Now they safely reach the floor,
Come they quickly through the door,
  Opened for them wide;
Bring they in with roguish grace
A little merry, laughing face,
  To [illegible] mamma's side.

There they gladly rest awhile
'Neath the sunshine of her smile.
  There we'll let them be;
But the echoes soft and sweet
Of those little pattering feet
Through the coming years shall greet
  Our loving memory!

TORPEDO JIM.

The Story of a Moonlighter—Life in the Oil Fields of Northern Pennsylvania.

"I am dying, yes, dying."

Away up on the Bingham lands, in the great northern oil field of Pennsylvania, a man lay dying. The flare of a huge gas jet came struggling through the wide crack of the rude hemlock board shanty and fell on the form of a man upon whose features the hand of trouble and sorrow had left heavy traces. He was alone, save the writer of this, and as the hours dragged slowly along he grew uneasy, as if he feared and dreaded the end which was inevitable. With an effort he roused himself.

"What time is it?" he asked.

"Nine o'clock."

"Big Jack won't be home till half-past 12, and before that time I will be locating 'wild cat' wells in another world."

"Shall I go for him?"

"No, oh, no! Don't leave me. I couldn't watch out the last tour and run the last bit alone. I want to tell Big Jack something, but you will do just as well. Can you keep a secret?"

"Yes."

"Well, it's a strange story I've got to tell, and I want somebody to know it before—"

He paused a long time for breath. The cabin or "shanty" in which he lay was situated in a sheltered spot among a cluster of giant pines, and was the only habitation for miles around. Five men occupied the cabin—two drillers, two tool-dressers, and a male cook. Two of the men were, at 9 o'clock at night, busy at the test well a half mile away, two others were on a visit to Bradford for provision supplies, and the fifth one lay in a rude bunk above the gas stove, tossing from side to side and waiting for the "silent summons." It was Torpedo Jim, the moonlighter.

Jim had been sick for three days, so the head driller, Big Jack Sanford, said, and as I stood by the side of his bunk and watched the pain-contorted face I wished I might lift the veil hanging over this man's life and so learn the romance and tragedy lying deeply hidden beneath the blue shirt and heavy coat. As I stood watching and waiting he started up in a fright.

"My God, did you hear that?" he almost shrieked.

"No; I heard nothing. What was it?"

"A woman's scream. I have heard it before more than once. Go outside and listen."

Curiously wondering what the man could mean, I opened the door and stepped out into the night. All was still and dark save a low whispering among the pines and the flare of the burning gas. Away off down the valley at the test well I could hear the puff, puff of the laboring engine as it swung the ponderous drilling tools up and down, and the ring of the heavy hammer as the tool dresser pounded the bit into proper shape. No other sound broke the stillness of the night, and the little cabin under the pine was as silent as the grave. Into the room again and by the invalid's bunk was but a step, and as his eyes met mine the mute question was quickly answered:

"I could hear nothing except the well; all is still," was my reply.

"It must be that I am dying; yes, dying," the man murmured once more, "and I cannot go with a secret on my mind."

After having been propped up with a pillow of old coats and boots he began:

"I s'pose you have heard of Torpedo Jim, the moonlighter? Yes? Well, that's me, and I got the name because I'm the only living man that took active part in two glycerine explosions and lived. I've handled hundreds of tons of the infernal stuff, both in the employ of Roberts, the torpedo monopolist, and working for myself, skulking around the woods at night and shooting wells against the law. I've been a pipe line man, a tool dresser and a driller and a heap of other things besides, but the worst business I ever got into was this same moonlighting. A man will stay out of it so long as he fears God and regards man, and I tell you he gets pretty well hardened before he can sneak around nights with enough dynamite to blow him into four different townships in the wink of an eye. When a man gets so that he don't care whether he lives or dies the next minute he goes into moonlighting and makes a heap of money. Oh, yes, there's lots of money in it, but it is dearly earned cash. But I wasn't always a moonlighter. Oh, no; I used to be as promising a boy as ever walked, and that was only a short time ago. I am only twenty-six years old now, but I have felt to be nearly fifty for the past two years. What made me a moonlighter? I'll show you. There, that made me a moonlighter and —a—murderer!"

It was a picture, a small locket picture, of a beautiful young woman with dreamy brown eyes, sweet pouting lips and a wealth of dark brown hair. A most lovable young lady, surely, if the picture might be taken as a basis of calculation. The features were strongly familiar to me, for they resembled the features of the wife of a prominent oil operator whom I had met several times at private receptions and small parties. The man continued without interruption:

"Ah, you start," he said, with a fierce laugh. "You have seen the original? Yes? And you will see her again, too. Four years ago I was engaged to that woman, and I was as happy as the day was long. I had bright prospects in life then, and my father, who was in business in Philadelphia, where we lived, was supposed to be pretty comfortably fixed in life. But some how or other, after he died and his affairs were straightened out, my mother and I hadn't a cent to give a beggar. I tried clerking and book-keeping in Philadelphia for a while, but it was no go, and to cap the climax of my misery the young lady I was engaged to broke off the engagement, with the polite excuse that she thought too much of me to hamper me with an engagement, and that I could climb the ladder of fortune much better if I were not bound by ties of any kind. Very tender and considerate, wasn't she. She never cared for me as much as she did for my money, but I just worshipped her, and when she threw me over in that cool way I wilted right down and left the city. I landed in the lower oil country, and tried to do something. And then when I saw my mistake it was too late to get good bargains on leases in the northern field, but I came here all the same and tried to make my way. I had my mother to support in Philadelphia all the time, and it was through her that I learned of the marriage of the woman I loved to a wealthy man from the oil regions. I was sick for two weeks after that, stranger, and when I came to my senses I wasn't the same man. I didn't care to live, and if it hadn't been for my poor old mother I should have killed myself. I became rough and reckless and did the roughest work I could find. I drove team a while, and then built rigs and dressed tools. After a while I turned driller and tried to save money for my mother, but I didn't make it fast enough. The longer I lived in the northern field the more wreckless I became, and it was not long before I was a moonlighter. I made torpedoes for shooting wells against the law, and lived out in the woods in a little log hut, and hated the sight of man. I soon became the boldest and most successful moonlighter in the country, and every cent of money I could get above expenses I sent to Philadelphia. I got on the inside of a lot of information some lucky speculators had, and took a flyer on the market with splendid result. I made money hand over fist, but fortune came too late to do me any good, and though I was still a young man, I looked forward to nothing this world could give. A year ago this winter I took to drinking 'tangle-foot' whisky, and after two or three sprees I got to going at a terrible rate, and one day in the early spring of 1880, some time in April, I think, I got into a row with a man at the head of Tram Hollow, and we had a red-hot fight. We were both drunk, and when I found I was getting the best of him a wild thrill ran through me, the devil took full possession of my actions, and before I could think twice I had stabbed him to the heart, and my hands were stained with the blood of a fellow creature!"

The dying man shook with agony as the thoughts of that terrible deed came upon him, and his pain-distorted face was lifted in prayer for mercy and forgiveness. It was a solemn hour for a stranger to that rocky country—the death-bed confession under the moaning pines and the long shadows of the giant trees casting their sombre forms about in the flickering light of the gas jet. A silence fell upon us suddenly; the moaning of the pines sank to the faintest of whispers; while from afar down the valley came the whirr and roar of the bull wheel as the cable of the heavy drill at the well ran with lightning speed over the crown pulley down into the earth two thousand feet.

"Hark!" said the man whom death was about to claim. "Big Jack is running the tools and letting them slide so that I can hear. It is the last time I will ever hear that sound. I have heard it often and handled the bull wheel brake many times. I never will again; no, never again on this earth."

He was silent again and so still was the night that I could hear the thud of the walking beam and the rattle of the cable against the derrick. The silence became absolutely painful, until at last the melancholy face of the dying man was raised again.

"Stranger, come nearer; I'm going fast and I must tell you the rest. After I had killed that man I hid the body in a clump of brush and searched him to learn who he was. I never found out for he had on his oily clothes and there was nothing in his pockets only this, a little piece of paper, and on it was written: 'What is life? 'Tis but a vapor; soon it vanishes away.' True, isn't it? At least I have found it so. Well, after I hid that man in the bush heap I wandered around the country and couldn't eat or sleep. It was glorious weather at that time; everything was as dry as a bone, and the next day as I stood before that brush pile, by some power of attraction that made me go there, I saw a great column of black smoke rise up near Row City. I knew it was an oil fire and I knew it would sweep a large area of country and leave nothing but ashes and the casing in the oil wells. The ground was sprinkled with oil all over the field and the leaves were as inflammable as powder. Well, I watched the Row City fire grow larger and larger, and all at once I became a fiend incarnate and set the leaves and oil-soaked brush on fire around the big tinder pile that hid the body of the unfortunate pauper I had killed. Instantly the whole place was a blazing mass and the fire spread so fast I had to run for my life. Did you ever see an oil fire? Yes? And saw the fires in Row City, Tram Hollow and Foster Brook on that awful day? Is that so? Well, then, you know how fast they run and what a roar they make. It was just awful that day. I never saw anything like it. It was reported that the Tram Hollow fire was accidental and that the fire started from some sparks that had been smoldering in a stump pile. That's all nonsense, for I started the fire myself and had to run for life to keep out of its way. Like a crazy old fool I ran down the valley with the wind and the fire followed me like a monster ready to avenge itself. There were some houses down in the valley and they used to call the place Oil Centre, and when I reached the first house the fire had caught up to me and I jumped into the creek and ran down in safety out of the reach of the fire.

"Pretty soon I came to a house that belonged to a woman, and it was all she had between her and poverty, and I saw her trying to carry out some things, but before she could do anything the fire swooped down and caught up that house like a whirlwind. That woman turned to me, gave one unearthly, heart-rending scream and fainted away. I took care of her until she was able to walk, and then put her in charge of some of her friends. Oh, that awful scream. I have heard it many times since, and I heard it to-night while you were here. It has haunted me day and night; it has given me no rest. I sometimes think that the pauper I killed was some relative of hers, and that her scream comes to me in punishment for the deed. You know the result of that Tram Hollow fire? Scores of people thrown on the world homeless and penniless; thousands upon thousands of dollars lost; children crying for bread about the skirts of their heart-broken mothers. I have since done what I could in a feeble way to see that those homeless people did not suffer for the necessaries of life; but, oh, the remorse that has gnawed at my heart since that fatal day! Why, oh, why did I ever touch the accursed whisky that made me a fiend? Why, oh, why did the woman I loved drive me to this? Oh, curse—"

He stopped as if stricken dumb, his eyes glaring wildly from their sockets, his face a picture of horror and fear.

"My God!" he shrieked; "that scream again! Did you hear it? No, how could you, for it comes only to me. I feel that I'm going very fast now. Come closer. Here, take the picture and keep it, and—some—day show it—to the woman it represents—and tell her—and—tell her—I—I loved her—to—the—the—last!"

The gaslight came struggling through the cracks in the rough cabin and fell upon an upturned face, from which had faded sorrow and care and hate and fear and all things earthly, and which as the angel of death released the suffering spirit reflected from its cold form the look of peace and love of the dead but unforgotten past. Slowly, reverently, I closed the door of the rude building and left the dead alone with the changing shadows under the moaning pines. Down the little valley to the test well I walked as in a dream, and as I opened the door of the derrick and stood before the giant form of Big Jack Sanford. That large-hearted man gazed at me in surprised silence.

"The man up at the shanty" I—began, and a lump seemed to come into my throat all at once.

"Yes?" said Jack interrogatively.

"He is—is—dead!" and I sat down on the anvil in sheer despair.

"What! Jim Barton? Torpedo Jim?"

I could only nod assent.

"Dead! Torpedo Jim dead! Poor Jim!" A great sob shook the burly form of the driller as he groped blindly for the throttle wheel.

With a creaking and jarring the ponderous machinery came to a standstill, and honest-hearted Jack Sanford leaned against the back brace of the sand-reel and wiped the moisture from his eyes with a kind of a groan. The tool dresser came rattling into the derrick with a Gem Theater song on his lips, but as he saw his fellow worker the song died away and he stood in amazement before his friend, nervously wiping his grimy hands with a bit of waste.

"What—what's the matter, Jack? Lost a bit down the hole or has she stuck fast in the rock?" inquired the tool-dresser.

No reply.

"Ain't broke the temper screw, nor nothin', hev ye?"

With an effort the driller roused himself and started the heavy tools once more. Then nodding toward the bull wheel and then at the tug wheel rope-belt, he soon had the tool-dresser busily engaged in preparing to raise the tools from the hole two thousand feet under the ground.

Have you ever stood in an oil derrick and watched a heavy set of drilling tools being raised from the bottom of a hole two thousand feet deep? How the cable springs and stretches; how the timbers creak and groan, as if every revolution of the monstrous bull wheel was attended with pain, and how the engine labors and fiercely coughs forth its discontent at such hard work.

As Big Jack Sanford turned on the steam that night and started the drill from its rocky bed, every piece of timber and every bit of iron seemed to cry out against the proceeding. Never had the thickly-braided cable shot out from the hole with such lightning speed, and never before had the tool-dresser forgotten to pour water down the hole as the swaying tools came rushing to the surface. How the dirty water and bits of sand did fly about as the cable rattled over the boards of the derrick! But the nerve of Big Jack never faltered, and in the midst of the rush and roar he found time to order the tool-dresser to put out the fire under the boiler and close up for the night. At last the unwieldy drill stood dripping on the derrick floor, and silently the driller led the way up through the wooded valley to the lonely cabin. As we neared the place I gently held the tool-dresser's arm and allowed Big Jack to go on and enter the cabin alone. All this time the tool dresser was profoundly ignorant of the whole affair, and as I broke the news to him as gently as possible, the usually thoughtless man sobered down and said nothing for a long time. At length, with a suspicious huskiness in his voice, he spoke.

"Poor old boy! his troubles on this earth are over forever. And poor Jack, he loved Jim like a brother, although he knew that Jim was once a high-toned cuss from New York or some big city. They say he had a mother, but he was ashamed to see her as he was, and none of us, not even Big Jack, knows where she is. But I know she has been well provided for, because Jack told me Jim had given her about twenty thousand dollars that he made up here. She wanted him to come home and live with her, and they say that when he would get a letter from her he would go out into the woods by himself and stay till night, and then he would burn the letter in the fire. Strange, wasn't it?"

Softly we entered the little cabin and stood in the presence of the dead. It seemed so strangely that death should come down and lay his hands on the sick man under the health-giving pines; it didn't seem like other haunts of death, like funerals in churches and grand houses, where sorrowing friends crowd around the silver-trimmed casket and take a last look at the tenement of clay. There it was pomp and wordly sorrow; here it was poor, unfortunate James Barton, Torpedo Jim, lying in his bunk so cold and still and silent. We sat in the little cabin a long while in silence, each man busy with his own thoughts and strangely affected by the presence of death in the lonely forest. The night wore space and after awhile Big Jack Sanford, the driller, rose and went out of the room into the early morning, closing the door carefully, as if afraid he might disturb the corpse of his friend. Hours passed as one by one the stars faded away and the sun came gleaming through the tree-tops and the tool-dresser and I dropped off to sleep, and when we were awakened by the sound of footsteps we saw Big Jack coming toward the cabin with a rough hemlock box shaped like a coffin.

"It isn't so nice as I could wish," said Big Jack as he deposited his burden on the board table, "but it is the best we can do."

With the loving tenderness of a father, Big Jack gathered the inanimate form of Torpedo Jim in his strong arms and laid him gently in the narrow coffin. And then he and the tool-dresser lifted the remains and carried them through the doorway and down the path leading past the well. It was the most sorrowful funeral procession I have ever seen; it wasn't much of a procession, to be sure, Jack and his fellow-worker led the way with the body and I followed. Yet there was sorrow there; sorrow for the dead, and aching hearts and broken sighs joined with the moaning pines in chanting a requium for one to whom fate had been a bitter enemy. Down past the wall to a lightning-blasted giant pine and at its foot was a newly-made grave, the last loving labor that noble-hearted Jack could do for his dead friend, and then, as we lowered the blue-eyed man into his last resting place, the sun burst through a cloud and fell full upon us and cast a halo of golden glory about the scene, and when all was done the driller raised his arms, and said slowly and solemnly:

"Peace to his dust and ashes through time and eternity. Amen."

Poor Jim? Yes, poor Jim; for away out in the Bingham forests sleeps the blue-eyed man, who will always be in the great army of those who die unknown to home and friends, and who will to the end of time be among the missing. And in her comfortable Philadelphia home the patient, loving mother waits and watches for her boy, the boy who will gladden the old, tried heart, and brighten the old home never again on this earth, and by-and-by she will put away the well-worn Bible and gold-bowed spectacles and lie down to sleep the sleep that rights all wrongs, heals all wounds, and gives the beloved eternal peace and rest.

And in a little valley in the great northern oil field there stands a giant blasted pine, with these words:

"Sacred to the memory of Torpedo Jim, who died unknown, 1881."*—Philadelphia Times.

*A true story.

A Sad Experience.

He was on his way home from Leadville. He had on a ragged old summer suit, and he had been taking his meals about thirty hours apart to make his money carry him through.

"Yes, I like the country out that way," he replied to the query. "The climate is good, the scenery fine, and some of the people as honest as need be. The trouble is to know how to take the bad ones."

"I should think that would be easy," was the reply.

"Yes, it looks that way, but I had a little experience. I am the original diskiverer of the richest mine around Leadville."

"Is that so?"

"Yes sir, I am the very man, though you wouldn't think it to see my old clothes."

"Then you don't own it now?"

"Not a bit of it. I'll explain: I was poking around on the hills for signs. I collected some specimens for assay, staked out a claim and went to the assayers. It was two days before he let me know it was the richest ore he had ever seen, and then I hurried back to my claim. Hang my buttons if it hadn't been jumped."

"How?"

"Why, a gang of sharpers had found the spec and built a pole shanty and hung out a sign of 'First Baptist Church' over the door. Sure as shootin' they had, and the law out there is that no miner can sink a shaft within two hundred feet of a church building. They saw me coming, and when I got there they were actually holding a revival. There were just six of them, and they got up one after another and told how wicked they had been and how sorry they were, and, would you believe it, they had the cheek to ask me to lead the singing. I went to law but they beat me. Three days after the verdict the 'First Baptist Chuch' burned down, and before the ashes were cold the congregation were developing a mine worth over a million of dollars. You see, I didn't know how to take them."

"Was there any particular way of taking them?"

"You bet there was. I ought to have opened on that revival with a Winchester rifle and given the coroner $50 for a verdict that they died of too much religion."

Kentucky Horses.

It is claimed that the fastest horses in the world have been bred in the neighborhood of Lexington, Ky. Among the more notable are Maud Stone, better known as Maud S., record, 2:10¼; Wedgewood, 2:19; Woodford Mambrino, 2:24; Trinket, 2:19¼; Dick Moore, 2:32; John Morgan, 2:24; Indianapolis, 2:21, and Voltaire, 2:21.

The number of superior carriage, saddle and trotting horses sent out from this part of Kentucky is very great. A prominent breeder was asked the secret of their superiority. He replied: "There is a combination of causes. The great majority of horses here have some good blood in them, and you will find it crossed somewhere back in their pedigrees. The best strains of running and trotting blood have been taken from here to other States, and they there fail to produce the desired results. There is something in the blue grass, the water, the atmosphere, and the general climatic influence, and much in judicious breeding and training. We force our horses to a gait when they are 1 year old, and at 3 years old they are pretty well developed. The Northern men, however, always improve them." "How long have Kentucky horses held their high place?" was asked. The breeder replied: "No one hereabout can tell. I know men who have lived here eighty-five years, and they state that, from their earliest childhood, they have heard of the superiority of our horses. Their fathers before them had the same story to tell. The fact is that somewhere in the past there was brought into this State a pure strain of thorough blood, derived from the best stock of the mother world, and it has transmitted its qualities from sire to son to the present time. It is a lamentable fact that we have not the exact data upon which to base a history of the Kentucky horse."

She received $150,000 on her marriage, which brings in $6,000 more, and with an allowance of about $15,000 to the Marquis from his father, the Duke of Argyll, the couple have an annual income of about $100,000. Strict economy is the rule at Rideau Hall, as it is at Windsor Castle.

IN THE tropics of the Old World the annual rainfall is, according to Dana, about 77 inches, while it is 155 inches in South America. In the Eastern United States it is 40 to 50 inches, but west of the one hundredth meridian, beyond the Mississippi to the Sierra Nevada, it is mostly 12 to 16 inches. The annual amount in Great Britain averages 35 inches; in France, 20 to 21 inches; farther from the coast, in Central Germany and Russia, only 15 to 20 inches; but about the Alps, it is mostly 35 to 50 inches.

Ode To an Oyster—After Walt Whitman.

Dichlamydeous dainty! Bivalvular beauty!
Conchiferous creature, to prove thee is duty.
Stranger from Chincoteague! Saliferous stranger!
Art thou, when swallowed, an epizoon ranger?
Monocular morsel,
With never a dorsel.
Whence thy maternity?
Whence thy paternity?
Whence thy fraternity?
Art thou nomadic? or nature sporadic?
But mayhap thou'rt addic-
Ted to silence?
So!
In thy submergence—
Excuse the divergence—
This superexcrescence—
Saving your presence.
Then prove thy salvation,
But annihilation
Awaits thee.
Waiter! this shell—
Open it well!
Succulent snoozer—there you are—you, sir!
There on the fork—light as air
I raise thee
And praise thee!
Thou art gone! Thy lot it is sad.
Here waiter! Confound you! That oyster was bad!

Bob Ingersoll's Wife.

Mrs. Ingersoll is a bright-faced and handsome matron, on whom the cares of life have set lightly, and whose clear-cut and animated countenance is a perpetual study, with its quick play and change of expression. The two daughters are pretty and charming young girls, with a quiet ease and modesty of demeanor that quickly render them delightful entertainers. The older—Miss Eva Ingersoll—is by many considered a most decided beauty, being of that fresh, dewy-eyed, and virginal type that the English painters depict, with a wealth of golden brown hair massed in great braids at the back of her head, and a pliant and graceful figure. It is the boast of their proud parents that these two daughters never went to school.—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

IRON TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

Most gratefully yours,

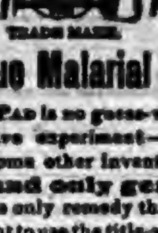
HOLMAN'S PAD

CURES Without MEDICINE



Simply by Absorption

TRADE MARK.

The Only True Malarial Antidote.

DR. HOLMAN'S PAD is no guess-work remedy—no feeble imitative experiment—no purloined hodge podge of some other inventor's idea; it is the original and only genuine curative Pad, the only remedy that has an honestly-acquired right to use the title-word "Pad" in connection with a treatment for chronic diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Spleen.

By a recently perfected improvement DR. HOLMAN has greatly increased the scope of the Pad's usefulness, and appreciably augmented its active curative power.

This great improvement gives HOLMAN'S PAD (with its Adjuvants) such complete and unfailing control over the most persistent and unyielding forms of Chronic Disease of the Stomach and Liver, as well as Malarial Blood-Poisoning, as to amply justify the eminent Professor Loomis' high encomium: "IT IS NEARER A UNIVERSAL PANACEA THAN ANYTHING IN MEDICINE!"

The success of HOLMAN'S PAD has inspired imitators who offer Pads similar in form and odor to the genuine HOLMAN PAD. Beware of these Bogus and Imitation Pads, gotten up to sell on the reputation of the GENUINE HOLMAN PAD.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD COMPANY with the above Trade Mark printed in green.

MOTHS' RAVAGES.

New Furs, Rugs, Robes and Wraps May Be Saved.

In the matter of moths the traditional ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure; the best way to prevent their ravages being to lay away furs and woolens just as the season for wearing them is over. The worst month for moths is said to be June, and before that time all articles likely to be molested by them should be securely packed away.

Fortunately furs, which are the most difficult thing to protect from the moth, are also the first which may be laid aside for the season. Before this is done have them beaten thoroughly, i. e., whipped well with a small rattan, which is what furriers use for the same purpose. Then examine the felt carefully, and where you find the hairs matted tightly together part them and wet the spot thoroughly, yet daintily, so as not to touch the adjacent hair, with spirits of ammonia. After this fold the garment, with layers of newspapers between each fold, and gum camphor sprinkled on the fur, and, finally, either sew the bundle in an old sheet or wrap it in newspapers, pasting the edges. If this is done carefully and speedily, you may rely with comparative certainty that your goods are beyond reach of the small destroyer.

The best moth-proof chests are those made of cedar, to the odor of which the insect has an unconquerable aversion, and the camphor-wood chests which seamen bring from the East Indies. The genuine cedar chest is a massive and costly affair, made of inch cedar plank, with walnut moldings and iron clamps. Fortunately for people of moderate means, Yankee ingenuity has contrived cedar packing trunks which answer all purposes of utility, and which are far less expensive. These are the ordinary packing trunk lined with a thin veneering of cedar, which, though less than the eighth of an inch thick, fits closely in every crack and corner, and renders the trunk at once moth-proof and air-tight. No camphor is needed in such a chest; only be careful to see that no traces of moths are in the garments before packing, and lay away smoothly with newspaper layers between each strata of clothes as an additional precaution.

Paper barrels with close-fitting heads form another effectually moth-proof case. The paper of which these are made is thoroughly impregnated with coal tar, and whatever is put into them is practically safe from the incursions of the moth miller. Tar paper is sold by the sheet as a moth preventive, and any one may make for herself a moth-proof chest by lining an ordinary packing box with this paper, putting a layer also under the lid.

Common newspaper is also a valuable moth preventive. The moth-miller is said to dislike printer's ink. For additional security it is wiser to lay the parcel away in a closed trunk, but where packing-chests run short it is generally safe to put them on shelves in a mouse-proof closet, the danger being that the mice may cut the paper and the moth-miller thus effect an entrance.

In the case of valuable furs, about which there is cause for uneasiness, examine them three weeks after storing. The eggs of the moth-miller hatch out in from fifteen to twenty days, and the moth begins at once its destructive work. Therefore, by this second inspection assurance may be made doubly sure.

New England Wages.

Mr. Carroll D. Wright, of the Massachusetts Bureau of Labor and Statistics, who is said to be a careful statistician, in his recent report gives some interesting facts about labor prices and compensation in New England. According to this report, in the mills of Maine men are paid $7.50 a week, and women get only $5.50, while the little children receive from $2.25 to $5.40, in the woolen mills, which pay the largest wages. One paper mill in Maine pays men $10.50 a week and women $5.50, working seventy-two hours a week. In New Hampshire the wages are much lower than those paid in Maine, and the operatives are required to work sixty-six hours in the week. In Rhode Island the wages are a little higher, with sixty-six hours of work during the week. In Connecticut operatives work ninety hours a week—fifteen hours a day for six days—and the wages are $9 for men, $4.80 for women, $5.10 for male children and $4.50 for female children. The highest spinners' wages are $6. In Massachusetts from sixty-three to sixty-six hours of labor a week are exacted, and spinners only get $1.08 a day; the highest class of labor in the mills not exceeding $10 to $12 for the men. Many of these factories are run by water power, and much time is lost during the winter seasons on account of freezes, and of course the employes are not paid for the time thus lost. The statistician remarks that "long hours and poorly paid labor tend to brutalize," and he shows that one manufacturing town in Massachusetts supports 400 bar-rooms. Such is the exhibit of a gentleman who has no reason to misrepresent things, and it presents facts which are not creditable to the boasted civilization, wealth and generosity of the New England manufacturers.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

An Ill-Used Letter.

If we laugh at our English neighbors for their use of the letter "h" they can return the compliment; for we rob "u" of half its rights. U in tube is the u in use; yet we hear only "toob." U in pure is the same as u in duty; but the latter is pronounced as if the u were oo. In tune, allude, aptitude, caricature, conclude, consume, costume, delude, include, induce, deduce, absolute, dissolute, duel, duly, elusive, erudition, exhume, exude, flute, revolution, glue, illusive, ingenuity, introduce, Jupiter, jurist, lucid, lucifer, lucre, ludicrous, lukewarm, minute (the adjective), multitude, neutral, nutriment, obtuse, opportunity, penurious, plume, prelude, premature, recluse, rectitude, resolution, resume, revenue, sue, servitude, solution, stupid, tulip, tumult, tutor—in all these the u should be long, as in the word pure. But it is Americanized into the sound of oo in good. There is no defense for this in any American standard dictionary. On the other hand, if the "u" is slighted in many instances, it is unduly distinguished in others. In many words in which u and a are associated, the first of the partners is awarded the profits of the firm. It is another Americanism. The place where clothes are washed is, in the "old country," a laundry, the u being silent; we Americanize it into lawndry. But the u should not be heard in the word at all; nor in taunt, launch, vaunt, jaunty, gauntlet gaunt, haunt, flaunt, jaundice and other similar words. It is American, too, to pronounce suit as if it were soot; new as if it were noo, dew as if it were doo, flew as if it were floo, and flue as if it were the same thing.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

A NEW form of thermometer indicates the temperature of any place at a considerable distance through the agency of electricity.

THE cranium in giants is usually small in relation to their stature, but enormous in absolute measure, although their intelligence is generally small. An example was Broca's giant Joachim, credited with a very slight amount of sense. Yet this great imbecile had a huge cranium, and his brain weighed nearly as much as that of Cuvier.

THE drawings of the planet Mars, made by Prof. Harkness in 1877, have been transformed from the orthographic representation to Mercator's projection, and a map of the planet has been constructed. General tables have been computed which give directly the areographic latitude and longitude of the center of the disc of Mars and the position angle of its axis as seen from the earth.

THE value of spongy iron upon a large scale in the filters of water works is being tested at Antwerp. The water is first allowed to pass through a mixture of iron and gravel covered with sand, and then it goes into a second basin, the bottom of which is covered with sand. The experimental results have been more satisfactory than those from ordinary filters, and there are no indications of of any necessity for renewing the iron, which serves to oxydize the organic matters suspended in the water.

DR. SIEMENS has lately experimented on the fusion of metals by means of electricity and has succeeded in melting 1 1-10 pounds into a compact ingot in 4½ minutes. In melting large quantities this electrical method is rather more than twice as costly as the ordinary furnace, but for the fusion of precious or refractory metals, for chemical purposes, and for other applications where the question of economy is secondary, the new method is convenient and practical. In melting small quantities it may even prove economical.

A STEAM carriage has been used for some time in Berlin. The Leipzig Gazette mentions that another German city, Chemnitz, the manufacturing center of Saxony, with a population of about 50,000, is also using a steam car for the transport of merchandise through the streets without the use of rails. In two months it made forty-four trips, carrying 406,500 pounds, which were easily distributed in all parts of the city, on grades and curves as well as on levels, without causing any accident to vehicles or pedestrians.

THE earth's eastward rotation, together with the increase in rate from the poles to the equator, has a tendency to throw the waters of streams against their western banks sufficient to produce quite marked effects in many parts of the world. It is noticeable in large rivers where the deposits are earthy, and the pitch of the water is small and in the direction of the stream, the bank against which the water strikes the more forcibly being high and steep while the other is low. The effect has been observed in many streams of Europe and Asia, and on the rivers intersecting the low land of the Atlantic border of the United States.

A COMPARISON of the principal expenditures for lighthouse service in France and the United States has recently been published by Emile Allard. He finds the average annual cost of light to be $716 in France and $2,358 in the United States. A large part of the saving in the French service is undoubtedly due to the difference in the cost of labor; but he thinks that much of it is owing to the vigorous economy which the engineer of the department of bridges and highways bring to the execution of their labors, and to their careful avoidance of introducing luxurious arrangements which do not contribute to manifest utility.

The Greatest Blessing.

A simple, pure, harmless remedy, that cures every time and prevents disease by keeping the blood pure, stomach regular, kidneys and liver active, is the greatest blessing ever conferred upon man. Hop Bitters is that remedy, and its proprietors are being blessed by thousands who have been saved and cured by it. Will you try it? See another column.—Eagle.

Bears Helping Each Other.

A gentleman was once making inquiries, in Russia, about the method of catching bears in that country. He was told that, to intrap them, a pit was dug several feet deep, and, after covering it over with turf, leaves, etc., some food was placed on the top. The bear, if tempted by the bait, easily fell into the snare.

"But," he added, "if four or five happen to get in together, they all manage to get out again."

"How is that?" asked the gentleman.

"They form a sort of ladder by stepping on each other's shoulders, and thus make their escape."

"But how does the bottom one get out?"

"Ah! these bears, though not possessing a mind and soul such as God has given us, yet can feel gratitude; and they won't forget the one who has been the chief means of procuring their liberty. Scampering off, they fetch the branch of a tree, which they let down to their poor brother, enabling him speedily to join them in the freedom in which they rejoice."

Sensible bears, we should say, and a great deal better than some people that we hear about, who never help anybody but themselves.—The Carrier Dove.

A Paris Industry.

Among the curiosities of Paris is the market for cigar stumps in the Place Maubert. Every morning from 8 to 10 o'clock this scene of business is full of life. A kilogram of stumps from Londres cigars is worth 1 franc 50 centimes to 2 francs 50 centimes, according to the length of the stump. The ends of cigars at 5 and 10 centimes each only bring from 75 centimes to 1 franc 50 centimes the kilogram. There are four or five wholesale dealers in cigar-stumps who have their headquarters in the wine-saloons of the vicinity, and there deal with their furnishers, who are mostly poor old men and women and ragged gamins. Much of the tobacco thus scraped together is sold to workmen, and much is also said to be exported under the title Tabac de Paris. There was an old fellow in the Maubert quarter formerly, who became so rich at this humble business of selling cigar-stumps that he had an annual income of 15,000 francs.—Parisian.

Genius in the Ranks.

"It is surprising," says Smiles, "to find so large a number of illustrious men—poets, authors, and men of science—who have led a soldier's life, and fought by land and sea, at home and abroad."

The list, indeed, is a curious one, and well worth giving publicity to.

Among poets, for instance, Dante was a soldier. He was banished from Florence as much for his services in the front line of the Guelph cavalry at Campaldino as his politics. Chaucer served as a soldier under Edward III. in his invasion of France in 1379; was captured, and remained a captive for some time. George Buchanan served when a young man as a private soldier in the Scottish army, and in 1523 was present at the attack on the Castle of Wark. Ben Jonson served as a private soldier in the low countries. Sir Philip Sydney's war record is historical. Algernon Sydney commanded a troop of horse in the Irish rebellion, and Davenport and Lovelace held commissions under Charles I., while Withers was a Major among the Roundheads. Bunyan was also a Roundhead soldier. Otway was a Cornet of horse in the army in Flanders, and Farquhar held a commission in the Earl of Arrery's regiment. Steele, the essayist, enlisted as a private and distinguished himself at the battle of Namur and the siege of Venloo. Coleridge enlisted in a dragoon regiment, but he made such a poor soldier that his Colonel was glad to help him to obtain his discharge.

Lope de Vega was a soldier on board the Spanish Armada, and escaped the English to return home with his almost-numberless plays, and end his life as a priest and familiar of the Inquisition. Cerventes received three arquebus wounds in his breast, and lost a hand at the battle of Lepanto, but lived to write "Don Quixote." Calderon, dramatist and priest, began life as a soldier. Camoens, the famous Portuguese poet, was a soldier. Loyola, the founder of Jesuitism, bore arms when his religious inspirations first dawned on him. Rene Descartes, the French mathematician, learned the rudiments of his philosophy and mathematics in the army. Maupertius carried on the studies in mathematics, which were destined to distinguish him, while Captain of dragoons. Molus studied optics while an engineer in the army.

Rochefoucauld was a soldier in early life, and was several times wounded. Lamarck, the naturalist, served many years under Marshal Broglie. Niepce, the inventor of photography, learned chemistry while in the dragoons. William Cobbett rose from the ranks to become a Sergeant Major before he became an author. Sir Roderick Murcheson was a Captain in the Enniskillen dragoons previous to winning fame as a geologist, and T. R. Lee, R. A., served as an officer before he graduated in art as one of the foremost landscape painters of the time.

Given Up by Doctors.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters; and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die!"

"Well-a-day! That is remarkable! I will go this day and get some for my poor George—I know hops are good."—Salem Post.

Cutting up a Horse.

In France, when a horse has reached the age of twenty or thirty, it is destined for a chemical factory; it is first relieved of its hair, which serves to stuff cushions and saddles; then it is slaughtered and skinned; the hoofs serve to make combs. Next the carcass is placed in a cylinder and cooked by steam at a pressure of three atmospheres; a cock is opened, which allows the grease to run off; then the remains are cut up, the leg bones are sold to make knife handles, etc., and the coarser, the ribs, the head, etc., are converted into animal black and glue. The first are calcined in cylinders, and the vapors when condensed form the chief source of carbonate of ammonia, which constitutes the base of nearly all ammoniacal salts. There is an animal oil yielded which makes a capital insectcide and a vermifuge. To make glue the bones are dissolved in muriatic acid, which takes away the phosphate of lime; the soft residue, retaining the shape of the bone, is dissolved in boiling water, cast into squares, and dried on nets. The phosphate of lime, acted upon by sulphuric acid and calcined with corbon, produces phosphorous for lucifer matches. The remaining flesh is distilled to obtain the carbonate of ammonia; the resulting mass is pounded up with potash, then mixed with old nails and old iron of every description; the whole is calcined and yields magnificent yellow crystals—prusiate of potash, with which tissues are dyed a Prussian blue, and iron transferred into steel; it also forms the basis of cyanide of potassium and prussic acid, the two most terrible poisons known in chemistry.—Scientific American.

A Radical Cure for Drunkenness.

Under the heading, "A Radical Cure for Drunkenness," a Hungarian paper tells the following Russian story: "A workman brought a complaint against four of his fellows that they had given him twenty-five blows with a stick. The accused, on being asked for their defense, produced an agreement in writing, one clause of which expressly stipulated that, if one of their number drank to such an extent as not to be able to attend to his work, the others were to measure out to him twenty-five blows, and that they had merely carried out the agreement. Upon this the magistrate discharged them, remarking that they were not deserving of blame for what they had done, but rather of praise."

OUR customs and habits are like the ruts in roads. The wheels of life settle into them, and we jog along through the mire because it is too much trouble to get out of it.

THE hills of lofty endeavor and high achievement lie all around us, and if we never catch a glimpse of the views they afford we need not complain that it is because of the insuperable limitations of our surroundings.

Remember, Young Men.

Young men who are intending to be farmers should remember that agriculture is both a science and an art, to be carefully studied, and then practically carried out. The day has gone by when the ignorant can become successful farmers. Within the past ten years agriculture has undergone a great revolution, but the next ten years will see greater changes than have yet been witnessed. The leading agriculturists will be the leading men of the country.—Prairie Farmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND. JUNE 9, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

DURING the balloting for senator at Albany, Henry Ward Beecher received one vote. It is however believed that the solitary voter was not Theo. Tilton.

DORSEY has retired to his cattle ranch in New Mexico, so he says. His health requires a rest and change. The election in Indiana, and the star-route business were too much for his constitution.

REPUBLICANS who "carried Indiana" last fall, are getting impatient at the long delay. The rewards come in slowly. Even "Jo Gray," the man who showed them how to vote double tickets, is still out in the cold.

COMMODORE NUTT, the little man who was smaller than Tom Thumb, died in New York last week. He had retired from the show business, and for some years had kept a saloon in several western cities. He was thirty-seven years old.

SENATOR JONES, of Florida, says that Conkling and Platt are still members of the United States senate, as the vice-president had no constitutional right to receive and accept their resignations. And besides this, the governor of New York has not accepted the resignations sent to him.

THE re-adjuster party of Virginia, under the leadership of Mahone, held their state convention at Ricdmond last Thursday and Friday. After a turbulent session, they nominated Col. W. E. Cameron for governor and Ex-United States Senator John T. Lewis for lieutenant governor. Mahone and Riddleberger both received votes for governor, and at one time it was thought one of them would receive the nomination.

THE situation for the republican party is not as happy as when the country went for the great De Golyer lawyer for president last fall. Other troubles besides the mail contract business are constantly arising, and the true inwardness of many of their most prominent men is gradually coming to the surface. The quarrel is likely to result in stripping the mask from some of the numerous christian statesmen who have occupied front seats so long. The star-route ring threatens to expose as well as be exposed. Garfield is the latest though not the only prospective victim. The following extract from a Washington special dispatch, is supposed to have been instigated by some of the friends of Conkling: "Another rumor of a more serious nature has been flying about for the last twelve hours. This is to the effect that President Garfield is personally concerned in a little financial operation while a visiting statesman in Louisiana that will not bear the closest investigation. The statement is that Garfield was approached while a member of the house on the strength, of his reputation in the credit-mobiler and paving-ring matter, and requested to act as counsel in getting certain goods out of bond. The man who approached him was the agent of heavy importers who were caught in a snap. There was a large amount of money involved. The fee offered for the influence was $25,000. Half of this was tendered by the agent for Garfield's assistance. The latter replied that he had not the influence to get the seized goods liberated. Anticipating this, a plan was unfolded to him whereby he could command this influence. No sooner said than it was done. The goods were released, and Congressman Garfield came north with a draft in his favor, indorsed by himself, for $12,500. This draft subsequently fell into the hands of a man name Boyington, now a reputed member of the "chum" cabinet. This gentleman is now in this city, and is more familiarly known as "Poker" Boyington. The others to whom the matter is said to be known are ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, and a St. Louis man here, who stated to-day to your correspondent that he had personally seen the said draft. It is whispered that there is another visiting statesman involved in the same transaction.

The following, which is now going the rounds of the press, is too good to be lost: An invitation to the bourbons to match Mahone, who has ten children, is five feet high, 50 years old, and weighs 120 pounds, brings out the following from the Courier-Journal: "Perhaps Mahone is like Alec Thompson's red-headed fighter, who leaped into the ring and exclaimed, 'I kin lick any man o' my average here; match me, by jings, MATCH me!' Quite a number stepped up and asked his terms. 'Size, weight, age and condition,' says he; 'match me, by jings, MATCH ME!' 'Well,' says the crowd, 'what are your size, weight, age and condition?' To which came the response: 'Five feet three inches high, 98 pounds, 28 years old, seven children, two by Martin's Maria, two by Carter's Penelope Jane, and three by my wife. Match me, by jings, MATCH ME!'—Chicago Times.

Neighborhood Nippings.

A young man went fishing on Crooked lake, in Steuben county, recently, and lost a valuable watch and chain in the water.

Last Sunday (29th), was the 44th anniversary of our settlement in this vicinity. There has been a mighty change in the appearance of the country in that time.—Kendallville Standard.

At the recent decoration services in Goshen a young lady, a Miss Jeannette Gortner, delivered the address. Rather a novelty some may think, but those who were present and heard it say it was a most able and sensible address.

Work is being pushed on rapidly at Antioch, preparatory to the moving of the switching yards of the Wabash road from Ft. Wayne to that place. The change will be made about the middle of August.—Wabash Plaindealer.

Grant Eatinger found a nest of young rabbits a few days ago, brought them home and gave them to the cat for her supper, but instead of eating them she has taken them under her watchful care and they are doing finely, and Grant hardly knows what to think of it.—Lagrange Register.

The Plymouth Democrat has a very interesting and well-written letter from a correspondent who has been traveling on the Southern Pacific and other roads through California, Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado. It is chock full of valuable information about that far-off and wonderful country.

It is said that Mr. Brush, the inventor of the machine which generates the electric light in this city, has a daily income of $1000 from his patent. Mr. T. C. Phillips, the electrician who put up the Wabash light, has also a fat take, having been sent to England, where he takes charge of the entire foreign business of the Brush company.—Wabash Plaindealer.

The Goshen Democrat of last week says: "With this issue the Goshen Democrat enters upon the 44th year of its publication. Though considerably older than any of its neighboring compeers, the Democrat is happy to be able to assure them, together with all its friendly readers, of its continued satisfactory state of financial and business health, and indulges the hope that the years to come will throw no more serious obstacles in its path than those through which it has already passed."

The Plaindealer contains the following items from Cedar Beach: S. B. Henshaw, of Alexandria, Ind., has ordered a fine birch bark boat built at Racine, Wisconsin, for use at Cedar Beach.....Jas. Myer and Henry Gardner are building one boat each for H. C. Holloway and S. B. Carey, of Indianapolis. Parties wishing fishing-boats should see them.....The steamer Roxie is now making regular daily trips to Club House.....The B. & O. road have arranged for reduced round-trip rates to Cedar Beach from Chicago.....Visitors speak very favorably of Capt. L. B. Wightman, the manager.....Geo. King, Jake Hyman, Doc. Depuy, Carry Cowgill, H. Shiveley, of Wabash, are now at Cedar Beach. Look out for big fish—lies.

Ft. Wayne News: Col. James Neal, attorney for the west division of the N. Y., C. & St. L. railroad company, returned to the city last night, and this morning right-of-way agent Edward Evans turned over to him thirteen warrantee deeds for six miles of right-of-way from Chicago to New Haven, or the west end of old Tiffin grading. The right-of-way from the Randall farm to the canal has not been secured, and it is not yet decided whether that line will be followed that sweeps to the north of the cemetery and through the Rockhill heir's addition, or whether the canal will be reached by crossing the Pittsburg road at the Randall farm, running east to the Y in the Swinney property, and then making a detour through Kelsey's butchering yard or northeastwardly toward the Big Basin.

The Jewish Tabernacle.

This unique entertainment will be given at the M. E. church in Auburn, on Monday evening, June 15, and will be a rare treat to all readers and students of the Bible and of sacred history. The gentlemen who have charge of the matter, O. L. and W. B. Hall, are both residents of Waterloo, are members of the M. E. church, and in every way are men of good standing in the community. The tabernacle itself is the joint work of their father, Rev. E. Hall, now deceased, and of the younger son, W. B. Hall. The gentlemen made the subject a study for years, read all the best works on the subject, besides what is to be gained by a thorough reading of the Bible itself. This thorough research has enabled them to produce what is believed by all Bible students who have examined it, to be an exact model of the tabernacle used by the Hebrews, as it is described in the Bible. The altar of sacrifice, the altar of incense, the table of shew bread, the golden candlestick, etc., are all shown in the exact form in which they were once used. The costumes once worn by the priests and high priests will be worn during the evening. These dresses are also faithful copies of those actually worn by the priests themselves. The accompanying lecture was prepared at great expense of time and labor, and explains much of the details of the Hebrew religion and ceremonies. A revolving tablet of Bible references is also a valuable accompaniment to the lecture, enable the audience, by the aid of bibles, to follow the lecturer in his remarks All should bring their bibles, pencil and paper, and take advantage of this rare opportunity to receive a practical bible lesson. There will be a free entertainment to children at 4:30 in the afternoon. Admission 10 evening lecture, 15 cents, childrento cents.

—Peter Shaffer wishes to notify all concerned, that no more fishing will be allowed in the creek on his land. He takes this friendly method to warn all such that they will be considered trespassers.

Wanted

Everybody to know that J. W. Wagoner, over at Garrett, has just purchased the stock of drugs formerly owned by F. B. Bacon, and is fitting up the room immediately south of his restaurant, for a drug store, where you can in the future find a nice fresh and complete stock of drugs. Mr. Bacon will be in Mr. Wagoner's employ. He understands the business, and will sell you good goods at low prices. Mr. Wagoner has always been noted for his straight forwardness in business matters, and all those who favor him with a call can rely on being fairly dealt with. We wish him success in his new enterprise, and bespeak for him a big trade. 2 t.

Garrett.

On Monday of this week one of the COURIER editors paid a visit to our sister town of Garrett, and was very much pleased with his visit. We of course looked around among the boys, and when the hour of noon arrived, we called at the popular restaurant of our friend Wagoner," and partook of a sumptuous dinner. His saloon, restaurant and drug store are all extensively patronized. We also called on Schnitzer Bros., and found their store full of customers carrying away groceries and provisions. Frank Sambower one of the trusty engineers on the B. & O., had a lay-off that day, and was looking after the welfare of the natives generally. Henry Schelter one of Garrett's best barbers was at his post ready to scrape your face or cut your hair, and do it just right. Geo. Reigle was in the best of humor, and reports a good business especially right after pay day. L. Covell was trying to beat some fellows at croquet. Fatty Palmer was dispensing hardware in his usual pleasant manner. Neal Decker was trying to tame some kind of a calico pony, and the way he chased him around, we have no doubt, but what he succeeded. Judge Carpenter and W. J. Fredrick were prospecting around town looking after things generally. We finally concluded to take in the shops, and over we went, and we there met as jolly and whole souled a set of fellows as one could wish to see. We first called on W. Y. Johnson, the gentlemanly master mechanic. We next called at the supply room, and who should we find in charge but our old friend, Adam Conrad, here is where each engine is charged up with all it takes to keep it in repair. From there we went out among the mechanics, and there we found Aaron Balliet, J. Hubler, Geo. W. Hill, Michael Casey, Samuel Noel, William Helms, Michael McClystel, G. W Patterson, Aug. Damman, John J. Burnier, Frank Kling, Fred Micel, Adolph Berthet, W. Wilson, Wm. Burg and about an acre and a half more of the same kind of fellows, whose names we do not now recall, all as busy as bees, and happy as clams each one busily engaged making something. We next went through the carpenter shops where we had the pleasure of meeting our old friend J. R. Skilling, one of the reliable carpenters of the B. & O., we also met Lewis Sapp in this shop. From there we went into the car repair shop, and made the acquaintance of Mr. Bates, who was doing his best for the crippled cars that came in. We saw one that we think will baffle his skill, it looked a great deal like a cart-load of peanuts struck by lightning, it had in all probability run "agin suthin." We have forgotten a great many of the names of the men we met, and we hope they will not feel slighted. We are coming back just as soon as we get time. We made one funny little mistake while we were there. While going along the street we looked into some business room, and saw what at first appeared to be one of these big leather grip-sacks, but on taking a second look we discovered that it was only one of Charlie Sullivan's feet, and on discovering our mistake, we actually smiled. We hope our Garrett friends will drop in and see us when they visit Auburn.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

Auburn Courier

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Cedar Creek walks proud.

—A little rain would be good for the wheat.

—Ed. Eldridge is having his house painted.

—Has Judge Picker warned you out yet ?

—Uncle Tom's Cabin has a new bottle slinger.

—The base ball fever is raging among the juveniles.

—George Carter is running Si. Lock's saloon.

—Everybody come to the old settlers' meeting.

—The Auburn Paint Company ought to have a sign.

—Now the sprinkling wagon is having its harvest.

—D. D. Snyder's house has reached its full heigth and will soon be ready for the roof.

—For fine teas, coffee, sugar, spices and tobacco, go to McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—Picker & Bumpus are erecting a new brick residence for Sam Tarney, south of town.

—For parasols, fans, gloves, laces, embroideries and hosiery, go to McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—White fish and pickerel. New Saginaw salt at $1.20 per barrel, at McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—We hear that Charley Sthair and Mr. Leophard will go to Churubusco and work at their trades.

—Don't buy a silk dress or silk for a dolman, until you have seen those silks at McQuiston & Ralston's. 21 3w.

—Have you seen Captain Hi. Rasely, of the harness-shop brigade, with new uniform on ? Take a squint.

—Those who attended the opening at Pleasant Lake, speak in favorable terms of the place as a pleasure resort.

—The report that the Corunna band had "busted" is not true. They will play for the old settlers' meeting here the 16th inst.

—There will be a big crowd here at the old settlers' meeting. Gingerbread and lemonade dealers should order a large stock.

—We are sorry to learn that Billy Forshey, who has been at the Junction for so long, has resigned his position and will leave us soon.

—Madame Rumor has got the report in circulation that there will soon be a wedding in town, the contracting parties being of the bon ton.

—Johnny McIntyre has come back to the city to live. The Junction folks disturbed his slumbers, and Johnny couldn't endure such actions.

—Shaffer & Co., the popular wagon manufacturers on south Main street, are selling these kind of vehicles about as fast as they can put them together.

—Coop. Ralston's delivering wagon and Pete Brandon's express wagon had a collision at the corner of Seventh and Van Buren streets Monday. The former got ditched.

—Jos. Abright believes in the old adage of "Woodman spare the tree," and has made some needed improvements upon the young maples that stand in front of his residence.

—Drop the plow handle young man, and bring your "gal" to the old settlers' meeting, buy her a glass of red lemonade, and take her by the hand and show her all the amusing sights of the day.

—Henry Wolf, opposite Shaffer's wagon shop, has probably the largest apple tree in DeKalb county. The only respectable rival we know of, is the one in Wm. Whetsell's door yard at New Era.

—The Corunna band will be in attendance at the old settlers' meeting next Thursday, and a dance will also be given at Ensley's hall in the evening. A grand time is anticipated. Let all turn out.

—A young lady in the north end, who had made arrangements to marry by correspondence, got left somewhat, being in too big a hurry, and has come to the conclusion that Shorter things are better than longer.

—Mr. E. Baker, across the creek, is fencing in the grounds known as the Somers' addition, and will make an effort to keep the town cows from grazing east of Cedar Creek. We don't know which will gain the day, the cows or Baker.

—In a recent letter from Jack Little, he states that he is about to return north. He will visit several cities in the south, and then go to Cincinnati, thence to home sweet home. After a short vacation here, he will probably accept a situation at Toledo, Ohio.

—Anderson Bros. have been so crowded with work lately, that it was impossible for them to get help enough to supply the demand for their popular buggies. They have been looking for a new assistant and Monday night it arrived, but it was not of the right gender. Weight, eight pounds

—C. S. Clark, of Auburn Junction, had the misfortune to lose his little boy, four months old. He died Monday, and was buried Tuesday.

—Amos Britton, one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of Richland township, died at his home yesterday morning of typhoid fever after a brief illness.

—The vote of the township trustees for county superintendent of schools stood: James A. Barnes, 8; W. H. McIntosh, 5. All the trustees were present.

—There is likely to be quite a change in the employes at the Junction. At present each company has a separate agent, but how long this will continue is not known.

—Allowances made by the town board at the regular session, June 4, 1881:

T. P. Scott, services marshal	$40.00
J. F. Fleming & Co., road-scraper	60.00
D. S. Littlefield, auditing	18.75
D. D. Moody, auditing	18.75

Wm. McIntyre was appointed school trustee.

—We noticed the air full of shoe pegs in front of Wards' building the other day, and our curiosity was so aroused that we picked up our brogans and lit out at a rapid rate to ascertain the cause of so strange a coincident. To our surprise, we were informed that John Ray had started a shoe shop, and all was explained.

—Mr. G. Leo, a first-class crayon artist, is in town, and will remain for a few days. He takes a correct life-like picture 14x17 inches in size for $2.00, and does it in a very short time. These pictures will not fade. We saw three fine pictures drawn by him; one of Capt. Baughan, one of Sheriff Leas, and one of Treas. Miller.

—The Baltimore & Ohio railroad company announces a grand excursion to Chicago on June 28, 1881, to North American Sængerfest, from all stations on the Trans-Ohio divisions at very low rates of fare. The tickets will be good for ten days, permitting excursionists by this line to enjoy a week of song and festivities, such as the German people are noted for.

—T. F. Jordan, trustee of Richland township, resigned that office on Monday, after election was over, and Mr. Franks was appointed by the commissioners to fill the vacancy. Jordan has been one of our most useful and intelligent trustees, but now has a good position as foreman on the B. & O. bridge gang, and wishes to devote all his time to the work.

—The Baltimore & Ohio railroad company have issued a beautifully illustrated book called the "B. & Summer Resort Book," containing valuable information to pleasure and health-seekers in regard to summer resorts. For copies of this little book, call on or address, W. S. Repperl, passenger agent of the B. & O. railroad, No. 205 1-2 north High street, Columbus, Ohio.

—It behooves some parents in this place to look after their boys. Last sabbath a squad was playing ball in front of the cemetery, while in the rear, the creek was lined with fish-poles. If neither the boys nor their parents have any respect for themselves, they should have a little for those who visit this silent resting place and arrange flowers by the graves of a dear relative or friend.

—Chris. Baker is becoming quite popular at the Junction. The train going north at 12:40 and the one going south at 3:40 p. m. on the Saginaw road now stop at his hotel for dinner and supper, and his transient guests are all he can accommodate. Chris. has purchased the building known as the Whittington property, and will open up a grocery and provision store in a short time. Auburn Junction will support a good-conducted grocery, and we believe Chris. is just the man to be at the head of it.

Madame Fry's Entertainment.

The entertainment given at Waterloo last Thursday evening by Madame Fry and her daughter was in every way a fine one. The audience was quite small, but what it lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm. The members of the company are ladies and gentlemen. There is nothing "made up" or "stagy" about them. Their entertainment was of the most select character, and those who staid at home missed a rare treat. This talented family seems to be at home with all the musical instruments in use, and especially so with violins, horns and the flute. Their songs are of the best in the language and are well rendered. In the "Nightingale Trill" by Madame Fry, the trill was executed with wonderful power and correctness. The comic duet, "You do, you know you do," by Misses Eugenie and Lulu Fry, was one of the best given, and was generously applauded. The encores were frequent, and were responded to by select additions to the regular programme, and all agree that it was one of the choicest entertainments to which our people have been treated for some time. Efforts will be made to have them give a series of entertainments during the fair.

Burglary at Orland.

The store of A. L. Gray & Co., at Orland, and that of J. G. Parker were entered by burglars on the night of June 2, and the safes in both instances were blown open. They got about five dollars in Gray's store, but nothing at Parker's. No clue to the thieves as yet.

Island Park.

The Island Park Assembly Journal for May contains the entire programme for the session which begins there June 29 and ends July 15. The list of lectures, lessons, musical entertainments, etc. is a very full and instructive one. Parties who contemplate attending a whole or a part of the season, should send for a copy of the May Journal. Address,

JOHN H. REBICK, Publisher,
Lagrange, Ind.

Sad Accident at Rome City

Henry Gerber and wife, and Miss Mary Wolf, of Ligonier, together with Mr. Benton Maxwell went out on the lake to take a ride last Sunday evening. By some means, the boat upset and all were thrown into the water. Gerber and his wife were drowned, but Maxwell and Miss Wolf managed to reach the shore. Mrs. Gerber was a daughter of G. W. Maxwell, of Butler, in this county, and leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her untimely death.

Normal School.

A. L. Lamport and H. E. Coe will open a normal school in Waterloo July 25, to continue eight weeks. This school, while it aims to assist teachers and those preparing to become teachers, will also afford an excellent opportunity for such as desire to gain a more complete and thorough knowledge of the common branches, to do this under competent instruction. Higher branches will be taught if any desire to study them. For circulars and all information apply to the principal, A. L. Lamport, Waterloo, Indiana.

Waterloo.

Dr. Murphy is putting up an addition to his house.

Will. Francis looks snug and comfortable in his new location.

Mrs. McEntarfer is building a nice residence in the south side of town.

Strawberries are getting ripe, but the crop will be a small one at best.

The logs at the Jackson depot are all loaded and have been shipped to Fort Wayne.

R. B. Crane and wife, of Toledo, Ohio, were in town last week visiting their brother, G. M. Crane.

A. W. Lamport and H. E. Coe are working industriously preparing for the opening of their normal school.

The Waterloo Base-Ball Club defeated the Pleasant Lake Club at the latter place Friday, by a score of 9 to 29.

The Waterloo Rifles now use the room of the soldiers' club for an armory. Looks rather warlike in there.

A. Y. Rosenberry has resumed operations with his feather renovator. He says the outlook for a large business is good.

C. M. Meek is putting up a large building in the southwest part of the railroad ground, which he intends for the storing of barrels.

J. D. McAnally is now equipped with a new lathe for turning wood and metal. It is of the new Battle Creek pattern, and J. D. says it is a clipper.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will have a strawberry and ice-cream festival at the church Friday evening, June 17. Give them a good turn out.

Mrs. G. W. Swank, of Jackson township, has been here a few days, attending on her mother, Mrs. Shaw, who has been quite sick. Mr. Swank has also been quite ill for some time.

H. K. Leas went the way of all the earth—at least that part of it composed of young men—last Thursday. The fortunate girl is Ida Taylor, daughter of John Taylor, of Franklin township, one of our most successful farmers.

O. L. and W. B. Hall will, we understand, spend a part of the summer exhibiting the model of the Jewish tabernacle that cost their father so much patient research and years of labor. It is pronounced a marvel of accuracy by those who have seen it.

Grandfather Bowers died last Saturday morning after a long illness. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1799, married his first wife in 1822 and lived with her till her death, fifty-two years. He was married to his present wife in 1879. He was a zealous christian all his life, being a member of the M. E. Church. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon at the U. B. church and was largely attended.

Personal.

Joseph Rainier visited Fort Wayne Tuesday.

Fred. Roby, of Waterloo, was in town Monday.

Henry Gugerli bought a ticket for Fort Wayne Tuesday.

Dr. D. N. E. Brown and J. R. Ross, of Hamilton, called on us yesterday.

J. A. McKay spent last Sunday with his family, and left Monday again to attend to his bridge work.

H. S. Snyder, who has been attending school at Ann Arbor, Michigan, is home on a summer vacation.

Billy Little made a business trip to Fort Wayne Tuesday. He is having a splendid trade in the boot and shoe line.

Sherm. Hollister is again attacked with rheumatism and it is difficult for him to perform his usual every day duties.

Charley Emanuel has been at Cecil, Ohio, but is now at home again enjoying himself like a school boy in a strawberry patch.

Miss Maggie Sibert started for Ashland county, Ohio, Monday evening. She goes to spend a week or two visiting friends there.

L. P. Welling, our jolly station agent, has taken wings and gone to Jackson for a week or two. He will take the place of train dispatcher there for the time being.

Judge Best gave us a brief call last Saturday. His duties on the supreme court makes this a very busy year for him, and he is deeply immersed in the work of helping to clean the docket of the cases that have been accumulating.

Our office fairly blossomed last Saturday with the bevy of good-looking young ladies brought in by our friend W. D. Johnson, of Concord. A number of them are teachers, and until some good-looking young chaps persuade them to change their names they will answer to the following: Ella Erehart, Libbie Erehart, Bina Monroe and Dessie Johnson.

Mrs. Dora Lamb, of Reading, Michigan, and Mrs. S. H. Overholser, of West Manchester, Ohio, have been visiting their sisters, Mrs. D. D. Snyder, and Mrs. H. Altenburg for a few days past. Their mother, Mrs. Bodine, of Reading, accompanied them, and all have been enjoying a family reunion at the old home. They spent a day with Dr. Chamberlain, at Waterloo. Neither did they forget the most important part of their visit, but called on the COURIER and renewed their subscriptions. They express themselves well pleased with their visit, the more so, as all the sisters were present at their meeting.

Court Items.

During the past three days of court the following business was done:

Noragon vs. Somers, change of venue taken to Steuben county.

State vs. John Nessel, defendant, was sentenced to state prison for 2 years.

State vs. S[illegible], dismissed.

Clark vs. Baker, settled by parties.

Vendercook vs. Work, waiting for the verdict.

Tomlinson vs. L. S. & Wy. Co., was settled by the company paying $50 damages, costs and atty's fees.

Myers vs. Lowe, judgement for plaintiff.

McFadden vs. Williamson, judgement for costs vs. plaintiff.

Edwards vs. Smith et. al., appealed to supreme court.

Aichele vs. White, finding for plaintiff.

Anderson vs. McClory, motion for new trial, overruled, and judgement on finding.

Kindergarten School.

I will open a kindergarten school in the room occupied by Miss Coder during the last school year, opposite the sheriff's residence. School to to commence on Monday, June 30th, and continue eight weeks. Terms one dollar per month, to be paid in advance. For particulars call at my residence, near the cemetery. MRS. W. P. MYERS.

To Subscribers.

For the convenience of the patrons of the COURIER, we have authorized the parties named below to receive subscriptions for the COURIER and receipt therefor, and parties desiring to make payments to them can do so: J. Wm. Wagoner, Garrett; Dr. J. M. Lawrence, Newville; Wm. H. Leas, Waterloo; W. L. Blair, Butler; Solomon Barney Spencerville.

MARRIED.—At the Reformed parsonage, Waterloo, Ind., June 2, 1881, by Rev. F. F. Christine, Mr. Hezekiah Leas, of Waterloo, Ind., to Miss Ida Taylor, of Franklin township, DeKalb county, Ind.

Spencerville.

Mr. Cahill has returned.

Mrs. John Beams is quite ill.

Mrs. J. Rhodes was ill last week.

New goods at the millinery store.

The latest styles at the millinery store.

Mrs. Silbery is visiting in Ashland, O.

Mrs. P. Bishop is visiting friends in Ohio.

School is out, and the urchins are happy.

Dr. McClaren, of St. Joe, was in town Sunday.

Rev. Norris, of Auburn, was in town Saturday.

Miss Coder spent a few days in Auburn last week.

Mrs. Draggoo and Mrs. Olds, of St. Joe, were calling on a few of their friends last Friday.

Eddie McKay, of Auburn, is in town, the guest of his sister.

The social, at Mrs. J. A. Provines' last Saturday, was a very pleasant affair.

Miss Josie Rush, "our popular school ma'am" has returned to her home in Auburn.

St. Joe.

Cabbage plants are in constant demand.

Owing to the poor quality of seed corn, nearly every farmer has more or less replanting to do.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Ryan return thanks to the meanest of all mean humanity who stole their cabbage plants.

Road district No. 6, of Concord L. T. gets $11,700 dollars R. R. land tax on their road, and still the people west of us are not happy. Will the E. J. B. hurry up that injunction.

John Cahil and the Murray Bros., of Spencerville, have lately imported from Monroeville, Ohio, two Jersey cows, and we understand will pay their attention in the future to the raising of thorough-bred stock.

Barney Bros., of the same burg, have their store building in St Joe, well under way, and will, when completed, have the largest room in town. Look out for a big stock of goods and a grand rush for goods.

J. W. Dills says everything conspires to ruin his corn this spring, the cut-worms took the first planting, and a wee mite of an ant (not aunt) are doing their best to get away with the balance. Jack, the just and unjust are visited alike.

The contract for the bridge across the St. Joe river, near this place, has been let to parties in the hub of the county. The contract for our three thousand dollar school house has also been let, Ells Donaldson & Co., being the successful bidders.

We hear it whispered that one or both of the saloons in this place are kept open to comers and goers, nearly, if not all day on Sundays. Gentlemen who wish to run saloons should keep within the law, you are being closely watched. A word of warning to the wise should be sufficient

O. H. Widney made it a point to stay away from town all of one week a short time ago, and we fear that we would not have seen his smiling countenance yet, if his good lady had not hurried him off to town for that new baby-crib. Well Oliver has a wee bit of humanity, and its a girl. To say that pa and ma are proud would not express one bit of nonsense. Oliver set em up to the boys. O. H. and lady have the best wishes of all their friends, and their number is legion.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Ransom Cook, the well-known inventor of Cook's auger, died at Saratoga, N. Y., in his 87th year. The deceased inventor was the patentee of the Armstrong gun....A drunken printer in Brooklyn, N. Y., shot his wife fatally and then killed himself....Robert Vint, a Brooklyn shoemaker, won the belt in the O'Leary international pedestrian match at New York, by the unprecedented score of 578 miles and two laps.

By the explosion of a boiler in the dye-works of Gaffney & Co., in Philadelphia, two men were blown to pieces and forty more or less injured.

THE WEST.

A shocking accident is reported from Plain City, Ohio. A barn belonging to a farmer named Andrew Lewis was burned, while the family were all away but four children. It seems that in the father's and mother's absence the children had been playing in the barn, and set fire to some old straw. The flames spread so rapidly that they could not get out and were all found burned to death. The children were aged from 3 years to 13, and when found were in a pile, showing that they had clung together in their suffering and last moments....A collision on the Rio Grande road, near Grants, Col., killed one man and wounded eight others.

The main building of the Collier white lead works, in St. Louis, was burned, the loss being $150,000, covered by insurance. Two men were killed, one by fright and the other by being run over by engines....John Griscom began a forty-five days' fast at Chicago on the 28th of May.

The Illinois Legislature adjourned May 30, after a session of five months that cost the State a quarter of a million of dollars....In removing two bodies from contiguous graves in the cemetery at Idaville, Ind., it was found that nothing was left of one but bones, while the other had turned to flint and weighed 800 pounds.

A Springfield (Ill.) dispatch of the 1st inst. says: "All hopes for the recovery of Mrs. Lincoln, widow of Abraham Lincoln, are abandoned. She daily grows weaker, and her attending physicians say that she cannot survive many days longer."....The Chicago, Pekin and Southwestern road was sold at auction for $750,000, under the second mortgage, at the Chicago Custom House....A German University is proposed, to be established in Milwaukee, Wis., to cost $2,000,000.

Liquor-dealers in Nebraska entirely ignore the new Liquor law providing for license fees of from $500 to $1,000. An association of 200 men has been organized to contest the statute, and the best of legal talent engaged.

THE SOUTH.

At Osborne's Ford, Scott county, Va., James Baker killed Alexander Osborne and two brothers named Ryner, beside mortally wounding another man....Mrs. Tiny Garrett and her daughter had a quarrel at their home near Cochran, Ga. The daughter seized a shotgun and blew the top off her mother's head. She fired a second time without effect. Her father, returning home after the shooting, beat the girl so badly that she will probably die. The mother will also die.

In Woodruff county, Ark., a little boy named Bennie Johnson, 7 years old, was sent by his parents on an errand to a neighbor's house, two miles distant. When half-way to his intended destination, and while crossing a lonely unfrequented strip of country, the little fellow was attacked and killed and partially devoured by a couple of vicious dogs.

At Bridgeport, Ala., a tramp named Mehan, while bathing with some young men, became angered because they spattered him with mud. He rushed for his knife and cut William Copeland in the neck, causing instant death. The tramp was seized and bound. While in prison, Sam Reese, cousin of Copeland, slipped up and shot Mehan dead. ....John P. Nunley, of Charleston, W. Va., became aggrieved at something said by his nephew George, a youth of 18. The uncle challenged the nephew. Pistols were the weapons, and the nephew was shot through the mouth.

Reports from Carter county, Ky., mention the killing of two women and a man named McKinney by the regulators. Other crimes are reported, and almost a reign of terror in some parts the county.

At Gainesville, Tex., John Thompson shot and killed Deputy Sheriffs Charles and Sam Meredith and L. Krilht, who attempted his arrest upon a warrant for carrying concealed weapons. Thompson escaped.

A monument of the finest Carrara marble, surmounted by a statue of a Confederate infantry soldier, was unveiled in the cemetery at Frederick, Md., in presence of several thousand persons. It will mark the graves of Southern soldiers who fell at Antietam and Monocacy.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Hunt has ordered the commander of the Alliance to proceed from Norfolk to the southern coast of Spitzbergen in search of the Jeannette.

POLITICAL.

The local elections in Virginia resulted favorably to the straight or anti-Mahone Democrats. The Readjusters have determined, it is said, to nominate Riddleberger for Governor, believing that he will receive the indorsement and support of the Republicans.

A Washington dispatch says that a conference between leading Republicans, Mahone and members of the administration has been held in that city with reference to the forthcoming Readjuster Convention in Richmond. The plans are not as yet fully formed, but there is reason to believe that the Mahone platform will be prepared in that city, and that it will be acceptable to the Republicans.

Speaker George H. Sharpe and three other members of the Republican Caucus Committee sent to each Republican member of the New York Legislature a call for a caucus on the evening of May 30. Only thirty-one responded to the call. The friends of the administration gathered to the number of fifty-seven and held a conference. The Democratic members met in caucus and resolved to support Francis Kernan and John C. Jacobs for the Senatorial seats.

The balloting for United States Senators to succeed Messrs. Conkling and Platt began in the New York Legislature on Tuesday, the 31st ult. In the Senate Conkling received nine votes, against six for John C. Jacobs, six for W. A. Wheeler, five for S. S. Rogers, three for Gov. Cornell, and five scattering. Platt received eight votes in the Senate, against seven for Kernan, six for Wheeler and ten scattering. In the House, twenty-six votes were cast for Conkling, forty-seven for Jacobs (Democratic nominee), fifteen for Wheeler, six for Cornell, eight for Rogers and twenty-four scattering. Platt received twenty-one votes in the House, Kernan (Democratic nominee) forty-seven, Depew fourteen, Cornell twelve, while thirty-three votes were divided between a dozen other persons.

The first vote for United States Senators, in joint convention of the New York Legislature, taken on the 1st inst., resulted in a manner materially different from what the preliminary vote of the preceding day indicated. Conkling and Platt received the same number of votes in the aggregate that they then had, and they came from the same persons. Cornell's vote was the same, and Depew forged ahead a little. The few minor changes were of no significance.

An interview is published in a Cleveland paper with ex-President Hayes, in which he says: "Mr. Conkling is a monomaniac on the subject of his own importance. He is so impressed with his own greatness that it has become more than an eccentricity—it is a monomania. This is quite a common phase of insanity, and the malady often takes that form. Patients often imagine they are some distinguished character or superior being. There are over fifty Presidents in insane asylums. Some think themselves Napoleon, a King, a Czar, and some even Christ or the Almighty Himself. Conkling is drifting that way."

GENERAL.

The new portion of the malleable iron-works at Hamilton, Ontario, has been damaged $125,000 by fire....Last year 11,851,738 bushels of buckwheat were raised in the United States, against 9,821,721 bushels raised in 1870. There were 44,149,479 bushels of barley raised last year, against 29,761,305 in 1870; 407,970,712 of oats, against 282,107,157; 459,501,093 bushels of wheat, against 287,745,626; 1,773,106,576 bushels of corn, against 760,944,549; and 19,863,682 bushels of rye, against 16,918,795 bushels in 1870.

The officers of the National Board of Health and of the Marine Hospital Service have been examining reports received by them from all points where yellow fever is likely to originate or occur. The reports all inspire the board with confidence that there will not be any yellow fever in the United States this year. ....There is a great want of unanimity among the religious journals of the country respecting the Revised New Testament. Few of them are willing to criticise the work as yet.... Bishop Simpson has gone to England, where he will preach the opening sermon in the great Pan-Methodist Council.

Decoration day was appropriately commemorated throughout the United States. In Chicago the graves of those who fell in blue and gray were alike ornamented with flowers and evergreens, and the city militia marched through the principal streets. At the Gettysburg National Cemetery the assemblage numbered 15,000. There was an imposing military display at Washington, and the President attended decoration ceremonies at the Soldiers' Home.

The arrivals of immigrants at Castle Garden, New York, for May were 76,812, exceeding anything ever known. The arrivals each month since the 1st of January are as follows: January, 8,382; February, 9,758; March, 27,708; April, 59,748; May, 76,812. Total for five months, 182,108. For the corresponding period of last year the figures were: January, 5,677; February, 7,904; March, 21,094; April, 46,178; May, 55,063. Total for five months, 135,916.

FOREIGN.

An immense crowd at Mitchellstown, Ireland, stoned some officers who were evicting tenants, and were in turn charged upon by the police and soldiery, many persons being injured....At Mallow, County Cork, eight farm houses have been burned....The German Government has ordered the expulsion of Mormon missionaries who have been endeavoring to make proselytes.

The situation in Ireland, says a London dispatch, begins to excite most serious apprehensions among all classes in England. From one end of the country to the other the law has no abiding place. Every form of legal process or legal execution is openly resisted and deliberately defied. In whole districts the operation of the law of the land is suspended, and the law of the Land League enforced instead. Whenever individuals more courageous than the multitude attempt the service of a writ of summons for rent, it can only be effected by a species of guerrilla warfare.

A bailiff went to serve writs on the property of Mr. Hutchins, near Mallow, County Cork, Ireland. Some women gathered around and seized him, destroying the writs, and then stripped him naked and threw him into the river. They caught him as he came out and thrashed him with furze. The unfortunate man, more dead than alive, was then tarred and feathered and hunted through the country. The head of the dragoon's horse which was killed in the fight at Mitchellstown was cut off and fixed on the top of a pole. The pole was decorated with green paper and crape. Streamers were appended to the head, and in the mouth was placed a piece of paper bearing the following words: "Here's your rent"....Kettle, of the Land League Executive Committee, was arrested at Dublin. He is charged with inciting people to combine for the purpose of refusing to pay lawful debts.

In the belief that the Land League may bring on a conflict between the crown and the masses of the Irish people, the Irish executive strongly urges the suppression of the organization....A riot occurred at Clonmel, Ireland, during a sale of tenants' interest in property, in which the hussars charged on the people with the flats of their sabers, and the people responded with stones. Several persons were injured....A correspondent of a Parisian journal was murdered by Arabs at Bijao (Tunis). His murderers were arrested, court-martialed and shot.

Lorillard's Iroquois, an American horse, won the English Derby, bringing nearly $2,000,000 to the pockets of his owner. Archer, the jockey, states that he could easily have won by three lengths. The crowd was immense, among the spectators being the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Princess Louise, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge. Iroquois was bred by A. Welch, of Chestnut Hill, Pa....The British Government is said to be determined to crush intimidation in Ireland. The riot at Clonmel, County Tipperary, was a serious affair, from which several deaths will, it is expected, result. At Woodford, County Galway, an agent was shot for refusing to accept payment of rent on the basis of Griffith's valuation....Field Marshal Tegethoff, of Austria, who has long suffered from an incurable malady, ended his tortures by suicide....The Anchor Line steamer Macedonia, wrecked on the coast of Scotland, has been abandoned. She will prove a total loss.

The New York Legislature balloted twice for Senators on the 2d inst. For the Conkling vacancy the first ballot resulted: Conkling, 34; Jacobs, 50; Wheeler, 19; Rogers, 11; Cornell, 21; scattering, 11. Second ballot: Conkling, 33; Wheeler, 17; Jacobs, 52; Bradley, 1; Rogers, 15; Cornell, 22; Fenton, 3. For the Platt vacancy the first ballot resulted: Platt, 28; Kernan, 53; Depew, 28; Cornell, 11; scattering, 36. Second ballot: Platt, 28; Depew, 30; Kernan, 52; Cornell, 12. Others scattering.... The Iowa Greenbackers, in convention at Marshalltown, nominated Hon. D. M. Clark, of Wayne county, for Governor; Hon. James M. Holland, of Henry county, for Lieutenant Governor; A. D. Dabney, of Madison county, for Supreme Judge; and Mrs. Mary E. Nash, of Des Moines, for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

An affray, arising from an eviction, occurred at Bodyke, County Clare, Ireland. The police were fired on and returned the fire. A farmer was killed by a blow from the butt end of a musket and several persons were wounded, both of the police and people.

Baby Monkeys.

Monkeys are born in almost as helpless a condition as are human beings. For the first fortnight after birth they pass their time in being nursed, in sleeping and looking about themselves.

During the whole of this time the care and attention of the mother are most exemplary; the slightest sound or movement excites her immediate notice; and with her baby in her arms, skillfully evades any approaching danger by the most adroit maneuvers. At the end of the first fortnight the little one begins to get about by itself, but always under its mother's watchful care. She frequently attempts to teach it to do for itself, but never forgets her solicitude for its safety, and at the earliest intimation of danger seizes it in her arms and seeks a place of refuge. When about six weeks old the baby begins to need more substantial nutriment than milk, and is taught to provide for itself. Its powers are speedily developed, and in a few weeks its agility is most surprising. The mother's fondness for her offspring continues; she devotes all her care to its comfort and education, and should it meet with an untimely end, her grief is so intense as frequently to cause her own death.

"The care which the females bestow upon their offspring," says Duvancel, "is so tender, and even refined, that one would be almost tempted to attribute the sentiment to a rational rather than an instinctive process. It is a curious and interesting spectacle, which a little precaution has sometimes enabled me to witness, to see these females carry their young to the river, wash their faces in spite of their childish outcries, and altogether bestow upon their cleanliness a time and attention that in many cases the children of our own species might well envy. The Malays, indeed, related a fact to me, which I doubted at first, but which I believe to be in a great measure confirmed by my own subsequent observations—it is, that the young siamangs, while yet too week to go alone, are all carried by individuals of their own sex; by their fathers if they are males, and by their mothers if females."

M. d'Osbonville states that the parents exercise their parental authority over their children in a sort of judicial and strictly impartial form. "The young ones were seen to sport and gambol with one another in the presence of their mother, who sat ready to give judgment and punish misdemeanors. When any one was found guilty of foul play or malicious conduct toward another of the family, the parent interfered by seizing the young criminal by the tail, which she held fast with one of her paws till she boxed his ears with the other."—Chambers' Journal.

They tell a story in Newburyport about a man who called on a respectable widow of his acquaintance and said: "Madam, I'm looking for a wife. I don't think you'll hardly do, but I didn't know but what you might think of somebody that would." The bewildered man has forgotten what the widow said, but has the impression that a tornado struck the town about that time.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

For Neuralgia.—Steep green horse-radish root in cold vinegar, warm the liquid slightly, and bathe the parts affected.

For Constipation.—One ounce of senna, the same quantity of peppermint leaves, one-half pound figs, all chopped fine and mixed with a few spoonfuls of molasses. Take a small piece after each meal.

Diphtheria.—Dr. C. R. S. Curtis, of Quincy, Ill., reports in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal the results of the local use of a decoction of leaves of black walnut in diphtheria. The remedy was chiefly employed as a gargle or applied with a swab to the throat and fauces. A poultice of the leaves was also resorted to in some instances. Dr. Curtis adopted the same remedy in consequence of the recommendation by Prof. Nelaton in malignant pustula. The use of the gargle was unattended by discomfort, no patient objecting to it. Improvement in each instance was rapid, the ash-colored spots disappearing.

Lime Water and Milk.—Experience proves that lime water and milk are not only food and medicine at an early period of life, but also at a later, when the functions of digestion and assimilation are feeble and easily perverted. A stomach taxed by gluttony, irritated by improper food, inflamed by alcohol, enfeebled by disease, or otherwise unfitted for its duties—as is shown by the various symptoms attending upon indigestion, dyspepsia, diarrhea, dysentery and fever—will resume its work, and do it energetically, on an exclusive diet of bread and milk and lime water. A bowl of cow's milk may have four table-spoonfuls of lime water to it with good effect.

Cold Drinks.—It is true, remarks Dr. J. H. Hanaford, that certain persons, or persons in certain conditions, cannot take very cold drinks at or near the meal time without impairing digestion, since the stomach must be kept at about 98 deg. Fah. that digestion may be reasonably successful. Even a slight depression in the temperature of the stomach is sufficient to arrest the digestive process, temporarily, at least, and, of course, derange the stomach. This class—small, it is true—would be injudicious in the use of any cold drinks or very cold food, though it is by no means needful to use tea or coffee on this account, since hot water, properly prepared, may take their places. The use of ice water, especially in the hot season, when the system is so debilitated as not to be able to rally after unusual chill, necessarily following a copious drink of ice-water, must prove unfavorable. It not only expels the natural heat of the stomach, but lessens the natural flow of the gastric juice—if it does not totally suspend it—on the supply of which good digestion must depend, in a great measure. Indeed, the influence of the use of very cold drinks is to produce flabbiness about the stomach, indigestion, a sensation of heaviness, a "tasting of the food" long after it is taken. It ordinarily leads to the use of stimulants to aid in digestion, encouraging intemperance. In short, the stomach is debilitated by such a course—producing more or less dyspepsia.

An Incident of the Blockade.

A correspondent of the Boston Advertiser, discussing the subject of color blindness, relates the following as coming under his own experience when employed in the blockade of the port of Wilmington, North Carolina, during the war of the rebellion: "The ships on blockade duty got under way at sunset, and at dark moved to their regular stations, some going well in toward Fort Caswell and others further off, keeping under low steam and in a specified beat. To prevent as far as possible our own ships from mistaking and firing into each other, each supposing the other a blockade runner, as did happen more than once, my own ship getting three 24-pound shells from one of our own vessels, a system of challenging and answering signals by showing or flashing a red or white light was established. As we all knew the station or beat of each ship, we could usually tell with tolerable certainty what vessel was sighted. But, to prevent accidents, it was the rule for any ship doubting to challenge by showing the challenging signal for that particular night. If no answering light was shown, or an incorrect one, the challenger had a right to fire. One night my own ship was challenged. We were so near that all hands on my vessel knew well what ship made the challenge. We answered by showing a red light for three or four seconds. Again we were challenged and again we answered as before. All hands were at quarters. Almost immediately after our second answer the lock-string of the 100-pounder rifle on board the challenger was pulled, the gun, pointed directly at my ship, happily missing fire. Before the gun could be reprimed we were made out, and no harm done. The next day an interview was had with the commander of the challenging ship, and he was informed by me that his challenges were correctly answered, I myself seeing it done. Why our answers were not seen by his ship could not be made out. He informed me, however, that he had been many months in command of his ship, and never before had that gun missed fire."

Flowers at Eight Times Their Weight in Gold.

The cut-flower business, another phase of horticulture, is perhaps greater in the United States than in any other part of the world. Certainly the use of cut flowers in New York, for bouquets, baskets and other designs, is far greater than in either London or Paris, and the taste shown in their arrangement here is vastly superior. It is estimated that $3,000,000 were paid for cut flowers in New York in 1880, one-third of which was for rose buds. Immense glass structures are erected in the suburbs for the special purpose of growing cut flowers to supply the bouquet makers of the city. Not less than twenty acres of glass surface is devoted to the purpose of forcing roses alone during the winter months. At some seasons the prices paid for these forced rose buds are perfectly astounding. One grower, of Madison, N. J., took into New York 300 buds of the crimson rose known as "Gen. Jacqueminot," for which he received, at wholesale, $300, and which, no doubt, were retailed at $1.50 to $2 each. A flower dealer in Fourteenth street, a few days before Christmas, received the only four of this same variety of rose that were offered in the city, and found a customer for them at $60, or $15 apiece, or eight times the value of their weight in gold.—Peter Henderson, in Scribner.

In an Insect's Place.

What a horrible place must this world appear when regarded according to our ideas from an insect's point of view! The air infested with huge flying hungry dragons, whose gaping and snapping mouths are ever intent upon swallowing the innocent creatures for whom, according to the insect, if he were like us, a properly constructed world ought to be exclusively adapted. The solid earth continually shaken by the approaching tread of hideous giants—moving mountains—that crush out precious lives at every footstep, an occasional draught of the blood of these monsters, stolen at life-risk, affording but poor compensation for such fatal persecution.

Let us hope that the little victims are less like ourselves than the doings of ants and bees might lead us to suppose; that their mental anxieties are not proportionate to the optical vigilance indicated by the 4,000 eye-lenses of the common house fly, the 17,000 of the cabbage butterfly and the wide-awake dragonfly, or the 25,000 possessed by certain species of still more vigilant beetles. The insect must see a whole world of wonders of which we know little or nothing. True, we have microscopes, with which we can see one thing at a time if carefully laid upon the stage; but what is the finest instrument Ross can produce compared to that with 25,000 object glasses, all of them probably achromatic, and each one a living instrument with its own nerve branch supplying a separate sensation? To creatures thus endowed with microscopic vision, a cloud of sandy dust must appear like an avalanche of massive rock fragments, and everything else proportionally monstrous.

Insects are probably acquainted with a whole world of physical facts of which we are utterly ignorant. Our auditory apparatus supplies us with a knowledge of sounds. What are these sounds? They are vibrations of matter which are capable of producing corresponding or sympathetic vibrations of the drums of our ears or the bones of our skull. When we carefully examine the subject, and count the number of vibrations that produce our world of sounds of varying pitch, we find that the human ear can only respond to a limited range of such vibrations. If they exceed 3,000 per second the sound becomes too shrill for average people to hear it, though some exceptional ears can take up pulsations or waves that succeed each other more rapidly than this.

Reasoning from the analogy of stretched strings and membranes and of air vibrating in tubes, etc., we are justified in concluding that the smaller the drum or tube the higher will be the note it produces when agitated, and the smaller and the more rapid the aerial wave to which it will respond. The drums of insect ears, and the tubes, etc., connected with them, are so minute that their world of sounds probably begins where ours ceases; and what appears to us as a continuous sound is to them a series of separated blows just as vibrations of 10 or 12 per second appear separated to us. We begin to hear such vibrations as continuous sounds when they amount to 30 per second. The insect's continuous sound probably begins beyond 3,000. The bluebottle may thus enjoy a whole world of exquisite music of which we know nothing.—Belgravia.

The White Mountains.

The Indians, it is known, inhabited these mountains long before the settlement of any portion of New England by whites. But their villages were chiefly situated upon the skirts, where the hunting and fishing were good, and the ground favorable to their primitive mode of cultivating it. His infallible eye for the best sites is sufficiently evident, since we find the Indian's uncouth wigwam invariably succeeded by the most important settlements of the English.

Otherwise, the mountains were for the American Indian, as for the natural man in all ages, a sealed book. He regarded them not only as an image, but as the actual dwelling-place of Omnipotence. His dreaded Manitou, whose voice was the thunder, whose anger the lightning, and on whose face no mortal could look and live, was the counterpart of the terrible Thor, the Icelandic god, throned in a palace of ice, among frozen and inaccessible peaks. So far, then, as he was concerned, the mountain remained inviolate, inviolable, as a kind of hell filled with the despairing shrieks of those who, in an evil hour, transgressed the limits sacred to immortals.

The first mention I have met with of the Indian name for these mountains is in the narrative of Capt. John Gyles, printed in Boston in 1736, saying that "the White Hills, called the Teddon [Katahdin], at the head of Penobscot river, are, by the Indians, said to be much higher than those called Agiockochook, above Saco." The probable signification of this Indian word is, according to the best living authority, "the mountains on that side," or "over yonder," to distinguish them from the mountains of the Penobscot.

It is not precisely known when or how these granite peaks first took the name of White mountains. We find them so designated in 1672 by Josselyn, who himself performed the feat of ascending the highest summit, of which a brief record is found in his "New England's Rarities." One cannot help saying of this book that either the author was a liar of the first magnitude, or else we have to regret the degeneracy of nature, exhausted by her long travail; for this writer gravely tells us of frogs that were as big as a child a year old, and of poisonous serpents which the Indians caught with their bare hands, and ate alive with great gusto. These are rarities indeed!

The name is traced, not, as in the case of Mont Blanc, to the fact that their peaks are covered with perpetual snows, for this is true of only half the year, but from the circumstance that the bare granite of which the highest are composed transmits a white light when observed from a distance. Mariners approaching from the open sea descried what seemed a cloud-bank rising from the landward horizon when twenty leagues from the nearest coast, and before any other land was visible.—Harper's Magazine.

In China literary property is on the same footing as other property. A person printing and selling the works of an author without his permission is liable to a punishment of 100 blows of the bamboo and three years' deportation. If he has stopped short at printing and not begun to sell, the penalty is fifty blows together with the forfeiture of books and blocks for which it is intended to print.

The site of an ancient camp of Indians at Cambridge, Mass., has for many years been occupied by a Baptist Church. The spirits of the red men haunt the spot, because they cannot rest under the wrong done them by the whites, and three times they have burned the meeting-house. On each occasion an Indian war-whoop was heard, mingled with the crackling of the flames. Old residents tell this story with great solemnity.

They Never Smiled.

A Massachusetts man went to call on some school children, and began to tell them funny stories and pleasant tales which made them laugh. Suddenly noticing their faces becoming sober he turned and saw the teacher threatening them with gestures and a fierce expression of face. On asking her what the matter was, she said in a harsh and solemn voice, "They are never allowed to smile in my room." "Then I think your room ought to be more agreeable than your company," he answered, and it is to be hoped that he took measures by dismissing her to make it so.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1881.

MOODY and Sankey are urged to go to Germany and preach through interpreters.

COL. EDWIN A. OSBORNE, of Raleigh, N. C., who received many severe wounds while in the Confederate service, has been ordained a priest in the Episcopal church.

AN Illinois pond was entirely frozen over last winter, and, according to a Chicago paper, it was found when the ice broke up that the fish under it had been so numerous that thousands of them were smothered.

WHILE the recent floods in the Missouri river valley were raging, a man in Kansas City proposed to furnish the medical colleges with subjects for the dissecting-rooms by stretching a seine across the swollen river.

LIGHTNING singled out a $5,000 stallion to kill at Bloomington, Ill., leaving eleven comparatively valueless horses uninjured. The owner, who had been an earnest Christian, resigned his church membership, and resumed a long-neglected habit of profanity, declaring that Providence was against him anyhow.

A SWINDLER calling himself the Wisconsin Dental College has sold hundreds of diplomas at $12 each. Applicants were not asked to give any proof of fitness, or to do anything whatever except send the money, in order to receive an elaborately mounted parchment bearing the signatures and seal of "the faculty."

SCOTT living in New Mexico had a friend who wanted another man murdered, and, being of an obliging disposition, Scott agreed to do the favor. He rode fifty miles to accomplish it, and found Donovan, who was the victim, in a saloon. So Scott sat down and played cards with him. Donovan, observing that Scott was a good deal excited about something, drew his revolver, cocked it and put it in his lap, without Scott's noticing it. So what was Scott's surprise on crying out, "I'm going to kill you," to find himself, instead of Donovan, falling dead on the floor.

THAT a woman more completely covered by her night robe than she is in a party or at a ball would be shocked by intrusion, in the one case, when, without a blush, she would display herself to the public gaze, in the other, is one of those social paradoxes, whose actual existence is its only excuse for existing. These arbitrary and confusing distinctions are to be seen everywhere. A young lady clad, or, rather, unclad, in the toilet common to many an evening party, dared to walk with a gentleman down Broadway the other evening, when she was shortly after arrested by a policeman.

FOUR years ago, Mrs. George Potter, of Utica, N. Y., who then lived in Iowa, was conscious of the passage of some living object down her throat while taking a drink of water. Soon afterward she began to have fits and apoplectic symptoms. Her appetite was insatiable, but her sufferings increased and were excruciating. Many doctors treated her, but she got no relief. She pretended to feel the animal moving in her stomach, and finally a physician in Utica, adopting Mrs. Potter's theory, commenced to give medicines calculated to destroy animal life if it existed there. Recently the movements ceased. The disturbing cause proved to be a toad, which had grown to full size after it was swallowed. Mrs. Potter experienced immediate relief.

A MEMBER of a Pennsylvania banking association, which was not incorporated, sold his shares and withdrew. He had been conspicuously advertised as a Director, and no notice was given of his retirement, further than to omit his name from the published list of officers. The concern failed. A depositor sued the ex-Director for his claim, on the ground that the deposit was made in ignorance of his withdrawal, of which notification ought to have been given. The Supreme Court has decided for the plaintiff, Judge Sterrett says: "Where an ostensible or known member of a copartnership retires therefrom, and wishes to shield himself from liability for further debts of the firm, it is necessary that personal notice of his withdrawal be given to all who have had dealings with the firm, and that notice be given by publication, or otherwise, to all others."

THERE is a cheap restaurant in New York which sells coffee at 1 cent per cup, soup, 2 cents a bowl, with roasts, fries and various miscellaneous dishes, such as fried liver, liver stews, roast heart, starting at 2 cents, and ending with macaroni at 5 cents. No plates or knives are furnished except for meat, and crullers known as "floaters" are served on the flat table. The air is full of music like this: "Put up two livers;" "coffee in a cup;" "let her come in the dark;" "twice on the pig's head;" "Friday, your brains;" "two frogs in a bowl;" "let it be thick;" "Sam, that roast beef this way lively;" "more fire on that steak;" "send out a full brass band;" "floaters to the front." The fellow who said that restaurant was derived from two Latin words, res, a thing, and taurus, a bull—res-taurant, "a bully thing"—ought to see this one.

"THE "Peerless Beauty," who received the first prize from a circus proprietor as the handsomest woman in America, has "full and expressive features, brown and sparkling eyes; as to her figure, sculpture could do no more in art than this wondrous flesh and blood has done in nature." As to her intellectual gifts—her wit, her intelligence, her information—one who has talked with her testifies in a very emphatic manner. After an introduction to her, he asked: "Fair Helen, what news from Troy?" The "Helen" addressed gave a look of most superb disdain, and, arching her neck with the grace of a goddess, replied: "I ain't Helen neither, and I don't know nothin' about Troy—wasn't never there. What'r yer givin' us?" "Don't you sometimes feel the inferiority of the crowd that gape and stare at you every day?" "I'm pooty, I knows that, and I reckon Daddy Forepaugh knows it, too, for he poneys up the spondulix every Saturday evenin' reg'lar as a clock." "But don't you dream oftentimes of greater and more fitting triumphs than the plaudits of an ignorant crowd?" "Well, I du wish old Forepaugh'd raise my pay, but I guess he thinks he's payin' 'bout as much now as his bank'll stand. I rather like bein' looked at, tho', I vow I du. There's that good-lookin' feller over there with a black mustache—" This shows that a handsome woman may have beauty as well as brains.

How and Where Globes Are Made.

It is a fact not known, perhaps, by many readers that Troy is one of the largest and best producers of school and library globes in the country. The manufacture was begun in this city in 1852. At first only a ball five inches in diameter was made, but a ten-inch terrestrial globe was soon added. The list of sizes was rapidly increased. The balls are made in Boston, but the appendages are supplied and the globes mounted and shipped in this city, where are owned the plates from which the maps are printed.

Globe-making is a skillful and delicate process. The maps are printed in small sections on English drawing paper, and these segments must be so nicely put upon the hollow ball of paper mache that there shall be not the slightest break in the alignment of letters or the continuity of lines when the smooth and painted surface is complete. Three months are required to construct one of these worlds in miniature from the time that the ball is begun until it rests in its frame or sits aloft upon a brass, bronze or nickel standard. And it must be so trimmed and mounted that it will have no disinclination to change its inclination in the frame and will hang so truly in space that it will halt in its revolution at any time when so commanded and remain motionless, as if its center of gravity were in truth equally distant from all points upon the circumference. If the globe refuse to rest with any other country than America on top, the maker will be deemed more patriotic than skillful. The sizes manufactured for general use range from three to thirty inches in diameter, and from $2 to $225 in price, and are mounted in forty different styles.—Troy Times.

Extravagant but Rather Pretty.

The following beautiful tribute to woman was recently delivered by a reformed man: "I should like to propose a toast to-night, although a total abstinence man myself—a toast to woman. To be drank, not in liquor of any kind, for we should never pledge a woman in that which may bring her husband reeling home to abuse where he should love and cherish, send her sons to a drunkard's grave, and her daughters to a life of shame. Oh, no, not in that, but rather in the life-giving water, pure as her chasity, clear as her intuitions, bright as her smile, sparkling as the laughter of her eyes, cheering as her consolation, strong and sustaining as her love—in the crystal water I would drink to her that she would remain queen regnant in the empire she has already won, grounded deep as the universe in love."

EXTRACT from diary of the Czar: "11 p. m. A quieter day than usual. A noise was heard in wainscot about 8 p. m.; turned out the guard—mouse. Czarina fearfully nervous; no wonder, this boycotting business must stop—I shall go out if it blows me. My eldest son looked at me rather curiously this afternoon; seemed to be examining my points. Can he have joined the Nihilists? Took a pill to-night; had it analyzed; made guard swallow three of them to make sure. Hark, what was that? Nothing, of course, a falling clincker, what foolishness. Shall now take my nightcapowiskeyvich."—New York Commercial.

NAMES and occupations reported to London census enumerators: "'Wm. Wackwinkle, aged 99, cobblers' wax merchant;' 'Simon Slitwizen, bug destroyer and pork-sausage maker;' 'Wm. Barlow, hoof padder, Herts,' with, under the head of afflictions, 'food and mouth disease, namely, nothing to eat and jolly bad boots.' Some boldly inscribed themselves cadger and beggar and 'magsman,' the last-mentioned worthy putting himself down as 'out of luck' instead of out of work. And yet one more, more impudent than all the rest, set himself down thief—'Joe ——, aged 24, thief, plenty of work, Portland.'"

A HOUSE painter falling from the third story of a house in Maine, where the prohibition law is enforced, and being given a glass of water to revive him, piteously asked: "How far has a fellow got to fall before you let him have brandy in this town?"

A QUARTERLY REPORT.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The Republican party under the present administration has been doing business nearly three months. The Executive has made all of the communications to the Senate he desired to make. The administration is launched upon the sea of public opinion. It has proceeded far enough to give the country an opportunity to form an estimate of the spirit, the purposes, the general character of this administration; and some light has also been thrown upon its origin. It is proper to make the first quarterly report on behalf of the administration. What has the Republican party accomplished in this first quarter? What is its indicated purpose? What sort of an administration is it? By what means and by what methods do we find it was placed in power? What are its achievements in this first quarter?

First, there is the bargain with Mahone. No more infamous and unpatriotic bargain and sale have been known in the politics of this country. The infamy was sanctioned ostentatiously by the President and participated in by all of the Republican Senators of the United States. The Republican party was thus committed to and involved in the disgraceful proceeding. The Republican party became the purchaser and the ally of Mahone. The Senate became Republican, not by the votes of the Legislatures of the States, not by the votes of the people, but by treachery and infamous trading.

Then there was Riddleberger. Riddleberger was a part of the price. Riddleberger was not a Republican. He was not known to any Republican Senator. Mr. Mahone said in the Senate that he alone was responsible for the introduction of Riddleberger's name into the Senate chamber. He was a Repudiator, and an obnoxious man in his State. But the Republicans of the Senate blockaded the public business two months in the vain effort to make Riddleberger Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. This was done with the sanction and co-operation of the Executive.

Then there was Gorham. He had said in his Republican paper some things unpleasant to the President, and the President in a letter attacked the Republican Senate for its endeavor to make Gorham its Secretary. The bargain with Mahone was not an offense in the eyes of the President; he laureled that infamy with Presidential flowers. The attempt to elect Riddleberger was not an offense in the opinion of the President; but the President in writing attacked the Republican United States Senators for the attempt to elect Gorham, because Gorham had told some truth about Garfield.

Then there was the star-route exposure, which explained to the country that Garfield had been elected by corruptionists and by corruption funds, and that said funds had been contributed at the personal solicitation of Gen. Garfield, who, in the House of Representatives, had had abundant means of information touching the star-route peculations. Brady had been accused of these peculations in the House while Garfield was a member. Gen. Garfield knew with what Brady and the star-route people were charged. After this knowledge it was made known to him, while he was a candidate for the Presidency, that upon his personal solicitation some of the money dishonestly taken from the treasury of the United States would be contributed toward his election. He made this request in writing, and at the same time asked "how the departments generally were doing."

Then, as another fact to be incorporated in this quarterly report, we find two seats in the United States Senate to which the Empire State is entitled vacant, made vacant by a quarrel between the Executive and prominent and representative men of the Republican party. We see the Vice President of the United States and a member of the President's Cabinet and the two Senators from the foremost of the States unite in accusing the President of dishonorable conduct, un-Republican behavior, and we learn with much directness from some of these prominent Republicans that the President, before his election and since, has been guilty of treating the highest office in the land with disgraceful disrespect, has "dickered" with it as though it were a piece of his personal property, and has shown that all of his handsome words in favor of the betterment of the civil service of the country are the phrases of a hypocrite.

In the first quarter the Republican party is become involved in a wrangle from which it can not soon recover, if recover it can at all, and the fact is disclosed that its only purpose, its sole errand on earth, relates to a petty matter of small spoils. The country also knows that in obedience to an indignant public sentiment the Republican Senators were compelled to abandon the unworthy, unpatriotic, contemptible position they greedily held two months of obstructing the public business to foist Riddleberger and Gorham upon the public service. The Republicans of the Senate were obliged to make a complete surrender to the strength of the Democratic position and to Democratic tenacity. This seems to be a tolerably full and impartial account of the doings of the Republican party for the first quarter. The country is to be congratulated upon one thing; it knows more of the Republican organization than it knew on the 4th day of last March.

The First Stage.

The Garfield administration has passed through its first stage. It has been stormy beyond precedent. For those who entertained expectations of Garfield, it has been decidedly disappointing. Not so, however, for those who could correctly estimate probabilities concerning him; more especially after his Cabinet was announced. Blaine was given the control. Blaine in the Cabinet would, of course, be as he had been on the floor and as Speaker of the House of Representatives—tricky, audacious, unpolitic, with the added quality of revengefulness, as the result of disappointments. With him power was something to be used for punishing those who had stood between him and the object of his ambition. No one who could form a decent estimate of human motives operating in a mind like Blaine's could expect him to act otherwise. In appointing Blaine, Garfield gave himself away. It may be he shared Blaine's revengefulness. A stronger mind like Blaine's would speedily bring him in sympathy with almost any object. In the first hour of its existence the administration conceived the unnatural purpose of turning upon and pursuing to the death those to whom it was chiefly indebted for that existence. It committed parricide as soon as it could raise an arm to strike the blow. There are those who maintain that it was Garfield's crime in fact as well as in form; that it was he who conceived the purpose, Blaine merely assenting. But the overwhelming proof is that the unnatural purpose was conceived by Blaine, and that Garfield without much hesitation fell into it, his moral perceptions being too feeble to save him from the enormous guilt.

To state the case more plainly, just as subsequent acts describe it: It was in the first hour determined that, as a rule, Grant men—meaning thereby those who worked for Grant for President and who afterward fought and won the battle for Garfield—should have no favors from the administration. Not only this; on the true Donnybrook principle, there should be a club for every Grant head. To make a practical application of this policy, and drive Grant men either into tame submission, with Blaine's foot on their necks, or into open antagonism, Robertson was appointed. It is unnecessary to rehearse this dismal story of perfidy, ending in the rupture of the Republican party. But the Grant men who would not surrender were driven out, or rather compelled to go out to preserve their manhood. I suspect that by far the larger part of those who succumbed did so only to destroy Garfield. Of course there are exceptions, as in New York. There can be no love with enforced relations of this kind. Hate must be the outcome. Among the immediate results, the Senate adjourns with a Democratic majority, instead of the Republican majority at Garfield's inauguration.—Washington Cor. New York Sun.

INDIANA NEWS.

A SNAKE, said to be nineteen feet long, was seen on the farm of Hon. J. W. Sansberry, near Anderson.

THE 5-year-old son of Wm. Pitts, living south of Knightstown, was burned to death in a straw-pile set on fire by some children.

FARMERS in Hamilton county complain of damage done to the corn by wire and grub worms, in many cases necessitating entire replanting.

R. J. WILSON was training a $1,000 trotter at Rushville, a few days ago, when it reared up, fell back and broke its neck.

WILLIAM SCHOOPMIRE, of Rising Sun, was bitten on the right wrist by a bulldog, supposed to be mad. His arm is frightfully swollen.

A HEN killed at South Bend, the other day, was found to contain eight full-sized eggs with soft shell and seven others of different sizes, or fifteen eggs in all.

A DISEASE resembling lung fever has made its appearance among the horses of Jackson township, Huntington county, and causes death in a very short time.

DR. N. P. HOWARD, SR., of Danville, has had under his treatment the largest woman in America, if not in the world, Mary Powers. It is stated that her weight is about 800 pounds.

MRS. ELIZABETH STANFIELD died of paralysis of the heart at Fairmount, lately. Her age was 88. She settled there in 1836, and her husband laid out the original plat of the town.

IN 1879 Frank McDonald, aged 15, and Naoma Moore, aged 14, were married at Shelbyville, and lived together as man and wife until last week, when the boy concluded he wouldn't play any more, and resigned.

TWO SMALL boys of Highland township, Greene county, were out in the woods. One of them suggested that the other eat spikenard as a remedy for his cough. The boy ate what proved to be wild turnip, and was dead in five hours.

THE Logansport Pharos has been presented with a portion of a newspaper printed in Philadelphia, on Thursday, November 9, 1798, and the renowned name of Thomas Paine appears at the masthead as editor. An item reads: "Gen. Washington is expected to visit this city about the first of next month."

THE new drainage law of Indiana is now in full force and effect, and it is the duty of Township Trustees at the time they select Road Supervisors, the first Monday in June, to name six Drainage Commissioners, and from these the Judges of the respective Circuit Courts will appoint two.

WASHINGTON BENSON, a wealthy farmer of Porter, Mich., met his death in an encounter with a vicious stallion near South Bend. The animal first crushed him with its fore feet, then grabbed his face in its teeth and bit off his right cheek. Until beaten off with clubs the brute continued to crush in the old man's ribs and eat his face.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the Indiana Coal road, a newly-proposed line of railroad to run from Terre Haute to Columbus, through Vigo, Green, Sullivan, Morgan, Brown and Bartholomew counties, has visited the latter city to record a mortgage of $1,500,000 on the roadway and equipments when built in favor of and to secure the bondholders. The mortgage has been recorded in each county through which the road passes.

REV. D. E. HUDSON, of South Bend, editor of the Ave Maria Magazine, at Notre Dame, is the fortunate owner of a photograph of a picture that has a history. It is a photograph of the only sketch made of the Emperor Napoleon I., and was secretly drawn by the attendant physician immediately after the great General's death, and by him presented to a family who idolized the dead Emperor.

AS COURTNEY MCKEE and family and sister-in-law, Mrs. Ansberger, and her son, were returning to their home in Sevastopol, in a wagon, when near Akron, the horses became frightened and ran away, upsetting the wagon and throwing the inmates to the ground, instantly killing a 7-year-old son of Dr. Ansberger. Mr. McKee is supposed to be fatally injured, and Mrs. McKee and Mrs. Ansberger are very seriously hurt.

HON. S. M. STOCKSLAGER, member of Congress for the New Albany district, has made the following selections for the positions in the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the Military Academy at West Point: Cadet to the United States Military Academy, Joseph H. Shea, of Scott county. Mr. Shea is a nephew of Col. Thomas Shea. For alternate cadet to Military Academy, Edward M. Lewis, of Floyd county. Cadet Midshipman in the navy, Martin McC. Fullenlove, of Floyd county. For alternate, Edwin V. Johnson, son of ex-Mayor Johnson, of Seymour.

ROBERT SPAUGH employed a man to open and work a stone quarry on his farm near Hope. As soon as he had cleaned away the dirt he discovered a smooth, round hole in the solid rock about six inches in diameter. As layer after layer of stone was removed the hole was still discernible. When he had quarried out the rock to a depth of sixteen feet, he found the monster which had made and used the curious road. It was an animal of the snake species, fourteen feet in length, with a large head, the mouth having twelve teeth, with four large tushes three and a half inches in length. A part of the monster was petrified and part not.

Lincoln and Father Blair.

Respect and reverence for old age was one of Lincoln's marked characteristics, as was strikingly shown in an instance which occurred on the route from Springfield, Ill., to Washington before the ceremonial of his first inauguration.

The sullen roar of civil war was heard in the distance, and a spirit of apprehension and doubt possessed all grades of society, as was made manifest in the vast crowds that assembled everywhere along the line to either greet the President with enthusiastic cheers or muttered mad threats of denunciation and death.

In the progress of the journey the party had reachen one of the larger cities of Southern Indiana, and Lincoln, while standing on the platform of the car, discovered an old white-haired man, whose form at one time had been of herculean proportions, but then bent and feeble, vainly making an attempt to approach him. It mattered not to Lincoln that his audience were spell-bound with the weight of his argument, and thrilled with the appeal made to their patriotism and loyalty. For as if alone before him stood the veteran of almost a century (Father Blair), challenging his assistance and sympathy, so with a few neatly turned and appropriate words he descended, passed rapidly through the throng, and placing the old man's arm within his own, retraced his steps to his former position.—Iowa State Register.

"A MULTIPLICATION of holidays," says the Albany Law Journal, "is a sure indication of the decadence of a nation." "Then," shouts a civil service reform Treasury clerk, "Let us decay."

KIDNEY WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES! WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Stork, of Junction City, Kansas, says, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular Physicians had been trying for four years.

Mrs. John Arnall, of Washington, Ohio, says her boy was given up to die by four prominent physicians and that he was afterwards cured by Kidney-Wort.

M. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was not expected to live, being bloated beyond belief, but Kidney-Wort cured him.

Anna L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says that seven years suffering from kidney troubles and other complications was ended by the use of Kidney-Wort.

John B. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years from liver and kidney troubles and after taking "barrels of other medicines," Kidney-Wort made him well.

Michael Coto of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with kidney difficulty and was unable to work. Kidney-Wort made him "well as ever."

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, Constipation and Piles.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

Be Sensible.

You have allowed your bowels to become habitually costive, your liver has become torpid, the same thing ails your kidneys, get a package of Kidney-Wort, take it faithfully and soon you will forget you've got any such organs, for you will be a well man.—[Albany Argus.

A Sure Cure for Piles.

Do you know what it is to suffer with Piles? If you do, you know what is one of the worst torments of the human frame. The most perfect cure ever known is Kidney-Wort. It cures constipation, and then its tonic action restores health to the diseased bowels and prevents recurrence of the disease. Try it without delay. The dry and the liquid are both sold by druggists.—Ex.

From the Hub.

There is perhaps no tonic offered to the people that possesses as much real intrinsic value as the Hop Bitters. Just at this season of the year, when the stomach needs an appetizer, or the blood needs purifying, the cheapest and best remedy is Hop Bitters. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, don't wait until you are prostrated by a disease, that may take months for you to recover in.—[Boston Globe.

Woman's Wisdom.

"She insists that it is more importance, that her family shall be kept in full health, than that she should have all the fashionable dresses and styles of the times. She therefore sees to it, that each member of her family is supplied with enough Hop Bitters, at the first appearance of any symptoms of ill health, to prevent a fit of sickness with attendant expense, care and anxiety. All women should exercise their wisdom in this way."—[New Haven Palladium.

First-Rate Luck.

I had much talk with a miner who was on his way back to Georgia with his family after a residence of many years in the mining regions of the Southwest. He had been living lately in a region "680 miles west" of some place I had never heard of before. He had a dry, condensed style of narration, as if he had but a small stock of language on hand, and must make every word tell as much as possible. He thought the rough justice of the mining regions as good as any; rather better, I suspected, than the more elaborate and uncertain methods of civilization; said the West was a good country for a man to mind his own business in, and liked life there as a whole, but said the women and children get lonesome. I asked what people did there for amusement or entertainment. "Same as they do in other civilized countries, o' course," he replied; which, considering what he had told me of the wildness of life in that region seemed so good an answer that I did not push my inquires futher in that direction. But he went on: "Some cussed fools hunts cinnamon when they can't find nothin' else to do. Now a cinnamon bear allus minds his own business, an' the old settlers out thar knows too much to meddle with 'em. It's the young chaps—they're mostly too fresh to keep long in that climit. "Not long ago," he continued, "some English fellers come out thar an' they must have a big hunt. They wanted me to go along 'cause I knowed the country, an' they'd never seen no cinnamon bears. But I told 'em I hadn't lost no cinnamon bears, an' hadn't no time to hunt up other people's stock. Ef any o' their'n was lost it was all right for 'em to find 'em, but they must excouse me. Well they went up in the foot hills, an' they had mighty good luck." Here he paused, but knowing that it irritates such men to have a listener "try to be so smart" as to anticipate what they are going to say, I waited. "Yes, mighty good luck. The bear knocked one hoss over a bank, an' broke the feller's leg an' his collar-bone, an' put his shoulder out o' place. His hoss was hurt so they had to shoot it. 'Nother chap found his bear, too, an' the bear chawed him up, an' knocked him around with sich looseness that he didn't know which one of the brothers he was. The rest o' the party had to git some Chinamen from a minin' camp to bring the hunters into town on stretchers. So you see they foun' their bears, an' had fust-rate luck."—[Texas Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc. and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

ADDRESS,

Delivered at the Decoration Services in Butler, May 30, 1881, by Rev. D. F. Kain.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: We are called together by the order of a grateful country. It is befitting that we should pause in our sumptuous feasting and indulge in expressions of gratitude to those, the luxury of whose blood we enjoy. The memories of those who bless us most should be held most sacred. There is a time when the duties and cares of life should be laid aside, and all come up to meet upon the broad grounds of universal love and gratitude toward those who did not fear to draw the sword at their country's call, or shed their blood upon the shrine of constitutional liberty. It is only right and proper that out of the 365 days in the year, one should be spent in garlanding the graves of our gallant and patriotic dead with the choicest flowers, as well as carrying a consoling ray into the bleeding heart of the lonely widow, the orphan, the brother or [illegible] memory of those who were near and dear to them;—worthy are they to be recorded upon the most sacred page of the American's memory. Worthy deeds make worthy men, and as the most magnanimous principle of true goodness was enunciated in this language by the Lord of both worlds, "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister," we are thus furnished with tested scales upon which to weigh the true greatness of men. To be served is not to be great; but to be great is to act great, to serve, to minister to the wants of the defenseless, to bear the burdens of society, or of our country. The soldiers of our country are the custodians of America's life—the guardians of the free institutions of our commonwealth, the fathers of the political and religious liberties we enjoy, the cornerstone of the king's palace, the main columns upon which rests the superstructure of free governments, the bed-rock of all law and order, the guarantee of the rights of person, property and the pursuit of happiness. The soldier is the most sacrificing man known to human conditions. This thought is most beautifully expressed in the lines of Sir John Harrington, written in camp after a severe battle:

I praised the speech, but cannot now abide it,
That war is sweet to those who never tried it.
At home, canary wines and Greek grow loathsome;
Here, milk is nectar and water tasteth toothsome.
There, without baked, roast or boiled it is no cheer;
But biscuit we like, and bonny clabber here.
There, we complain of one wan, wasted chick,
Here, meat worse cooked ne'er makes one sick.
At home, in spare rooms and beds of down,
We scant can rest, but still toss up and down;
Here, we can sleep, a saddle to our pillow,
A hedge a curtain, for a canopy a willow,
There, if a child but cry oh what a spite!
Here, we can brook three larums in one night.
There, homely rooms must be perfumed with roses;
Here, match and powder ne'er offend our noses,
There, from a storm of rain we run like pullets;
Here, we stand fast against a shower of bullets.
Lo, then, how greatly their opinions err,
Who think there is no great delight in war.
But yet, for this sweet war I'll be thy debtor;
I shall forever love my home the better.

Friendship's tenderest ties are tried and conquered, and the patriotic young American turns his back to the cheerful home of his birth, feeling supported by the well-wishes of his many friends, and the warm, fervent prayer, such as a mother alone can pour out of a wounded heart, he wends his way to the scene of battles, filled with his country's pride, and weighted with the armory of his country's defense, he boldly asserts the dignity of his cause, and bares his bosom to the missiles of death. Thus, all that loves, or is to be loved, all that can comfort, all the luxuries of home in the best sense of that term, are foregone, and all that is revolting, all that war means, is to be borne with wearied limbs, an empty stomach and a sickening heart as he tramps the ever-repeating call of his threatened country. The charms of a sister's society, the sweet ministrations of a mother's care, and the rich viands of a father's table crowd upon his recollection like the visits of friendly angels, but to leave him more desolate still, and the prospects of returning home to enjoy the sweets of that once so cherished, is too dark to inspire him with hope, hence he must nurse from the paps of expected victory the only comforts of his life. A review of what is borne and foregone by the gallant soldier of his country should provoke feelings of the deepest gratitude. We speak of soldiers, not men. The hundreds of thousands that have fallen have rent that many homes and more hearts. A mother's tears could dampen nearly every grave; the cry of the orphan could have been heard by the side of the crude coffins, and more than thousands of young wives and mothers were thrown alone into the struggle of life, and also subjected to the suspicion of a heated and merciless public. Heaven's vengeance fall upon the heads of those whose forked tongues have borne the unholy charge. Many a noble soldier who loved his faithful wife, has felt the sufferings of war wane before the rising ambitions of his proud heart to defend his defenceless wife. The tongue of the slanderer cuts deep, and carries a more deadly poison than the point of the sword; hence a multitude of circumstances combine to make the sacrifice of the soldier great. When death, like a sullen sentinel, was pacing his everlasting round no soldier could divine how soon he should be confronted, and all he held dear on earth left to the uncertainty of deceptive fortune. How oft did the noble, proud hearts of our gallant soldiers commune with the sweets of home, while resting their weary heads upon a turf of earth, that sleepless soul came home and held familiar conversation with those they loved. Thomas Campbell gives the following as a soldier's dream while lying on a battle-field:

Our bugle sang truce, for the night-cloud had lowered,
And the sentinel stars set their watch in the sky.
And thousands had sunk on the ground overpowered—
The weary to sleep and the wounded to die.
While reposing that night on my pallet of straw,
By the wolf-scaring fagot that guarded the slain.
At the dead of the night a vision I saw,
And thrice ere the morning I dreamed it again.
Me thought from the battlefield's dreadful array,
Far, far I wandered on a desolate track;
'Twas autumn, and sunshine arose on the way
To the home of my father to welcome me back.
Then pledged me the wine cup and fondly I swore,
From my home and my weeping friends never to part.
My little ones kissed me a thousand times o'er,
And my wife sobbed aloud in the fullness of her heart.
"Stay, stay with us; rest, thou art weary and worn,"
And fain was their war-broken soldier to stay,
But sorrow returned with the dawn of the morn.
And the voice of my dreaming ear melted away.

But, sirs, the most eloquent response to be made by civilians to the patriotic heroes of our country, is to show our appreciation of the country they have saved, by endeavoring to promote and perpetuate its wholesome institutions. Many are the elements that compose a sure and permanent government—not alone are the soldiers necessary to the perpetuity of the conditions of freedom we now enjoy, but many are the dangers that threaten the existance of our government which can not be repelled by the force of arms. The immortal Washington, in his farewell address, made use of this language: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them." A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in all the courts of justice. And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion—whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure. Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morlity can prevail to the exclusion of religious principle. It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. Therefore the man who disregards God and His law, is wholly unsafe with constitutional powers. The ever memorable results of the Revolutionary war, seem to be the immediate answer of Washington's God, to Washington's prayer, and the perpetuity of the free institutions of our country, as well as the marvelous development of its wonderful resources, may be safely attributed to the fact that the chaplain's voice has been heard at every morn in all the legislative halls of the entire government. The Lord of the heavens gave this description of man from whom we should expect least that was good, and most that was bad. "He feared not God, neither regarded man." Such a man's counsel is to be received with caution; his oath is not binding on his conscience, as he has none in a constitutional sense. You that love your country, discard such men, on the stump, in the jury box, in the halls of legislation. We have the highest reasons for guarding with scrupulous care the rich heritage our fathers have given us. Boundless in its acres; rich in its soils, with deep and broad rivers, and mountains of ore; with its pine belts in the north and the south; its multitudes of populous growing cities; its iron footprints of quenchless industry; its endless machinery; its wholesome system of common schools, and its churches with their 20,000,000 communicants. Ah! me, well might it be called the asylum of the poor, and the home of the rich—a dearer sweeter spot than all the rest, where man, creations tyrant, casts aside his sword, his scepter, his pageantry and his pride, while in his softened looks benignly blend, the sire, the son, the husband, brother, friend. Here woman reigns—the mother, daughter, wife—and strews fresh flowers the narrow way of life.

Where shall that land, that spot of earth be found?
Art thou a man, a patriot? look 'round.
O thou shalt find, wherever thy footsteps roam,
That land, thy country, that spot thy home.

Much of America's pride can be ascribed to her noble women. I should blush deeply to neglect referring to the important place occupied by the women of this country in its most important enterprises.

The maid who binds her warror's sash,
Yet with a smile she may hide the pain of her heart,
Though heaven alone may record the tear she sheds,
And fame may never know her story,
Her heart has shed a drop as dear
As ere bedewed the field of glory.

As the poet has it:

The wife who girds her husband's sword,
Mid little ones who weep or wonder,
And barely speaks the cheering word
What though her heart be rent asunder.
Doomed nightly to hear the bolts of death around him rattle,
Has shed as sacred blood as e're was poured upon the field of battle.

O noble is that bosom where beats the pulse of patriotism, heard in the farewell to the husband she loved.

Regulate the Secretions.

In our endeavors to preserve health it is of the utmost importance that we keep the secretory system in perfect condition. The well-known remedy, Kidney-Wort, has specific action on the kidneys, liver and bowels. Use it instead of dosing with vile bitters or drastic pills. It is purely vegetable, and is prompt but mild in action. It is prepared in both dry and liquid form and sold by druggists everywhere.—Reading Eagle.

Sunday-School Work.

PLEASANT HILL, May [illegible], 1881.

The Richland township Sunday-school quarterly institute met pursuant to arrangement. The exercises of the day were begun by reading a part of the third chapter of Galatians, by President Harding. The institute then united in singing "Beautiful Day." Prayer by Peter Treesh and A. Britton; song, "We shall rest by and by;" address of welcome by Jacob Brechbill. The report of the last institute was then read and adopted; song, "I do believe the Savior;" "How shall we increase the life and activity of a Sunday-school," by Rev. L. Rice, of Auburn; song, "Gathering one by one." A motion was then made that the programme of the day be read. Accordingly Rev. L. Rice proceeded to do so. Song, "There'll be joy by and by;" address by Rev. Hunter, of Garrett. Subject, "The Sunday-school teacher and his work;" song, "Nearer my God to Thee." Brother Miller was then called on to lead in the general discussion. Remarks were made by L. W. Treesh, Harding, Britton and Rice. Adjourned for dinner.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Song, "Go to Jesus;" prayer by Rev. Mr. Miller; song, "There is a land far away;" "How to study the Bible," Judge Carpenter not being present, Rev. Mr. Miller was asked to make some observations. His exhortation to study the Bible was encouraging. Song, "Beulah Land." In the general discussion, Amos Britton gave his experience in studying the Bible. He remarked that we ought not to study the scriptures with denominational spectacles on. Excellent suggestions were given by Rev. L. Rice. Hunter and Barnes made some additional remarks. Song, "Give me Jesus;" "The infant class and how to teach it," an essay by Mrs. Hine, of Sedan, full of good thoughts. L. W. Treesh then made a motion that Mrs. Hine proceed to teach a class of children. The motion prevailed. Accordingly the lesson, of which "Parables on prayer" is the title, was taken and a lesson given. Song, "I am saved;" Mrs. Hine, Britton and Levi Harding engaged in the general discussion; song; question drawer. The reports of the different schools were then called for. L. W. Treesh then gave notice that he would, at the next township meeting, make a motion that we change the constitution so as to make it conform to the constitution of the state. A motion was then made that the next annual meeting be held on the last Saturday in August, 1881.

REV. L. HARDING, J. B. SCOTT,
President. Secretary.

Prejudice Kills.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery under the care of several of the best (and some of the worst) physicians, who gave her disease various names but no relief, and now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had poohed at for two years before using it. We earnestly hope and pray that no one else will let their sick suffer as we did, on account of prejudice against so good a medicine as Hop Bitters."—The Parents.—Telegram.

Normal School.

A. L. Lamport and H. E. Coe will open a normal school in Waterloo July 25, to continue eight weeks. This school, while it aims to assist teachers and those preparing to become teachers, will also afford an excellent opportunity for such as desire to gain a more complete and thorough knowledge of the common branches, to do this under competent instruction. Higher branches will be taught if any desire to study them. For circulars and all information apply to the principal, A. L. Lamport, Waterloo, Indiana.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

UNDER the hallucination that he was the son of God, Elijah Sterling, of Crisfield, N. J., cut his son with an ax and fatally slashed his wife....Gen. David S. Goodloe, of Louisville, one of the most prominent citizens of Kentucky, is dead.

THE largest single settlement of railroad stock transaction ever made was the payment by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for 208,419 shares of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad stock bought by them a few weeks ago. For these shares the purchasers paid into the New York National Bank of Commerce a single check for $14,949,052.20, one of the largest checks ever made since banking was instituted.

THE Captains of the ocean steamships Silesia, Ohio and Salier were arrested in New York and held to the action of the Grand Jury for carrying an excessive number of passengers. Bail was given in each case.

THE Legislature of Pennsylvania was in session for 187 days, but the State Treasurer refuses to pay anything above $1,000, mileage, and stationery. The members have resolved to institute legal proceedings to recover $125,500 more than is offered them.

THE WEST.

PROF. HARTWIG SEEMAN, well known throughout Europe and the East, will shortly begin an engagement at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. Seeman's entertainments are of the very highest order, and are both instructive and amusing. Among the features is his wonderful mystery of fortune, through which he distributes over 100 presents at each performance. The presents consist of silk dresses, gold watches, silver tea sets, services of china and other articles of use and ornament. These articles are honestly and impartially distributed, and the addresses of thousands of persons who have been the favorites of fortune at the entertainments are recorded on the Professor's books.

EVIDENTLY with the idea of obtaining some valuable jewelry, thieves broke open a vault in the cemetery at Canton, Ohio, which had been closed for a quarter of a century, and strewed the bones about....What is called the most complete wreck ever made on the Northwestern road occurred on Sunday morning, the 5th inst., near Cedar Rapids. Two brakemen were killed, and an engineer and fireman badly injured. Two locomotives and thirty loaded freight cars were demolished.

CHEYENNE is excited over the marriage of a Chinaman, Lee Chin, with Mrs. Eva H. Lee, a white American woman. The statutes of Wyoming prohibit such marriages, and Lee Chin and his wife hied them to Denver, where the nuptial knot was tied. The pair, however, were indicted for miscegenation by the Cheyenne Grand Jury. The Chinese Consul at Denver, acting under the direction of the Chinese Ambassador at Washington, has retained lawyers for the defense of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Chin.... A recent dispatch from Topeka, Kan., says: "The second trial under the Kansas Prohibitory Liquor law, which has been in progress here this week, closed to-day, the jury return[illegible]. The first trial also resulted in an acquittal. Indignation is expressed at the continuance of these prosecutions, with such heavy cost to the county, and the officers are being urged to discontinue further attempts to enforce the law. It is probable that all the saloons in this city, which closed on the 1st of May, will reopen immediately. Four wholesale dealers in Topeka have already taken out Government license and ordered large stocks of liquors for the trade. The saloon-keepers have formed an association with a heavy capital for defending suits, and claim that [illegible] them in the end than [illegible] system."

A DASTARDLY outrage was committed a few nights ago in the village of Chesaning, Saginaw county, Mich. A gang of men connected with Hilliard & De Mott's show, armed with clubs and revolvers, made a descent upon a crowd of citizens attending a Bowery dance, and commenced a wholesale attack, using weapons indiscriminately. Augustus Emery, a policeman, was pounded to death. Fred Wenzel was fatally injured. A. B. Griswold, Village President, was severely bruised. Charles Hovey received a pistol ball in the side of the face and a dozen others were cut and bruised. Five of the gang were arrested, and with difficulty the people were restrained from lynching them.

THE St. Louis Turnfest resulted in some wonderful athletic achievements. Hugo Mankowisky, of Chicago, raised fifty-six pounds in one hand and held it uplifted forty-seven consecutive times. William Zoeller, another [illegible] fifty-four hand over hand.

[illegible] and other ranchmen of the [illegible] valley, to the number of 100, had a battle with Utes, driving them off with a loss of two, and then resolved to maintain their settlements. This may embarrass the Ute Commissioners, who are engaged in selecting a new reservation. A general outbreak of the Indians is deemed likely at an early date.

THE SOUTH.

AN organization of ex-Confederate soldiers has been effected at Chattanooga, Tenn., for the purpose of welcoming the Army of the Cumberland, and tendering them a reception on the occasion of their meeting at Chattanooga next September. Col. J. B. Cooke is President, Judge D. M. Key and Capt. J. A. Caldwell Vice Presidents, and Maj. G. C. Cooper Secretary. Nearly every ex-Confederate soldier who has been asked to join the organization has willingly complied....The sum of $70,000 necessary for the due celebration of the Yorktown Centennial has been nearly all subscribed.

A SINGLE highwayman, masked, stopped a stage-coach near San Antonio, Tex., on board of which were four passengers with the driver, and rifled the mails and robbed the passengers. ....An old man named K. Hall, living near Lewisburg, Sevier county, Ark., was robbed and afterward murdered by three negroes, who assisted him to cross a swollen creek. The fact becoming known by the citizens, they turned out in a body and captured the murderers, who confessed, and hanged them to a tree near the spot where they committed their dastardly crime....The Texas Pacific railroad has been completed into Tom Green county, about 300 miles east of El Paso, which point will be reached by the end of the year, as two miles of track are being laid each day.

BY the explosion of the Mississippi steamboat Hanna, near New Orleans, five men were killed and several others seriously wounded.

POLITICAL.

THE New York Legislature took one ballot for Senator on the 3d inst. Conkling received thirty-four votes for the short term and Cornell nineteen. For the long term Platt and Depew had thirty votes each. Henry Ward Beecher was honored with one vote. The Democratic vote was cast for Kernan and Jacobs.... Col. William E. Cameron was nominated for Governor of Virginia by the Readjusters' Convention at Richmond. John T. Lewis, ex-United States Senator, was selected for Lieutenant Governor, and Capt. Frank S. Blair for Attorney General. Cameron is Mayor of Petersburg, and was Adjutant General of Mahone's brigade in the Confederate army.

THE ballot for Senator in the New York Legislature on the 4th inst. resulted: For the short term—Jacobs, 31; Conkling, 29; Wheeler, 13; Cornell, 18; Rogers, 13; scattering, 7. For the long term—Kernan, 31; Platt, 26; Depew, 28; Cornell, 8; scattering, 24.... Col. Frederick A. Conkling, of New York, asserts that one New York refining firm had paid $100,000 to a member of the last Congress to prevent legislation on the sugar question; that the check was cashed by a national bank in New York, at the corner of Wall street and Broadway, and was made payable to the brother of one of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

IN the Senatorial ballot at Albany on the 6th inst., only 100 votes were cast, of which Conkling received twenty-six for the short term and Platt twenty-three for the long term. The Democratic joint committee issued a circular urging no pairing and no absenteeism from the joint convention.... The Readjuster ticket placed in nomination at Richmond, Va., does not seem to please either the Republicans or Readjusters. The probability is that the Republicans will nominate a ticket of their own containing some of the nominees of the Readjuster Convention.

THERE are rumors in Washington that Secretary Blaine and Mr. James Russell Lowell, United States Minister to England, may soon change places. It is intimated that Mr. Blaine is anxious to go to England, and that Mr. Lowell is quite willing to take his place if it be satisfactory to the President and Mr. Blaine.

THE seventh ballot for Senators at Albany, taken on the 7th inst., resulted: For the long term—Kernan, 46; Platt, 28; Depew, 42; Cornell, 14; scattering, 16. For the short term—Jacobs, 45; Conkling, 34; Wheeler, 22; Rogers, 15; Cornell, 15; scattering, 10. Senator Erastus Brooks made a speech in reply to Senator Woodin, in which he said he hoped the Democrats would not heed the appeal of Conklingites, and that Conkling resigned to gratify a whim, and should be rebuked. He favored an adjournment in order that the people might have an opportunity to pronounce on the matter.

THE eighth ballot for Senators at Albany resulted: Short term—Jacobs, 50; Conkling, 34; Wheeler, 21; Rogers, 15; Cornell, 19; scattering, 15. Long term—Kernan, 51; Platt, 29; Depew, 51; Cornell, 10; scattering, 14.... The Ohio Republican Convention renominated Charles Foster for Governor by acclamation. State Treasurer Turney and Atty. Gen. Nash were also renominated. J. G. Richards, of Jefferson county, was nominated for Lieutenant Governor, and Nicholas Longworth for Supreme Judge, and George Paul for member of the Board of Public Works. A resolution indorsing the administration of President Garfield was unanimously adopted.

IN the New York Legislature, on the 9th inst., Assemblyman Bradley, of Cataraugus county, volunteered a statement that he had been given $2,000 to vote for Depew for Senator, and had handed the money to Speaker Sharpe. He therefore demanded an investigation, which was ordered. In the joint convention Conkling obtained 34 votes for the short term, Jacobs 49, and Wheeler 29. Depew led off for the long term with 53 votes, Kernan getting 50, and Platt 29. After the ballots, Assemblymen Armstrong and Sisson stated that they had been approached by bribers in the interest of Depew. Before the investigation committee, in the evening, Assemblyman Bradley swore that Senator Sessions offered him $2,000 to change his vote from Platt to Depew. Another member of the Assembly swore that he was offered money to vote for Depew at the election in January last.... At the special election held in the Second (Charleston) Congressional district of South Carolina, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman M. P. O'Connor, Daniel Dibble, Democrat, was elected without opposition. The Republicans did not put forward any candidate, as they held that Mackey, their candidate of last fall, was elected over O'Connor, and that no vacancy exists.

WASHINGTON.

IT is asserted that one of the witnesses to be produced against the star-route thieves is one who has been himself a contractor, and therefore a participant in the thievery. This person, it is said, holds that the contractors are the least guilty of any concerned in the rascally business; that, in order to obtain contracts of any kind, they were obliged to pay lobby agents, friends of officials, sometimes as high as 80 per cent. of the amount paid them by the United States Government. In addition, the contractors had to subscribe to corruption funds in order to prevent Congressional interference and investigation.

GEN. BRADY, of star-route notoriety, threatens to bring suit against Attorney General MacVeagh and Postmaster General James if he shall be indicted for connection with the star-route rascalities, and has secured the services of Shellabarger, Wilson, Ben Butler and Bob Ingersoll to conduct the prosecution and his own defense. He professes to be able to establish his entire innocence of all charges preferred against him.

THE exhaustion of the appropriations for the Census Bureau forced the administration to a novel method of retaining clerks. Those who choose to remain at their work and disavow any claim upon the Government will be allowed to do so. In the meantime the President, the Secretary of the Interior and the Census Superintendent propose to secure from the next Congress a deficiency appropriation which will do justice to the faithful employes.... A Washington telegram says the continued reports that John D. Defrees, Public Printer, is to be removed are entirely without foundation. The President says, without qualification, that no change is contemplated in that office.

SECRETARY BLAINE, in response to a question as to whether the landing of able-bodied paupers from Ireland in New York would be objected to, replied that poverty would be no bar to immigrants willing to work and obey the laws, but that America wanted no dissolute paupers or criminals.

THE State Department at Washington is distributing a pamphlet on hog products, the facts having been obtained through official sources. It is stated that in Chicago a large trade is done in Limerick bacon and hams, which are sold in the English and Irish markets at almost double the price asked for honestly-branded American cuts.

GENERAL.

STATISTICS in preparation by the Census Bureau show that skilled labor in the United States is better paid and more steadily employed than in any country of the world.... Frank Winkler, a coal-miner residing near Canton, Ohio, is reported to have fallen heir to the seventh part of $45,000,000 of property accumulated by his brother in the South African diamond fields. Winkler has five brothers and a sister who are equally lucky with himself.

THE State Department at Washington publishes a mass of information from diplomatic representatives on the pork trade in Europe. Minister Kasson insists that until official action is taken at home in regard to the cause and effect of hog cholera, or trichinæ, we are in some degree responsible for the alarm existing abroad. Minister Noyes expresses the belief that not 1 per cent. of American pork is affected. Minister Lowell reports that Mr. Mundella will not permit unnecessary restrictions in England.

AT the parade of the Army of the Potomac, at Hartford, Gens. Burnside, Wright, Franklin and Devens marched in the ranks. An oration was delivered at the opera-house by Daniel Dougherty, and brief speeches were made by a number of famous leaders. Gen. Devens was elected President, and Detroit was selected as the place of meeting next year. At the banquet Gen. Sherman pronounced the army the skirmish line along the frontier of civilization. He also denounced as false the statements of Jeff Davis as to the burning of Columbia. Robert T. Lincoln was given three cheers on the conclusion of his address.

A STARTLING revelation was made by the experts who examined the hull of the wrecked steamer Victoria, at London, Ontario. A large hole was found stove in the bottom, confirming the theory that she sank through pure leakage. Where the hole was knocked in there is no evidence, but it was probably on the passage to Springbank.... A fire at Quebec, Canada, destroyed 687 buildings, including St. John's Church, and inflicted a total loss of about $2,500,000. Five lives are known to have been lost in the conflagration. The burned quarter was inhabited by rather well-to-do people, and the loss will not fall very heavily on them. Relief committees have already been formed to take care of the sufferers. The Legislative Assembly has voted $10,000.

FOREIGN.

GLADSTONE announced to the House of Commons, last week, that vigorous measures had been adopted by the Irish executive for dealing with resistance to law....The tenants at New Pallas, County Limerick, Ireland, were evicted by the Sheriff, assisted by police with fixed bayonets and detachments of the Coldstream Guards and Scots' Greys. The people made threatening demonstrations, but were restrained by the entreaties of two priests.

A LONDON dispatch says "the partisans of the revised version of the New Testament are using great efforts to modify the general hostile verdict with slight success. Lord Selborne's letter warning clergymen not to incur the danger of committing an illegal act puts a stop to the movement of the revisers' friends to smuggle the new version into use in the churches. Dean Stanley's clumsy eulogy of the text falls dead."... O'Mahoney, a leader of the Ballydehab Land League, was nabbed by the constabulary, but the people rescued him. He then offered to go without escort to Limerick jail, and was permitted to do so. The warrant for his arrest charges him with inciting to murder. A serious riot is reported from Cork, where houses were wrecked in two streets. At the railway station at Limerick the police charged on an assemblage with fixed bayonets.... At a mass-meeting of Irishmen and Irish sympathizers held in Hyde Park, London, to protest against the course pursued by the Government toward Ireland, Mr. Parnell made a speech in which he censured the Government for encouraging unjust evictions, and declared that Irishmen were beginning to realize the power of combination and passive resistance.... M. Bringard, inspector of telegraphs in Algeria, and an escort of twenty-five men have been massacred....A fresh conspiracy against the life of the Czar was crushed by twenty-one arrests.

THE Czar is getting tired of his imprisonment at Gatschina, and contemplates making Peterhof his abode. Peterhof has a small port at the mouth of the Neva, in which will be placed four Russian war vessels, and no other will be permitted to approach. A yacht will be always in readiness to take the Czar to and from St. Petersburg under the escort of two ironclads. No one is now permitted to approach within pistol-shot of the Czar without being closely searched....Vieuxtemps, the world-renowned violinist, is dead.

THREE ringleaders of the anti-Jewish rioters at Kieff, Russia, have been sentenced by court-martial to twenty, ten and six years' imprisonment, respectively, two others have been exiled to Siberia, and three persons have been sentenced to short terms of imprisonment....The German Government is keeping a watchful eye on the negotiations between France and England for a new commercial treaty. In the meantime Prince Bismarck's health is giving way, and his physician has advised him to go to Kissingen and remain there for some time.... Another priest has been arrested in Ireland under the Coercion act. The victim is the Rev. Arthur Murphy, of Scull, in the Diocese of Kerry. The condition of the Green Isle is described as being alarmingly disquieting. So-called outrages are of daily occurrence....In a $500 foot-race at Sheffield, England, known as the Sheffield Whitsuntide handicap, Smith, an American, hailing from Pittsburgh, Pa., was the winner. Sixty-two persons competed for the prize.

COLLISIONS between the military and the peasantry are reported from all parts of Ireland. A force of marines sent from Bantry to Ballydehob were only saved from annihilation by the intervention of the parish priest, and were driven back under his protection to the place from which they started by the peasantry, who gathered to the number of several thousand, armed with spades, hammers, axes, scythes and other such weapons. An attempt was made to wreck a train containing a body of troops in the same region. In the town of Skibbereen the branch of the Munster Bank was wrecked. At Dromore, on the borders of Ulster, a bailiff was beaten to death....The Theater Royal, at Belfast, Ireland, has been destroyed by fire.... Prince Bismarck's illness continues, and by order of his physicians he refrains from all work that is not absolutely necessary. All work done by him now is performed while in a recumbent position.

THE centennial of the birth of George Stephenson, the originator of railway locomotion, was celebrated the other day in various parts of England, the chief observance being at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where there was a procession of railway locomotives, nearly every railway company in the United Kingdom being represented in the line by its most powerful engine. In the afternoon there was a procession of trade societies, 100,000 persons participating....A riot broke out on the race-course at Cork, which resulted in the wounding of a civilian by a bayonet. Twenty rioters were arrested, as was also a prominent Land-Leaguer named Tobin.

Of Interest to Volunteers.

A circular from the Adjutant General's office, War Department, says: "There being now pending in this department great numbers of volunteer pension claims which cannot be satisfactorily verified for want of information which missing records of discontinued volunteer commands would afford, and it having transpired in many instances that officers of the late volunteer forces have still in their possession or under their control books and other records pertaining to their corps, divisions, brigades, regiments and companies, their attention is called to the fact that all such books and records should be deposited with this office, and they are earnestly requested to cause the same to be forwarded without delay to the Adjutant General of the army, Washington, D. C. No expense, other than postage or proper express charges (when packages exceed four pounds, the limit for mail parcels), can be paid by the Government. In the interest of the great number of widows, orphans and disabled soldiers whose claims are involved, the newspapers of the country are requested to give the substance of this circular the greatest publicity."

SIR WALTER SCOTT was in one of his walks, leaning on the arm of his faithful attendant, Tom Purdie. Tom said: "Them are fine novels of yours, Sir Walter. They are just invaluable to me." "I am glad to hear it, Tom." "Yes, sir; for when I have been out all day, hard at work, and come home very tired, and tak' up one o' your novels, I'm sleepy directly."

THE investigations, which were undertaken by a commission of the French academy, in relation to the filling of the Tunisian and Algerian part of the Sahara, have been finished. The conclusions are entirely favorable to the project and would lead to the establishment of an interior sea, 248½ miles long and about 990 miles in circumference.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

EMINENT oculists having pronounced the reading of German text to be injurious to the eyes, the Bernese Government has resolved to discontinue its use as much as possible, and all their official announcements will henceforth be printed exclusively in Roman characters.

THE report of the second geological survey of Pennsylvania contains, in a description of the coal flora by Prof. Leo Lesquereux, one of the most remarkable geological accounts in existence of the forms and habitats of plants once growing in the swamps of our American coal fields, or floated out into open water and embedded in the deposits at the bottom of the carboniferous sea. Every genus of ancient sea-weed, fern, bamboo-like calamite and cone tree which up to the present time has been brought to light in the mining of the American coal-beds, or in surveying the surface of the coal fields, is here described. Every species hitherto discovered is named, and as many of them represented as seemed needful to assist the mining geologist in the identification of beds, so far as plant remains can do that, or to enlighten the scholar of nature in this branch of learning.

THE permanent station on the Congo of the Stanley expedition is on an elevated plateau below the Yellala falls. It is now a small town containing the dwellings of Mr. Stanley and his European staff, workshops, warehouses and huts for his laborers and a garden producing vegetables of almost every description. From the river's edge to a distance of about thirty miles upwards along the hilly banks of the Congo, where he has established a second depot, a road about twelve feet wide has been constructed, serviceable for carts and wagons, which latter, together with a number of donkeys, have recently arrived from Europe, to be employed in the transport of stores and supplies. Mr. Stanley has with him about 125 natives. The trade on the lower Congo is very large and increasing. The highest point where traders are established is at Noki, which can be reached by vessels drawing eighteen feet of water at any season without the least difficulty.

APOCRYPHAL as it may appear, there are some fishes capable of swallowing and stowing away entire, others several times larger than themselves. This extraordinary fact is rendered possible in the first place by the great size of the mouth, which is cleft far backwards, and in the next by the excessive distensibility of the stomach and the abdominal integuments. The captor sizes the larger fish by the tail and climbs over it as it were by alternate movements of the lower and upper jaw, until finally the entire animal is stored in the stomach. Meanwhile, the stomach and the adjoining soft parts become more and more distended and hang down like an enormous sack. The most remarkable example of such capacity have been found in the Chiaswodon niger, a species related to the cod family, but several others are likewise prone to attack fish larger than themselves.

DR. SANGFELDT has tried a number of substances for destroying microscopic life in drinking water, the most striking results being obtained from citric acid. When one part of the acid was added to two thousand parts of water, life ceased in from one-half to two minutes. Microscopic examination showed that those forms of animalcula having a thick scaly covering are not affected by the dilute citric acid, but only those with thinner coatings. The greater part of these unwelcome visitor belong, however, to the latter class, while the former are visible to the naked eye, so that a solution of the strength mentioned will suffice as a safeguard. The dead animalcula immediately settle to the bottom of the vessel containing the water, and may be found in the sediment. The solution of citric acid spoils quickly, and it is recommended that it be freshly prepared every day.

Among the Turks.

As to the character of the Turks, it has been said by one of the highest consular authorities that the poorer and humbler he is, the better he is. As he gets money and power, he deteriorates. In the lowest classes you may and do meet with honesty; in the middle classes, seldom; in the highest, never. The Turk, above all, is a good host. Indeed, hospitality is enjoined by the Koran. We may well take a lesson from him, too, in politeness, especially in conversation. If you are privileged to have an interview with a Turk, you will find him a good listener; he never interrupts, and never wastes words to make talk. When he has finished, he asks permission to go, and vanishes. He is not given to the odious, because abused, custom of the "shake-hands." His salute, the Temenas, is most graceful. He makes the motion as if to sweep the ground with his right hand, bringing it to his heart, lips and forehead, thus indicating that all he has on earth is yours, as well as showing his friendliness and constant thoughtfulness for your welfare.

Listen to a true story illustrating the Turk in all his dealings, whether commercially, politically, or as a diplomatist. A peasant was summoned before the Cadi for stealing a sack of onions.

"Now we have thee on the hip, and thou shalt know what it is to incur our displeasure. Bismillah! Choose, slave—wilt thou pay 1,000 piasters, receive 100 blows of the bastinado, or wilt thou eat the contents of the sack of onions? Quick; choose!"

"Gracious Lord, I have no money wherewith to satisfy thee; I fear the bastinado, and will choose rather to eat my onions."

He ate, and was fain to stop, and preferred the bastinado. After some fifty strokes he repents, and thinks he can find somewhere in his house 500 piasters. But this money was not enough to release him from his troubles; he ate more onions, then there was a little more bastinado. Eventually he received eighty strokes, ate nearly all the onions, and paid the penalty of 1,000 piasters in full.

It Cured Him.

When I was a boy of about 9, writes a correspondent, a servant of my father's put a pipe into my mouth, assuring me that to smoke would make a man of me. I puffed away most vigorously, and persevered till I became sick and fell on the floor. I have never smoked since. In much the same way I was cured of hero worship. When I was a college youth I ventured one day to call on a man of some eminence, to whom I had been introduced. He received me with smiles and compliments, and, as I left his presence, I was ready to proclaim him the most gentlemanly man I had ever met with; but, after I went out, I lingered at the door a moment to determine whether I should call on another great man who lived near, and I overheard the polite gentleman I had left call his servant to administer to him the most terrible scolding I had ever listened to in my life for letting in that stupid, impudent stripling. This cured me of hero worship and of interviewing great men. Since that date I have at times gone to a distinguished man's house with letters of introduction and turned at the door for fear of what might come.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Two Very Notable Cases.

Mrs. Child, in her work advocating the abolition of capital punishment, gives a notice of two cases in which circumstantial evidence led to the execution of wrong parties.

A few years ago a poor German came to New York and took lodgings where he was allowed to do his cooking in the same room with the family. The husband and wife lived in a perpetual quarrel. One day the German came into the kitchen with a clasp-knife and a pan of potatoes, and began to pare them for his dinner. The quarrelsome couple were in a more violent altercation than usual; but he sat with his back toward them, and, being ignorant of their language, felt in no danger of being involved in their dispute. But the woman, with a sudden and unexpected movement, snatched the knife from his hand and plunged it into her husband's heart. She had sufficient presence of mind to rush into the street and scream murder. The poor foreigner, in the meanwhile, seeing the wounded man reel, sprang forward to catch him in his arms, and drew out the knife. People from the street crowded in and found him with the dying man in his arms, the knife in his hand and blood upon his clothes. The wicked woman swore in the most positive terms that he had been fighting with her husband and had stabbed him with a knife he always carried. The unfortunate German knew too little English to understand her accusation or to tell his own story. He was dragged off to prison, and the true state of the case was made known through an interpreter; but it was not believed. Circumstantial evidence was exceedingly strong against the accused and the real criminal swore unhesitatingly that she saw him commit the murder. He was executed, notwithstanding the most persevering efforts of his lawyer, John Anthon, whose conviction of the man's innocence was so painfully strong that from that day he has refused to have any connection with a capital case. Some years after this tragic event the woman died, and on her death-bed confessed her agency in the diabolical transaction; but her poor victim could receive no benefit from this tardy repentance; society had wantonly thrown away its power to atone for the grievous wrong.

Many readers will doubtless recollect the tragical fate of Burton, in Missouri, on which a novel was founded, that still continues in the libraries. A young lady, belonging to a genteel and very proud family in Missouri, was beloved by a young man named Burton, but unfortunately her affections were fixed on another less worthy. He left her with a tarnished reputation. She was by nature energetic and high-spirited; her family were proud; and she lived in the midst of a society which considered revenge a virtue, and named it honor. Misled by this false popular sentiment and her own excited feelings, she resolved to repay her lover's treachery by death. But she kept her secret so well that no one suspected her purpose, though she purchased pistols and practiced with them daily. Mr. Burton gave evidence of his strong attachment by renewing his attentions when the world looked coldly upon her. His generous kindness won her bleeding heart, but the softening influence of love did not lead her to forego the dreadful purpose she had formed. She watched for a favorable opportunity and shot her betrayer when no one was near to witness the horrible deed. Some little incident excited the suspicion of Burton, and he induced her to confess to him the whole transaction. It was obvious enough that suspicion would naturally fasten upon him, the well-known lover of her who had been so deeply injured. He was arrested, but succeeded in persuading her that he was in no danger. Circumstantial evidence was fearfully against him, and he soon saw that his chance was doubtful; but with affectionate magnanimity he concealed this from her. He was convicted and condemned. A short time before the execution he endeavored to cut his throat, but his life was saved for the cruel purpose of taking it away according to the cold-blooded barbarism of the law. Pale and wounded, he was hoisted to the gallows before the gaze of a Christian community.

The guilty cause of all this was almost frantic when she found that he had thus sacrificed himself to save her. She immediately published the whole history of her wrongs and her revenge. Her keen sense of wounded honor was in accordance with public sentiment. Her wrongs excited indignation and compassion, and the knowledge that an innocent and magnanimous man had been so brutally treated excited a general revulsion of popular feeling. No one wished for another victim, and she was left unpunished, save by the records of her memory.

What the Artists Said.

Ivory Black, Esq.—"Do you know anything of old Moss?" (naming an influential dealer).

Madder Brown, Esq.—"By Jove! yes, I should think I did. And old Moss knows as much about a picture as Jack Ketch."

I. B. (airily)—"Doesn't know as much, I think. Jack Ketch would perhaps know how to hang them."

THINGS that will wear are not to be had cheap. Whether it be a fabric or a principle, if it is to endure, it must cost something. Glitter, tinsel, brilliant coloring, may all be had without much expense; but if we would have strength, firmness and permanence, we must pay for them.

PARAGRAPHIC POINTS.

A LADY who has returned from Rome says the principal attractions are fleas, beggars, dirt, and the ill-smelling Tiber.

WIDOWS over fifty can not marry again in Portugal, but this doesn't trouble them any, for who ever knew a woman to acknowledge being over forty?

THREE Newport belles, now married, were once known in society as "Battle," "Murder," and "Sudden Death"—their names indicating their style of conquest.

PAPER dinner plates are now in use. "By and by," says the Syracuse Herald, "they will print the news of the day around the rim and serve them fresh at every meal."

THE English gulp down $50,000 worth of drinks per year, and are no better off than if they had used the money in sending out missionaries.—Detroit Free Press.

OF ALL things that man possesses, women alone take pleasure in being possessed.—Malherbe. They do seem to take pleasure at times in being possessed, or acting as if they were.

TEXANS now take their whisky from an ox-horn fitted with a brass bottom and holding an even quart. They are handy to carry, can not be told from a powder-horn, and sure to kill at forty rods.

ADVICE to girls: Remember, also, that a pretty hand is one of woman's chiefest charms. Never assist your mother in her household duties. It doesn't matter so much how her hand is sprawled out by hard work. She is out of the market.—Boston Transcript.

THE original of "Mary had a little lamb" was written by Mr. John Roulstone, of Boston, son of Colonel John Roulstone, proprietor of a popular riding school sixty years ago. "Mary," the owner of the lamb, is now Mrs. Tyler, of Somerville, Mass.

THE Philadelphia Times is constrained to give this information to an inquiring correspondent: "It is not customary in this country for 'a young man, when introduced to a young lady, and she extends her hand, to kiss it.' The young lady would be very likely to respond by boxing the young man's ears."

RUSSIAN ladies, it is said, always wear in winter time fur next to the skin, as in consequence of the intense cold, no ordinary merino or flannel is sufficient. Lynx is most frequently used, and every young Russian bride has one or two undergarments in this fur, and then she is considered set up in life.

Ancient Pompeii.

A correspondent of Hand and Heart, an English periodical, writes: "An interesting feature of the inner life of ancient Pompeii, as now revealed to view, is the appearance of the frequent 'signs' over the shops, every trade and business having its own particular sign or trade-mark over the outer doorway. Thus the frequent wine-shops are indicated. One of these was exceedingly honest in its sign—a Bacchanalian revel, showing a drunken man in the foreground! Wine jars were here in abundance, some of them very large. One that I measured required my handkerchief seven and a quarter times round to indicate its girth. A surgeon's house was identified by the surgical instruments it contained. A baker's shop was found with as many as eighty-one loaves in the oven—all over-baked, you may be sure, by centuries! These loaves are now dispersed throughout the principal museums of the world. A public school was indicated by its own amusing sign-board; a rough picture represents one on another's back, and the master with the birch-rod, as my guide said in broken English, 'give him a licking!' And over one of the houses I saw this motto inscribed: 'Otiosis locus hic non est. Discede, morator;' to which I give the following translation:

"No place for idlers here to stay;
Loungers, arise and go thy way."

HE that cannot forgive others breaks the bridge over which he must himself pass; for every man has need to be forgiven.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1881.

A St. Louis man deferred his suicide until he could have some mourning paper exquisitely printed with his monogram, so that he could write his farewell letters in good style.

A Baltimore Alderman has advertised for his lost pocketbook, which contained, he confesses, passes over all the railroads running through the city, over every steamship line having a terminus there, and to every place of amusement.

Judge Travers, of the Iowa Supreme Court, decides that railroad companies are liable for injuries to animals run over on Sunday, no matter how carefully the trains are operated, because the running of trains at all on Sunday is unlawful.

The largest land transaction ever made in Texas has just been closed by a real, estate firm at Denison, who have sold 187,000 acres of railroad, school, and patent lands in the Pan-handle of the State to Eastern capitalists, who will locate immigrants on them in colonies.

Judging from the Russian dispatches, that empire is thoroughly saturated with the spirit of revolution. Whenever the army and the police "catch on," the empire will be sunk in a deluge of blood. From the exiled Grand Duke to the scullion in the imperial kitchen, in the navy and in the colleges, Nihilism has taken deep root.

The Southern States are at last awake to the desirability of attracting to their rich soil a fair share of the hordes of immigrants pouring into the United States. An immigration agent, representing Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana, will soon sail for Europe, to establish bureaus in seven of the larger cities. The Germans who were dispatched from Castle Garden to South Carolina report themselves highly pleased with their new home.

A Galveston (Texas) newspaper says that Mr. Jay Gould and his party ate fresh eggs at a farm-house on the line of a railroad which they were inspecting in that State. The thrifty farmer wanted $50 a dozen for his eggs, and when Mr. Gould remarked that eggs must be scarce in that region, the host replied: "There's plenty of eggs here; but fellers like you, that can afford to pay such prices, is scarce. That's why eggs is worth $50 a dozen on this joyous occasion."

John G. Whittier having been credited with securing Dr. Loring's appointment as Commissioner of Agriculture, he has written to the Boston Journal, approving the appointment, but denying responsibility. He adds: "I have had no occasion or inclination to solicit the administration in the matter of distribution, with the single exception of joining with my friends Longfellow, Holmes, Howells, Aldrich, Dr. Holland, and other 'literary fellows,' in behalf of one of our craft for a consulate."

The Salem (Mass.) Gazette is 113 years old, and very sedate, but it tells the following story: "A Salem mother has a daughter who so closely resembles her that the one is frequently taken for the other. The other day the mother walked up to her own reflection in a large mirror in a dry-goods store, and, putting forth her hand, said: 'Why, Maria, when did you come home? I thought you were to stay at your uncle's a week?' A broad smile rippled round the store as the mystified lady touched the glass."

A cruel blunder was made in announcing the verdict in a St. Louis murder case. The foreman of the jury handed the clerk several slips of paper, and the clerk read: "We find the prisoner not guilty, on the ground of insanity." The culprit's face lighted up with delight, and he exultantly shook hands with his counsel. "There's a mistake," said the foreman to the clerk; "you've read the wrong slip. The one that's signed is our verdict—guilty of murder in the first degree."

The admirer of two girls at Waupaca, Ore., could not choose between them, and neither was willing to relinquish her claims in favor of the other. They, therefore, agreed to decide the question by the toss of a coin, and the tossing was done, carefully and fairly, in the presence of an invited company. The loser accepting her luck uncomplainingly, and is to be first birdesmaid at the wedding. A somewhat similar case had a different termination at Bowerton, Mich. The girls in this instance were sisters, and they were willing to divide the lover between them. In order to carry out that idea they have started for Utah, where they will practice polygamy; but the harmonious sisters have exacted a solemn vow from the man never to have more than two wives.

Dr. James Moore, of Ironton, Ohio, thinks he has discovered a specific for small-pox in lemon juice, which he used in his own case with such results as to make him say: "So strongly am I convinced of the power of lemon juice to abort any and every case of small-pox that I look upon it as a specific of as much certainty and power in small-pox as quinine is in intermittent fever. I, therefore, publish my experiment, hoping every physician having a case of small-pox will give it a fair trial and report the result to me."

Maj. George W. Murphy, of Pittsburgh, wanted to commit suicide, but didn't like to make a fuss about it. He was a real-estate agent, and conducted his own destruction on purely business principles. He took a dose of strychnine, and then, walking into the office of a friend, said: "Benham, I have taken poison and will die in a few minutes. I want you to witness my will." He handed his friend a document, but Mr. Benham thought it was a joke and commenced to remonstrate. It was too late, however, when he found out the truth, and before medical assistance arrived Murphy was dead.

Mr. Burchard, Director of the Mint, has prepared the following statement, showing the gold coinage, by periods, of countries named, and estimated gold circulation according to latest returns. It will be seen that the estimated amount of gold circulation in the United States is $520,000,000. Of this $91,000,000 is bullion. The Government is about to coin this, and Mr. Burchard thinks that it should be coined into pieces of small denomination, in order that it may go among the people, and be less likely to be exported when there is a foreign demand. The statistics of other countries show that they have coined the most in the smaller denominations:

A Forgiving Nature.

Among Montgomery's most violent critical assailants was R. H. Horne. After twenty-eight years' estrangement, I had reconciled Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt, so I resolved to try a similar experiment on Horne and Montgomery. I therefore, without acquainting either with my design, asked them both to dine with me. Upon my arrival at my house with Montgomery, on the evening in question, I was privately informed by my servants that Horne was in the library. Taking Montgomery into the room I introduced them to each other under the assumed names of Smith and Jones. Excusing myself on a plea of dressing for dinner, I left them alone. As neither had seen the other before, they were puzzled; they sat for a few seconds gazing at each other in a state of pleasant bewilderment. At last Mr. Horne broke the spell of silence by saying: "Sir, as I am not Mr. Smith, perhaps you are not Mr. Jones. My name is Richard Henry Horne."

To which the other replied: "And I am the Rev. Robert Montgomery." And extending his hand he added: "I am very glad to meet you, my dear Mr. Horne."

"The devil you are!" exclaimed Mr. Horne, grasping the proffered hand. When I returned, in a few minutes, they were laughing and chatting as though they had been friends their whole life. They were mutually pleased with each other, and maintained a pleasant social intercourse from that time.

A Peculiar Affliction.

Mr. Edwin Cowles, the editor of the Cleveland Leader, has a peculiar affliction. From boyhood he has been troubled with deafness somewhat of the nature of color blindness. He has never heard the sound of the birds, and until he grew to manhood he had always thought the music of birds was a poetic fiction. "You may fill the room with canary birds," says Mr. Cowles, "and they may all sing at once and I never would hear a note, but I would hear the flutterings of their wings. I never heard the hissing sound of the human voice, consequently, not knowing the existence of that sound, I grew up to manhood without ever making it in speech. A portion of the consonants I never hear, yet I can hear all the vowels. About a quarter of the sounds in the human voice I never hear, and I have to watch the motion of the lips and be governed by the sense of the remarks in order to understand what is said to me. I have walked by the side of a policeman going home at night, and seen him blow his whistle, and I never would hear it, although it could be heard by others half a mile away. I never heard the upper notes of a piano, violin, or other musical instrument, although I would hear all the lower notes." Mr. Cowles has consulted some of the most eminent surgeons, physicians, and aurists in the country, and they are unanimous in declaring his peculiar affliction to be without a precedent.

Cases of blood poisoning by wearing cheap red and yellow stockings are reported.

A POSTOFFICE INQUISITION.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

Confederate Brigadier Mahone does not appear to be content with the notoriety he has already achieved. He has now invoked the aid of the Postoffice Department to keep up his fame.

The following postal-card, addressed to Senator Vance, of North Carolina, but intercepted at the Washington postoffice and never delivered to him, was the basis of an information lodged against the writer by one W. T. Henderson, an inspector of the Postoffice Department, charging a violation of section 3,893 of the Revised Statutes:

> Please send me yr speech on that damm dog Mahone.
> JOHN CARMICHAEL.
> Middleburg, Loudon county, Va.
> March 31, 1881.

The words used are not actionable, even if "damm" had all the force that Carmichael probably intended it should have, to express his scorn of Mahone. Section 3,893 says:

> * * * No postal-card upon which indecent or scurrilous epithets may be written or printed shall be carried in the mail.

This is the flimsy foundation for a prosecution which would be amusing but for the principle involved and for the facts that were disclosed before the Commissioner. That Mahone instigated it is manifest, and that the department became the instrument of his small revenge was made quite clear in the examination.

James E. Bell, superintendent of the city delivery of the Washington Postoffice, was the chief witness. He testified as follows:

> Q.—By what authority did you read that postal card? Do you know that it was positively prohibited by law? A.—Yes, but I considered it my duty and took the risk.
> Q.—What regulation gives you the authority to peer into the mails? A.—I considered the card obscene and unmailable.
> Q.—In your experience, as you say, of seventeen years, have you ever known a case of prosecution like this? A.—Never in the Washington office.
> Q.—Is it your habit to suppress postal cards? A.—Frequently. For example: Abusive postal cards are almost daily received against the President, but they never reach him; we burn them up. * * *

He further stated that the post mark showed the card had passed under the eye of the Postmaster General.

Upon a most frivolous pretext, and without color of law to justify it, the private correspondence of a citizen is stopped at the postoffice in Washington, and with the privity of the head of the department, merely to gratify the resentment of the repudiating Senator from Virginia. The clerks, with the consent of Mr. James, make inquisitions into the mails, and, as Bell testified, "take the risk" of arresting what matter they please in defiance of law. He confessed that it was "almost a daily" practice to suppress and burn postal cards abusive of the President.

If this authority can be assumed by subordinates without restraint, where is it to end? What security is in the mails, when clerks at the terminal points, right under the eye of the Postmaster General, and, as appears in this case, with his full knowledge, may seize and destroy correspondence regularly posted and paid for.

This postal card was the property of Senator Vance. It was deliberately withheld from him by the officials of the Washington postoffice after full consultation among themselves. In that act they committed a felony, and, as an example and a protection to the public at large, every one of them should be sternly prosecuted under section 3,892 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

> Any person who shall take any letter, postal card or packet, although it does not contain any article of value or evidence thereof, out of a postoffice or branch postoffice, or from a letter or mail carrier, or which has been in any postoffice or branch postoffice, or in the custody of any letter or mail carrier, before it has been delivered to the person to whom it was addressed, with a design to obstruct the correspondence or to pry into the business or secrets of another, or shall secrete, embezzle or destroy the same, shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment at hard labor for not more than one year, or both.

The insolence of office is past bearing. Private rights are constantly outraged, and public interests are sacrificed by the audacity, corrupt connivance and insulting defiance of the servants of the people. They form a close corporation, organize rings, plunder at pleasure and then ask taxpayers, as Tweed did, "What are you going to do about it?"

More Breakers Ahead for Garfield.

There is one rock upon which the Garfield administration is liable to split in a way to sink the whole concern. A failure to support MacVeagh and James in their efforts to break up the postoffice rings, to stop the plunder and to punish the guilty, would do the business effectually.

But are MacVeagh and James to be supported? There is reason to believe that the President is already frightened, and would gladly turn back if he dared. The nomination of Chandler had a bad look. MacVeagh never had any friends among ring politicians and public thieves. He had none among them in Pennsylvania, where they were the ruling class. He knew precisely what he had to expect when he came to face them here. They had resisted his appointment to a man, and showed that they fully appreciated the force of the battery he would be likely to open on them from the Department of Justice. Accordingly he was no sooner warm in his seat than they set to work to get him out, and Chandler was the lever chosen to hoist him. Blaine insisted upon making him Solicitor General. MacVeagh told the President that when Chandler came in he would go out, but the President yielded to Blaine, and relied upon his ability to coax MacVeagh to remain. Thereupon every jobber and every agent of every corrupt lobby in town put his shoulder to the wheel to confirm Chandler, and so drive MacVeagh to resign. Had he been confirmed, Garfield would have been compelled to choose between them; and had he ever signed Chandler's commission the Attorney General would have retired, and the surrender to the corruptionists would have been complete.

James and MacVeagh, it is well known, mean to stand or fall together. They have determined to prosecute the star-route rascals according to law, to mete out to them full legal justice, and to break up the system by which they grew rich enough to buy Indiana for Garfield. If Messrs. Dorsey and Brady are so extremely anxious for a hearing as they pretend to be they will not be disappointed. They will probably succeed in getting it before a jury of twelve good men and true, whose verdict will have some weight with the country. Mr. James feels that he has a mission, and a great one. In pursuit of it he has parted with Conkling and Platt, and remained behind to perform a greater public service than either of them ever dreamed of; but he is well aware that without the Attorney General he would be powerless. It is quite safe, therefore, to say that whenever MacVeagh goes, James will go with him; and then the administration will be left to its Chandlers and its Tynors.—Washington letter.

INDIANA NEWS.

A stone forty-two feet long, four feet wide and three feet thick was quarried near Bedford.

Col. Isom Wray and Hon. William Patterson, of Shelby county, have recently purchased 1,800 acres of pine timber land in Angelina county, Texas.

An attempt to blow up a saloon was made at Liberty, Marion county, by placing a bottle filled with powder under the floor. The floor was torn up, but no serious damage was done.

The National Camp Meeting for the promotion of holiness will begin at Warsaw, Kosciusco, Aug. 5, and last for ten days. Revs. J. S. Inskip, Wm. McDonald, J. A. Wood and others will be present.

Gov. Porter and wife have been visiting Corydon. The Governor will soon deliver an oration at Asbury University on "The Early Governors." His trip to Corydon was to get some data of Gov. Jennings.

Gilbert Vertezen, a Frenchman, who has led the life of a hermit, dwelling in a cave at Frenchtown, Floyd county, many years, was lately found dead in the woods near his cave. Death was the result of exposure and neglect. He was 66 years of age.

At Charlottesville, Hancock county, a boy named Pitts, 9 years old, set fire to a straw stack on his father's farm, in which his little sister, 2 years old, was asleep, and she was roasted alive. Her remains were almost consumed when raked out with a pole.

William Perkinson, an old settler of Scott county, living three miles south of Lexington, was driving a load of hay. The wagon ran into a deep rut in the road and Mr. Perkinson was precipitated to the ground. His skull was fractured and he died the next day.

The State Attorney General holds that residence in a county sufficient time to be a citizen and vote does not qualify a man for the office of Superintendent, and that applicants must reside twelve months in the county before they are eligible for appointment.

Albert G. Anderson, of Greenfield, has brought suit in the Hancock Circuit Court, against Lucas & Lucas, druggists of Fountaintown, Shelby, charging them with carelessly putting up a prescription of three grains of morphine for a dose, instead of one-half grain, whereby Mrs. Anderson lost her life.

Gen. Lew Wallace lately returned to his home in Crawfordsville, and his neighbors and friends, with a brass band, serenaded him. In behalf of his neighbors, L. B. Dillon made a "welcome home" speech, in which he reminded the General of the high regard and esteem in which he is held, and to which he feelingly responded.

The largest crowd that ever gathered in Marion was present to witness the laying of the corner-stone of the new Grant county Court House. This event closes the fiftieth year of the settlement of the county and town. The new structure will cost, when finished, $135,000 or more. The Masonic and Odd Fellows' fraternities of Central Indiana were present to perform the ceremony.

The Fuller brothers, of Jeffersonville, are circulating a petition, which is being numerously signed and will be presented to Gov. Porter, asking that they be appointed life-savers at the station soon to be located on the falls. The Fullers have been engaged as fishermen on the falls for thirteen years past, and know every "dornick" down there. The life-saving crew will consist of five men—three from Kentucky and two from Indiana.

Near Idaville, 13 miles west of Logansport, a man named Samuel Wilson desired to remove the remains of his wife, who died six years ago. Upon reaching the body the startling discovery was made that it was petrified. The arms and limbs had withstood the effect of the petrification, and nothing remained of them but the bones. The trunk of the body was as hard as flint, and, upon being taken from the grave, was found to weigh about 300 pounds, while the woman during her life weighed about 140 pounds.

J. B. Gilbert, of Jeffersonville, the well-known livery-stable proprietor, went to the country with his hay wagon to bring in a load of hay. When nearly loaded he concluded he would slide down over the rear of the hay to see if the wagon was properly loaded. In the rear of the hay frame stood a sharp wooden peg, eighteen inches long and five inches in diameter. This impaled him in the hip, penetrating seven or eight inches, producing a frightful wound.

Secretary Windom, per special agent, has advertised for sale 125 lots and several half-tracts of land at Vincennes, formerly the old "French claim." The land is one square wide, and runs from the Wabash river to the eastern city limits, and will all be sold except about five squares near the river, which the Government has presented to the city for a park. The land has divided the city of Vincennes for a number of years, and being low and flat has been an eyesore to the town.

The seventeenth annual convention of the Indiana Sunday-School Union, held in Trinity Church, Evansville, was largely attended, and was a success in every respect. Rev. G. R. Curtis, D. D., of Indianapolis, delivered the closing address. W. H. Levering, of Lafayette, was elected President; Charles S. Hubbard, of Knightstown, Vice President; Charles H. Conner, of New Albany, Secretary; Charles D. Meigs, of Indianapolis, Treasurer; W. H. Ripley, of Indianapolis, Statistician. The place of meeting selected for next year was Crawfordsville.

A Richmond correspondent says that horse stealing has become so common that hardly a night passes that one or more are not taken from Wayne, Union or Preble counties, within ten or a dozen miles of Richmond. The thieves are experts, and notwithstanding the most expert detectives in the State have been working up the cases not one of them has been captured, and only two horses recovered. They operate on what is known as the "Indianapolis" method, which is to watch a farmer drive up to a rack, and, after he has entered a store or church, to unhitch and drive away with his horse.

Fifteen or sixteen years ago the store of Albert H. Johnson, in Mitchell, Lawrence county, was burglarized one night and several thousand dollars in money and bonds taken. Mr. Johnson employed detectives to work up the case, but nothing satisfactory was ever accomplished, and the matter was finally allowed to drop, and had almost become forgotten. Recently, however, the Bedford Bank received a $100 Lawrence county bond for collection from the Bank of Bloomington. It proved to be one of the three bonds of that kind that were stolen from Johnson. It is now, however, worthless, as duplicate bonds were issued to Johnson some time after the burglary, which were paid at maturity. It may be that this old bond will be the means of disclosing the names of the burglars and bringing to light the whole affair.

How a Sedentary Life Affects Women.

The Popular Science Monthly remarks that many of the ills or diseases prevalent among the women of our day are no doubt traceable to the sedentary mode of life among them. The progress of the industrial art has done away with much of the household drudgery to which many women were formerly subjected, and in many cases the want of sufficient occupation for needed bodily exercise. It says: The fruits of this state of things are strikingly exhibited in certain observations made by the late Dr. Robertson, a Manchester surgeon, who in his practice as a specialist for women's diseases found that women who themselves performed all their household work found no trace of certain complaints; that these complaints began to make their appearance in women with one servant, became more pronounced in women with two servants, or worse still, with those who had three servants, and so on. He showed statistically that the deaths from child-birth were four times greater in cases of women with four servants than those with none. On the other hand, we noticed a statement the other day that since the suspension of labor in the mills of New England on account of the panic many of the female operatives have sought employment as domestics, and as a consequence there is much more sickness among them than there was previously. This would seem to show that housework is not as healthy as labor in cotton mills."

MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS

A Compound Tincture of the most valuable remedies known to the medical profession, prepared upon strictly pharmaceutical principles.

An experience of twenty-five years proves it to be the greatest Antidote to Malaria and all other Ague Influences known to the world.

The only absolute cure for all Affections of the Kidneys, in Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, all Disorders of the Bowels and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs, it is equally efficacious, while as a remedy for complaints peculiar to the female sex it has no equal.

NOT A BEVERAGE

But an old reliable Household Remedy, thoroughly adapted to assist nature.

It supplies tone to the stomach, reinvigorates the digestive organs, stimulates the secretions, and promoting a regular action of the bowels, enables every organ of the body to perform its allotted work regularly and without interruption.

Its highest commendations come from those who have used it longest and known it best.

Nowhere so popular as in Lancaster, Pa., where it has been in use for more than a quarter of a century.

Highly commended as a General Tonic and Appetizer. Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 23, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $3. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 2.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2 '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y
Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.
At ENGLEWOOD, with the L. S. & M. S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.
At WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.
At LA SALLE, with Ill. Cent. R. R.
At PEORIA, with P. P. & J.; P. D. & E.; I. B. & W.; Ill. Mid.; and T. P. & W. Rds.
At ROCK ISLAND, with "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line," and Rock Isl'd & Peo. Rds.
At DAVENPORT, with the Davenport Division C. M. & St. P. R. R.
At WEST LIBERTY, with the B. C. R. & N. R. R.
At GRINNELL, with Central Iowa R. R.

AUBURN, IND., JUNE 16, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, Editors.

BOYNTON, the swimmer, is now floating down the Mississippi in his swimming suit. When last heard of, he was below Dubuque, and still going down toward the mouth of the river.

THURSDAY last was the anniversary of the birth of George Stephenson, the first to invent and run a locomotive engine in England. In this country the first engine was built by Peter Cooper. He still lives, as does also the engineer who ran the engine, Mr. Horatio Allen. Peter and Horatio ought to come west and see the Fontaine engine make its next test run over the Canada Southern.

QUEBEC, Canada, was visited by a destructive fire last Thursday. About a square mile of the best part of the town was burned, and several lives lost. The loss is estimated at $1,750,000, about one-third of which is covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have been accidental, and when once under headway could not be stopped, owing to a scarcity of water, and the weakness of the force on the fire department. It seems that the city water works can supply but a part of the town at a time, and when the water is turned on in one ward it is shut off all the other wards, leaving the latter, for the time being, destitute of water. In such cases, if a fire breaks out in that part of the town which is receiving no supply, much time is wasted before the change can be made. In this case the delay gave the fire a chance to get a good headway.

MUCH of late is being said about our new road law, and inquiries every day are made of our representative why he voted for such a law. On examination we find that Mr. Moody did not vote for this law, but on the contrary voted and spoke against it. When the bill was on its third reading in the house of representatives, Mr. Moody said: "I am in favor of the best system of road work that can be devised, but I am opposed to this bill, and I want the people of my county to know that I not only vote against this unfair, and to my mind, unjust law, but that I solemnly and earnestly protest against its passage. There are many poor men who cannot pay their road tax in money, but who can do an honest day's work on the highways, and who will be absolutely deprived of the opportunity of doing this work if this bill becomes a law. It may all be well, and sound nicely for soft-handed lawyers and doctors to theorize on this law, and picture out to you the fine roads that are to stretch themselves magic-like all over our country, yet I cannot, despite their beautiful theories, forget the large number of men in my own county on whom it will work a hardship should it become a law. I do trust the good sense of the majority of this house will not pass this law. I know that if you put this money in the hands of any man and authorize him to hire the work done, that very many hard-working, honest citizens will not get any of the work to do, but a few of the friends of this newly-fledged officer will get the pap, and the officer take the poor man's cow to pay for the work his friends have done. This, gentlemen, to my mind is unjust, and never should become a law."

New County Superintendents.

The following are among the county superintendents elected at the recent meetings of the trustees:

Steuben county, Cyrus Cline; Allen county, Jere Hillegass; Whitley county, A. J. Douglass; Wabash county, Harvey Hutchins; Noble county, Nelson Prentiss. Our old-time friend and fellow-worker, Mr. D. Moury failed to be elected in Elkhart county. He is succeeded by a Mr. Swart, who is said to be an able man. Several of these have served their counties in this capacity before. Mr. Douglas has, we think, occupied the position longer than any other man in the state. All are efficient men.

New Road Law.

Attorney-General Baldwin gives the following opinion of the new road law: "After July 15, or thereabout, the new road law will go into operation, and it contains a clause abolishing the old law. The result is, or will be, that from that date until April, 1882, there will be neither supervisors nor superintendents of roads. My advice is to have all the road work for the year done this month; also, all the funds expended, and no contracts be made for fall work, and to do all this before the new law takes effect. In other words, I think it necessary to get the roads of the state in condition to last until next April, and to do it immediately. After the governor's proclamation declaring the non-emergency acts of 1881 (and the new road law is one of them) goes into effect, the roads will be without guardians until April, 1882."

Neighborhood Nippings.

The Auburn Courier says: R. Elson has a parrot at his office. It is a young bird, and was raised in a German family, and will probably be a good linguist.

If the bird talks Pennsylvania Dutch like the COURIER man, it will be a nuisance around the office, and drive away the doctor's customers.—Garrett Herald.

And if it talks English after the manner of the Herald man, it will drive away the devil.

We learn from our enterprising councilmen that a proposition has been made to this city, from parties connected with the Holly water works, that they will put in that system here upon the following terms: The city to donate the company $500 and then to pay $10 per year for each hydrant, and individuals to pay the same when used, the company to bear all the expenses in putting the works in and operating them. This certainly seems plausible.—Kendallville News.

The Plymouth Democrat comes to us with a fine picture of the public school building at that place. The cut shows the building correctly, and will be recognized by all who have seen it. The sixth annual commencement of the school took place the 8th, and was a very successful affair. The people of Plymouth show their appreciation of good schools by giving them encouragement. The graduation addresses, the recitations, essays, etc., occupy nearly the whole of the last week's paper.

Speaking of the normal school, the Valparaiso Messenger says: "The question now is, who sends the most students to our normal school, Illinois or Ohio? Illinois seems to have it all in her favor. Excepting Indiana, Illinois is better represented here than any other state in the Union. A great deal of wire-pulling has been practiced by the college boys during vacation, in order that they might secure good rooms for the summer's work. Some have been successful and reached the desired end, but it is about over with now since the real applicants are slowly putting in an appearance.

A CURIOSITY.—An employe of the C., W. & M. road at the shops in this city, has quite a curiosity in the way of an immense knife. The appearance of the cleaver would indicate that the man who manufactured it must have tried to outdo the world. It is, when open, nineteen inches in length. In shape the blade, which is nine inches long, resembles an ordinary bowie-knife. The handle is curved at its butt end, and tapers down to a fine point, making a good "jimmy" for burglar's use. The owner thinks that the instrument has been used by cracksmen, and his belief is substantiated by the history of the "carver" as given to a Courier reporter. The present owner obtained the knife from a man in Montpelier, Blackford county, who said that it was given him by one Snedeker, of Winchester. Snedeker's father manufactured the knife and gave it to the son, who was a professional burglar. Some years ago he gave the curiosity to the Montpelier man, and shortly afterwards, while Snedeker was entering a house, he was shot and killed. The knife is highly prized by its present owner, and has awakened considerable interest among lovers of old relics.—Wabash Courier.

A Strong Insurance Statement.

Every prudent business man must recognize and acknowledge the importance of securing his estate and his family against the contingency of his premature removal. Experienced business men universally recognize that the best method of covering such a contingency is through a life insurance company, which has financial strength, and has the power and guarantees in its contracts to pay losses in full and without delay.

In another column may be found the full statement of the condition of the Equitable Assurance Society on January 1, 1881. Upon a cursory examination of this statement we see that the company received in cash during the year 1880, the sum of $8,725,899.42, of which amount they returned to policy-holders about fifty-five per cent., or $4,792,937.97, and increased its fund by net cash assets during the year about two and a half million dollars, and, including some items fully secured and accrued, but not yet due, the increase of assets for the year will show about three and three-quarter millions.

Its surplus of assets over all liabilities amounts to $9,228,208.21, or about thirty per cent. of its entire liabilities.

Its policies become indisputable after three years, and its losses are paid without rebate for interest, immediately on the completion and receipt of satisfactory proof of loss and proper release.

This seems to be a company in which every prudent man may insure with the utmost confidence that, in case of death, or maturity of the policy, his claim will be promptly and fully paid.

COL. FRED. GRANT has resigned his position in the army in orderto go to Mexico to assist his father in his railroad matters there. This leaves our small army totally defenseless, and at the mercy of the bloody savages.

Normal School.

A Normal School will be opened in Auburn, Indiana, on July 18, to continue eight weeks. This is designed to to give the live, enterprising teachers of the county a chance to fit themselves for their work without incurring the expense of going abroad for that purpose. The people of Indiana are justly proud of their schools, but there is yet room for improvement. People are demanding better teachers, and our school officers are raising the standard of qualifications necessary to procure a license to teach. It therefore becomes incumbent on those who wish to teach to make some special preparation, and it will be the aim of this school to meet this want, and to teach teachers how to teach. A beginning class will also be formed for younger pupils. Lectures will be given on school government and theory and practice of teaching, by Messrs. Barns and McIntosh. We will also have other lectures on educational topics. Terms: Teachers' class, $5.00; beginning class, $4.00. I will have a competent assistant, and every facility will be given for improvement. Rooms and cheap boarding places can be secured for all. For further information apply to W. P. Myers, Superintendent Auburn schools.

John Rickle can work only half a day at a time now. He has to spend the rest of the time in getting his voice in tune to sing lullabies to his new baby. It is a boy and he is happy, but thinks its a little mean to elevate a fellow so suddenly after being married seven years.

The strawberry festival at the Presbyterian church to-morrow evening promises to be a great success. Every head of a family should treat his little ones to a dish of strawberries, and every young man who seeks a favorable consideration of his case, should lead his sweetheart up to the table and show his large-heartedness by treating her liberally. It has its effect young man. Take the advice of one who knows.

The M. E. church last Sunday was beautifully decorated with evergreens and wreaths of flowers. It was "children's day," and they enjoyed it to the utmost. So did the older ones who gathered there at the usual time for forenoon services, and again in the evening. At both of these entertainments, the children and their instructors gave very fine exercises in singing, recitations, impromptu speeches, etc. All who attended speak very highly of the programme, and the manner in which it was carried out.

The death of Mrs. John Leas, at her home, north of town yesterday morning, was not a matter of surprise to those who watched her in her long suffering. She died about 6 o'clock in the morning, after a sickness of four or five months, supposed to be a cancerous affection of the liver. For sometime she has rested only when under the influence of morphine. She and her husband were among the earliest settlers in this section, and to her other good qualities and virtues she added those of extraordinary patience and endurance under her long and severe afflictions. She was the mother of twelve children, nine of whom are living. Funeral this afternoon, at 2 p. m.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

VALUABLE AND DESIRABLE OUT-LOTS,

BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER OF THE DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of Charles F. Mader, deceased, I will, on the premises herein described, on SATURDAY, THE 30TH DAY OF JULY, 1881, at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale at public auction, a part of the Mader farm, now platted into desirable out-lots, containing from two to five acres each, and designated as "Mader's addition" to the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, as follows:

Out lots numbered one (1), two (2) and three (3), each containing five (5) acres.
No. four (4) contains 2 31 acres.
No. five (5) contains 2 26 acres.
No. six (6) contains 2 20 acres.
No. seven (7) contains 2 10 acres.
No. eight (8) contains 4 acres.

Each will be offered and sold separately. It is appraised at about one hundred dollars per acre, and will be sold for not less than two-thirds the appraised value thereof.

TERMS: One-third of the purchase price, to be paid on day of sale, one-third in twelve months, and the other third in eighteen months from day of sale, the purchaser giving notes bearing interest, waiving valuation laws and for attorney's fees, for the deferred payments, and the notes to be secured by mortgages on the premises sold.

The above lots, except No. 8, front on the Auburn and Waterloo highway. Number 8 lies on the north end of Van Buren street. There cannot be found a more desirable locality around for an out-lot than is now offered, and it may be years before another equally good opportunity will be presented to purchase such property. Original plat can be seen at W. L. Penfield's office.

No More on Earth.

James Orr died of consumption at his home in Corunna last Saturday morning. Mr. Orr was a powerful man physically until a few months ago, when this dread disease took possession of him. He has been failing ever since, and at last was compelled to succumb to the jaws of death. Jim was a hard-working, industrious fellow, and we sympathize with the relatives and friends of the deceased. He was interred south of that town on Sunday.

Blow Out

One day last week, the safety valve blew out of the boiler at Husselman & Veeley's saw-mill, located in the north end of town. The steam issuing from the opening made a loud and peculiar noise. Two teams standing near by became frightened and ran away, one of them belonging to Peter Grogg and the other to Mr. Rendles, doing slight damage to the wagons. There was no injury done at the mill, and to-day she is grinding away as of yore.

Sunday Night.

THE LITTLE HEARTS FILLED WITH JOY.

Last sabbath evening the little folks of town gave a concert at the Methodist church to the pleasure and delight of all who were present. The evening was taken up with dialogues, essays, etc., with appropriate remarks from some of the older portion of the audience. It was a gathering gotten up expressly for the children, and was managed and conducted in a successful manner.

A Hard Fall.

While Mrs. J. J. VanAuken, two children and her mother, Mrs. Williams, were driving up Main street last Friday, one of the little fellows struck the horse with the whip, causing him to jump, suddenly throwing Mrs. Williams backward out of the vehicle. Her cries soon brought assistance and she was taken into Shaffer's store until she felt able to return home. Mrs. W. is a large woman, and the fall was a hard one, but fortunately she was not seriously hurt.

Old Settlers.

THE FATHERS OF OUR COUNTY IN COUNCIL TO-DAY.

The old settlers of this and adjoining counties are here to-day having a good time in general, and talking of the days "when you and I were boys." The attendance is quite large, and all seem glad to have another hearty, friendly grasp of each other's hand. The old gentlemen enjoy themselves at one of these gatherings apparently as well as the rural chap does following a circus parade. Music, speeches, etc., are the order of the day.

Who Was It?

SOME ONE HAS BEEN STEALING BOOTS AND SHOES.

Last Saturday the sheriff of Allen county came to this place and arrested the McDowell boys (tin peddlers) for having a lot of boots and shoes in their possession, supposed to have been stolen. The parties herein named claim that they purchased them of some firm at Fort Wayne and obtained the goods honestly. The McDowell boys have carried themselves pretty straight as a general thing about town, and we are a little surprised at this sudden arrest.

Auburn Courier

Local and Miscellaneous.

—I'cream

—Green Peas.

—Summer again.

—Re-plant your corn.

—Lots of music to-day.

—The fourth comes next.

—Cucumbers and cholera now.

—Del Lock is at his post again.

—Houghton's grove. How's that?

—The marshal is doing good work.

—The assessor is through his work.

—Brine dealers have a harvest to-day

—Make hay while the sun shines, farmer.

—Did you get an "old settler" to-day?

—Davenport has a new awning. No cigars.

—The commissioners' court adjourned Tuesday.

—The time for paying town taxes expired Saturday.

—The Eagle Mills were out of flour and wheat Tuesday.

—Ladies on horse back is not the fashion this summer.

—The boys are taking in a good many old settlers to-day.

—The deputy marshal gave Rolla Tefft his walking papers Tuesday.

—Bob. Matheny now runs the hub lathe at the hub-and-spoke-factory.

—Joe Stafford has the contract for plastering D. D. Snyder's residence.

—Hank Yesbera's horse hurt himself and is not in a condition for driving.

—Humphry, at the Physicians' drug-store has a new bicycle, all painted red.

—J. C. Henry's bay-window looks attractive. We mean the one on his residence.

—Frank Culbertson looks natural with a horn in his mouth—a brass horn, of course.

—Tode Latson has a new suit and walking stick. The public supports him, you know.

—We forgot to mention the fact that Charley Emanuel runs the legal business on his own hook.

—Joe Ruffner is not working in Casebeer & Matheny's livery barn at present. Joe got the "big finger."

—Pete Brandon will go to Michigan and join his better-half next week. Pete says she wants to see him.

—P. J. Lockwood and Billy Shryock had a race down Main street Tuesday Evening. Both came out ahead.

—The Auburn mixed band played for the show. They scared the crowd away and the audience was slim.

—Woodhull & Cruxton, of Angola, have dissolved partnership, Mr. Cruxton retiring from the practice.

—The ladies are invited to call at Mrs Little's place of business and examine the new goods that arrived yesterday.

—If Johnny Spacht would attach a pair of sleeves to his vest, he could have a nobby coat with but little expense.

—Chris. Baker has opened his grocery store at the Junction in Hulsenbeck's building. Dood Lanning will be clerk.

—The heavy rains last week made the roads rough and muddy, and our factories are not receiving much timber at present.

—Uncle Geo. McMillen, of Corunna, is running a meat market on wheels. He sells it so fast that he has no use for a refrigerator.

—The Corunna band gave a strawberry festival last Saturday night, and had a splendid good time and a favorable financial result.

—Tarney's slaughter-house underwent a thorough washing out last week, and now how is that fellow going to prove it is a nuisance.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dills will entertain their friends with a picnic dinner to-day. Services at Mr. Dill's office, opposite the north side of the square.

—Mr. Rhodenbaugh has "pulled off" the donkies, and their work is ended for the present. This leaves two dray teams, which is sufficient to accommodate all in this line of business.

—J. B. White, of the Fort Wayne Fruit House, is a man who believes in advertising his goods. His extensive sales, and consequent prosperity are due largely to his continued and judicious advertising.

—The new barber, Frank Philips, will visit private houses and shampoo ladies' hair. The beauty of a lady is her hair, and all should take the advantage of the opportunity so considerately offered them.

—Mr. Quince, at St. Johns, has not been able to obtain any clue to the thieves who burglarized his store a while ago. He spared no pains or expense to get track of them, but up to date has been unsuccessful.

—The Grit and Pluck Combination who have been entertaining our citizens this week, is a first-class troupe. They play Rip Van Winkle at Waterloo, to-night, and the citizens there will miss a good treat if they do not attend.

—Chris Baldock spent a few days at Fort Wayne last week, and returned with the full assurance that he saw the elephant.

—Let the dead bury their dead and the living use Dr. Marshall's Big Blood and Liver Cure and be well. Big bottles fifty cents. All druggest are agents.

—We are under obligations to T. C. Mays for a copy of the Arkansas School Journal. It is a neatly printed Journal and its editorial management seems to be first-class.

—The Normal school at Newville begins July 13, and closes August 26. The principal, Gilbert L. Harney, is working for success. Any information may be had by addressing him.

—The rural girl with her white dress on is sitting beneath the shady maples on Main street, eating candy kisses and reading the little lines of poetry they contain to her Johnny, sweet Johnny, who is sitting by her side.

—James O'Connell, one of the fellows who broke into Barney's store at St. Joe Saturday night, offered his services as hostler to Sheriff Leas a few days previous. No doubt his intention was to steal one of the sheriff's fine horses.

—While the Little end of the COURIER was breaking a colt on Ensley's Avenue the other evening, we dropped a three-bladed, black-handled pocket knife, which the finded can hand over to us if it don't make any difference to them. No reward

—Mr. Thomas Cool and Amanda Myers were joined together in wedlock last Sunday at the residence of Mr. W. L. Meese. We hope that Tommy and Amanda will not get excited, but glide down the stream of life in a Cool, pleasant manner.

—The Auburn Silver Cornet band went in the south end of town to practice last Saturday night, and Sim. Tarney and John Getrost were the happiest men you ever saw. They are naturally good-natured, but the practising of a brass band would rack the patience of Job.

—Union Chapel, east of town, was dedicated last Sunday morning. Bishop Weaver, of Dayton, O., officiated. It is a good sign to see these churches springing up all over the country. Besides it will be a relief to the houses from the double duty of school and church purposes.

—Jim McConnell, a teamster who has been in the employ of Frank Hogue for some time, had his foot badly cut while loading logs at the Saginaw depot one day last week. Mr. McConnell is a hard-working, industrious man, and this misfortune will be somewhat pressing upon his financial box.

—Miss Anice Cowan, who has been teaching school two miles west of town, and Miss Jennie, who had control of the Junction school, both closed their labors last Friday. Their management was very satisfactory to both parents and scholars, and in the bye and bye they will rank among the best pedagogues in the county.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give an ice-cream and strawberry festival on Friday evening of this week. Also on Wednesday of next week the social will be entertained by Mrs. James Barclay and Mrs. Mary Hixon. A cordial invitation is extended to all. MRS. S. B. MILLER, Pres.
MRS. R. ELSON, Sec'y.

—Those bicycles are somewhat of a nuisance. Tuesday evening Mart Sheets was driving by, and John Stahl was riding along, when the bicycle either became scared at the horse or the horse became scared at the Stahl, we don't know which. At any rate, Stahl was thrown to the ground, and Sheets' horse and buggy were astride a picket fence.

—Last Sunday, a mob of unruly boys were playing ball on the commons in front of the cemetery, to the disgust of a large number of citizens who were visiting this home of the dead, during the day. The marshal should stop this performance, and if they have to play ball on the sabbath day, send them in some other part of the town. If these young fellows see their names in the COURIER, they will know what it is done for.

—The Press says we bought the Courier, so as to control future nominations &c. As neither of the editors of the Courier is an aspirant for any county office, and as newspapers do not generally control these nominations, we don't believe the assertion is exactly true. We don't believe any one ever told brother Baxter so, and as the idea never en ered our heads before, we don't believe there is anything in it. Take it back brother B., like a man, it is the best you can do.

Lost

Railroad King.

JAY GOULD IN AUBURN FRIDAY.

Last Friday evening, the great railroad king, Jay Gould, passed over the Wabash in a special car. Mr. G. had his male and female attendants along with him, and they put on more style and were as conceited at Jim Hazzard when he was cashier of the First National bank. Meals were served up in the car, and take it all in all, it presented the appearance of a first-class refractory on wheels. They only stopped long enough to water the iron horse, when they pulled out at a rapid rate.

Laying for 'Em."

For the past week or more, there have been several suspicious looking roughs wandering about town, and some of our citizens appointed themselves "night police" and watched for them. Last Saturday, Mr. Veeley, living on north Main Street, had considerable money in his possession, and it was quietly noised around that these vagabonds were lying for him. Several of our citizens watched about his premises until late at night, but no one came to disturb his slumbers or carry away the "shining lucre." Everybody should be prepared to defend themselves, and shoot the villains on the spot.

Within the Bars.

TWO HARD DRUNKS IN THE COOLER.

Last Thursday and Friday, two hard-looking "seeds" of humanity were staggering about town having a regular "old fashion" drunk. Friday night they became noisy and unruly, and together with several other fellows, disturbed the quietude of our peaceful town. The marshal thought it was about time that they had a guardian, and he took them under his careful wing. Two of them were placed in the cooler for the night, and another made a bed in rear of Billy Little's shoe shop with nothing but the canopy of heaven to cover his frail carcass. They were all sharpers.

Too Thin

THE AUBURN BAND TAKES BACK SEATS AGAIN.

There has not been a public gathering in Auburn since the organization of the present band, that they have been employed to discourse music. At the old settlers' meeting to-day, the Corunna band is engaged, and gets paid for their services. But that is all right. Now, why was not our band hired too? The men who are generally on the committee for music are the very ones who stand upon the street corners and preach "home industry and home enterprise" until their tongues fail to wag any longer. If we want a good band here we must encourage them, have them out at every gathering, and assist them in every way possible to enhance their interests. The band that we have now plays well enough for any assembly, and we hope hereafter that different arrangements will be made in this direction.

High Waters.

CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE DONE ALONG CEDAR CREEK.

For several weeks past, every one was wishing for rain, and it became so dry and hot that, in fact, it was the topic of conversation. But the rain came. For several days and nights it fell in torrents until the lower grounds were all overflowed, the water on the east side of town coming within a few rods of Main street. The fences along Cedar were torn down and washed away, and the corn and potato fields were considerably damaged. Bridges and culverts were wrecked, and many of them floated down the stream. Franklin township seems to have sustained the greatest loss. It is said that there is hardly a small bridge or culvert in the township that is safe to cross. The session of the commissioners last week was nearly all taken up with the cry of appropriation. The freshet seems to have been more destructive than the one last spring, owing to the fact that the crops along the lands were badly damaged.

Slipped Up.

THIEVES ENTER BARNEY BROS. STORE AT ST. JOE.

Last Saturday night, two men broke into Barney Bros. store at St. Joe, and while they were investigating the stock and selecting out articles that suited their taste the best, Ezra McIntyre went to the house of one of the Barney's and informed him what was going on at the store. Several men were gathered together, and, going to the place, found the light-fingered gentry "putting away" things just as though they had a right to. The men rushed in and captured them, and Sunday morning they were brought to Auburn and turned over to Sheriff Leas. The head man gives his game as James O.Connell, which evidently is not his original name. There are so many rumors afloat concerning the affair that it is difficult to ascertain the true facts, and probably matters will remain so until the thieves are brought before the bar of justice. O'Connell, it is said, has recently been released from a Canada prison.

—We learn that Billy Latson is now on the road home. Our informant did'nt say whether he is moving along one tie at a time, or in a box-car. Nevertheless the boys will all give him a hearty shake when he reaches the end of his journey.

West Richland.

The farmers are resting.

It is too wet to cultivate corn.

The prospects for a heavy corn crop this season are not very flattering.

Heavy rain Monday night, Tuesday, Tuesday night and Wednesday last.

Observing farmers say that the fly is finishing our already short wheat crop.

T. F. Jordon his resigned his office as trustee, and Thomas Franks has been appointed in his place.

Mr. Amos Britton, a highly esteemed citizen, of this township, died Wednesday morning, and was buried Thursday afternoon.

WhoCan Beat it?

A. M. St. Clair and others, of this township, are the owners of a short-horn bull that one year was and 24 days old last Saturday. On that day he was weighed, and settled the scales to the extent of 786 pounds. They purchased him last year of George W. Swartz, of Wilmington township.

MARRIED—at the residence of the bride's parents, in Union township, June 9, 1881, C. C. Boyer and Miss Mary Walsworth. The happy couple have our best wishes for their future happiness, and, also, thanks for a liberal supply of cake.

Died

At his residence, in Jackson township, June 13, 1881. Hon. Henry Feagler. Deceased was born May 19, 1816. His age was 65 years and 24 days. He moved to this county in 1836, and has resided in this county ever since. He served one term in the legislature, and has always been esteemed as one of our best citizens. The funeral, which was largely attended, took place Tuesday, at the M. E. church.

Kindergarten School.

I will open a kindergarten school in the room occupied by Miss Coder during the last school year, opposite the sheriff's residence. School to to commence on Monday, June 20th, and continue eight weeks. Terms one dollar per month, to be paid in advance. For particulars call at my residence, near the cemetery. MRS. W. P. MYERS.

Fire.

This is to certify that I am insured in the Ohio Farmers' insurance company, and that my house and part of its contents were destroyed by fire May 4th, and on the 24th of May the state agents, Mr. T. F. Sawyer and J. W. Swaysgood, called and adjusted my loss in the most pleasant, agreeable and satisfactory manner, allowing my claim in full. Gentlemen, please accept my hearty thanks for the courtesy and fair treatment received at your hands, in the adjustment of my claim. I hereby tender my sincere thanks to the Ohio Farmers' insurance company for the check for five hundred dollars, received from the hand of J. W. Swaysgood this 6th day of June, 1881.

A FABLE.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Some cawing Crows, a hooting Owl,
A Hawk, a Canary, an old Marsh-Fowl,
One day all met together,
To hold a caucus and settle the fate
Of a certain bird (without a mate),
A bird of another feather.

"My friends," said the Owl, with a look most wise,
"The Eagle is soaring too near the skies,
In a way that is quite improper;
Yet the world is praising her, so I'm told,
And I think her actions have grown so bold
That some of us ought to stop her."

"I have heard it said," quoth Hawk, with a sigh,
"That young lambs died at the glance of her eye,
And I wholly scorn and despise her.
This, and more, I am told they say—
And I think that the only proper way
Is never to recognize her."

"I am quite convinced," said Crow, with a caw,
"That the Eagle minds no moral law—
She's a most unruly creature."
"She's an ugly thing," piped Canary-Bird;
"Some call her handsome—it's so absurd—
She hasn't a decent feature."

Then the old Marsh-Hen went hopping about.
She said she was sure—she hadn't a doubt—
Of the truth of each bird's story;
And she thought it a duty to stop her flight,
To pull her down from her lofty height
And take the gilt from her glory.

But, lo! from a peak on the mountain grand
That looks out over the smiling land
And over the mighty ocean,
The Eagle is spreading her splendid wings—
She rises, rises, and upward swings,
With a slow, majestic motion.

Up in the blue of God's own skies,
With a cry of rapture, away she flies,
Close to the Great Eternal;
She sweeps the world with her piercing sight—
Her soul is filled with the Infinite
And the joy of things supernal.

Thus rise forever the chosen of God,
The genius-crowned or the power-shod,
Over the dust-world sailing;
And back, like splinters blown by the winds,
Must fall the missiles of silly minds,
Useless and unavailing.

ROLF'S RESCUE.

Rolf was a collie. There was nothing remarkable about his appearance. He was a handsome animal; certainly, but I have seen handsomer. He was simply a purely-bred, good-sized, well-formed, black-and-tan shepherd dog. But, although I have had a long and extensive acquaintance with dogs of various breeds, it has never been my fortune to know one that could match Rolf in keenness and breadth of sagacity and in versatility of acquirements. He became my property when we were both very young; he, a fat, unshapely little pup, just able to lick milk on his own account; I, a boy of 14. I was proud of Rolf and soon got to be very fond of him; and he speedily attached himself to me and acknowledged me as his sole master. We were inseparable; he followed me everywhere like my shadow, and we soon came thoroughly to understand each other. I have always been excessively fond of boating, fishing and shooting; and, in the Shetland archipelago—in one of the islands of which, close by the sea, we lived—I had ample scope and freedom to indulge in such pastimes.

Rolf was a present from my father. I began his education almost immediately, and he soon showed himself endowed with rare intelligence. He speedily became as fond of sport as his master. I had him under thorough command, and in a very short time he came to understand and obey my slightest wish. To please me was evidently his greatest pleasure; to win my approval and caress, his greatest ambition; and to live with me and for me he seemed to regard as a final cause of his existence. I encouraged him to swim, and no spaniel was ever a better water-dog. He was pointer, retriever, friend and companion all in one. Once I had winged a duck of a rare species flying over a small lake. Rolf plunged in in pursuit; but as often as he was about to seize the prey the duck dived. Time after time this was repeated. My last percussion cap was expended, and I was, therefore, terribly mortified at my helplessness. Nothing for it but to trudge home several miles for a fresh supply; so, ordering Rolf ashore, I left him in charge of my gun and shot-bag till my return. I knew he would not leave the gun, and I was pretty sure the duck would not dare to leave the protection of the water while the dog was so near.

On my way, it occurred to me how much more convenient it would have been if I could have sent Rolf home for the caps. It might often be useful to be able to send him home with a message; and I forthwith resolved to add another accomplishment to the many he had already acquired. I began with short distances—only a few hundred yards—ordering him to go "home, home" (repeating the word "home"). In a short time he perfectly understood my meaning; and, after a little while, I was wont to send him many miles home with some indifferent message, written on a piece of paper and tied to his collar, just for practice; but occasionally I found it a most useful acquirement. Those at home were instructed to be sure, when he appeared with my message, to pet and praise him, and send him back with a reply of some sort, a note or small parcel, and instruct him to go to his "master." I was amazed and delighted at his quickness of comprehension and readiness to obey. Teaching him was the easiest thing in the world. My order, conveyed in the invariable stereotyped formula, "Home, Rolf, home, quick!" in a very short time came to be instantly and cheerfully obeyed; and then the return order, "To your master, Rolf," with at least equal alacrity. I little thought that a day would come when I should owe my life to Rolf's faithfulness as my messenger.

Our house, which was on a large island, was situated at the head of a fine bay or fiord, which ran inland some three miles. Right across the mouth of the bay there stretched a small narrow island, which formed a complete natural breakwater, and effectually protected the bay itself from the fury of the ocean waves. Barely half a mile separated the two islands at the nearest points. The smaller island was uninhabited, except by a few sheep and multitudes of rabbits. One fine autumn day I embarked in my little pleasure boat, and sailed down the bay to the little island to shoot rabbits, Rolf my only companion. Near the extreme point of the island, and just before landing, I caught sight of a great Northern diver swimming along shore. It had never been my good fortune to shoot one of these magnificent birds, and I was anxious to secure a specimen; so I at once gave chase. It is useless to fire at any of the divers when swimming, unless they are very near, for they are certain to "dive on the fire," as the phrase goes; it is a trick they all have. This particular bird was an old and wary fellow, and for a long time I could not get within range. He would appear for an instant just a few yards too far off, and then dive, while I continued the pursuit in the same direction. I was in this way beguiled a considerable distance round the seaward coast of the island, which is formed of steep precipices, detached rocks or stacks, skerries and sunken rocks. At last I got a fair chance, and, to my great joy, bagged the diver.

As by this time I was fully half-way round the island, and the light wind, which was off shore, was slightly on the quarter, and the sea perfectly smooth, I kept sailing on with the intention of circumnavigating it. Gliding smoothly and silently along, and just as I was passing a small rock called Skarta Skerry, I caught sight of an otter on its top busily engaged in discussing his dinner. He was within easy range, and to snatch my fowling-piece and give him the contents of the right barrel was the work of an instant. He was wounded, but not killed, so I gave him the coup de grace from the second barrel. Luffing up I ran my boat along the skerry. Seizing the diminutive kedge attached to the end of the long rope which served as a painter, I sprang on shore, giving the skiff a little shove off, to prevent her rubbing against the sharp and limpet-covered rock. With sails flapping in the light breeze, she fell off to leeward. I fixed the kedge in a little crevice; but, turning to see that the boat was swinging clear and safe, to my horror I observed the other end of the rope running over the bows and dropping into the sea. In some way never accounted for, but most probably by some idle, meddling hand, it had been unloosed from the ring-bolt, and in my hurry and excitement I had not observed it. My boat was adrift, and I was a prisoner. In an instant I knew and felt the peril of the situation. It was low water at the time, but the tide had already turned, the flood was coming in, and at high water the low-lying rocks of Skarta Skerry, I was well aware, would be covered some feet. Had I been a good swimmer, I should doubtless instantly have stripped and swam to and regained my boat, or at any rate could easily enough have reached the smaller island, or even our own larger one; but, unfortunately, at that time I could not swim at all. The Skarta Skerry was barely fifty yards from a steep, smooth precipice of several hundred feet in height, and the nearest landing-place, in a little creek where the shore was sloping, was at least 150 yards distant. To me, in the circumstances, this was an impassable gulf.

I sat down and tried to think. For a few terrible moments no hope of rescue or means of escape presented itself to my mind. I dare say some audible expressions of despair burst from me, for I was roused by Rolf laying his paw on my knee and looking up wistfully in my face, as if to inquire what was wrong. "Ah! Rolf," I cried; "you can reach the shore and are safe enough; but your master will perish miserably. What will they think at home?" His quick ear caught the word home, and was instantly on the alert as if for orders, and even ran to the water's edge with an eager whine, which expressed, as plainly as words could have done: "Send me." In my first excitement I had not thought of this before; and even now, when there really seemed a gleam of hope in it, the thought of parting with my companion and being left alone on that terrible rock was dreadful. But what else was there that could be done? "You are right, Rolf," I said. "It is my only chance, and you shall go." I tore a leaf from my pocketbook and wrote: "I am on the Skarta Skerry—boat adrift. Send help instantly, or it will be too late." Hastily, but securely, I wrapped my missive in my handkerchief, which I tied firmly to Rolf's collar, all the time saying to the intelligent creature: "You must go home with this, Rolf, home. Now, Rolf, will you be sure to take my message home, and quick?" He was already at the water's edge. "Come here, Rolf," I cried. He rushed back to my arms. For an instant I hesitated, and tried to think. "Yes," I said; "it must be so; it is my only chance. Rolf, Rolf, your master is in sore straits; his life depends upon you. Brave dog, good dog! Now, home, Rolf—home, and quick!"

Two bounds, an impatient bark, as though he meant to assure me he knew it was a case of life and death, a plunge, and Rolf was cleaving the water toward the nearest shore. I sat still and silent on my dismal perch, and watched his rapid progress. I saw him approach and gain the rocky shore. I saw him shake himself hastily. I saw him scramble up among the bowlders, up the sloping path at the head of the creek, and reach the brow of the cliff. For an instant I saw him clear against the sky, and then he disappeared. He had never paused or looked back. And now I felt indeed alone and miserable beyond description. A depression of spirit weighed me down. It happened long ago, and yet I well remember my thoughts and feelings and fancies as though it had been yesterday. They were too deep and intense to be other than graven on memory as with a pen of iron.

Scarcely had Rolf passed beyond recall when it occurred to me that it might have been a better plan to have tied a strand of rope to his collar and my own wrist and made him tow me on shore. He could have done it, and I might have reached the rocks alive. Why did I not think of this sooner? But it was too late now, and I feared I should certainly perish miserably. Then I wished the end were come. When it did come it would be only a brief struggle. But to be doomed to sit there and think, and watch the rising tide for two or three long hours, hope and despair alternately possessing me—it would drive me mad, I said to myself. But I resolutely thrust from me the ghastly picture which fancy conjured up, and tried, as calmly as I was able, to calculate the chances for and against a rescue.

Everything depended upon Rolf. On all previous occasions when I had sent him home with messages he had only at most a few miles of hill or moor to traverse. But now he had to cross the smaller island, then cross the sound—nearly half a mile in width, as I have said—and still he was three miles from home. I knew there were many things that might distract, deter or detain him, and a very short detention would be certain death to me. Suppose Rolf started a rabbit on the way, might he not forget his errand and pursue? Then another terrible fear took possession of me. Rolf always rolled and rubbed himself on the grass when he came out of the water. What if my handkerchief got detached and was lost? What if my pencil-scrawl, soaked with water, became unreadable? But even should none of these things happen, would Rolf be noticed as soon as he reached home? It would need to be as soon. Men, I knew, could not be got at a moment's notice; they must be sent for from some little distance; and, after manning the nearest and handiest boat, fully four miles of sea must be traversed ere help could reach me. And there was now left but the slenderest margin for possible delay. The flood-tide had been running for an hour. In three hours at most the skerry would be covered. What should I do? I well remember the lines kept recurring to me again and again:

> Amid his senses' giddy wheel,
> Did he not desperate impulse feel
> Headlong to plunge himself below,
> And meet the worst his fears foreshow?

It was not a dream with me, but a terrible reality, and the "desperate impulse" became well-nigh overmastering. I fought against it with all the strength I could command. Would it not be cowardice? Would it not be suicide? I could not listen to the temptation; I could not think of it, not while there was a gleam of hope, not while reason remained, not at least till the water had risen to my feet. I was no coward. I had often been in positions of utmost peril, when coolness of head, readiness of resource or promptitude of action had carried me through; and I rather prided myself on my presence of mind in circumstances of difficulty or danger. I had once been driven far out to sea in a storm. On another occasion my boat had been swamped. I had lost my way in a snow-storm. I had once been condemned to spend thirty-six long hours of tempest and snow and sleet in the dead of winter on an uninhabitable island, and, when no boat could possibly come with help. But in these other cases of emergency I had never lost coolness or courage or hope, for there was always something to do, something that could be done. There was the need and the demand for action of some sort. But here it was very different. Sitting on this terrible rock, perforce so utterly passive and powerless, with nothing that I could do, and little of promise to hope for—the thought and suspense and anticipation were torturing.

I well remember the horrible fascination of watching the water rising inch by inch, creeping, with a cruel, slow persistency, higher and higher every moment. I remember thinking of the martyr maiden—bound to a stake, and left to perish by the flowing tide. This and other dismal pictures would, spite of all my efforts, force themselves upon my mind. It was the very Valley of the Shadow of Death through which I was passing. Then thoughts and memories of another kind—of the home and friends I should never see more—thoughts, too, of a more solemn kind, bearing upon the future which comes after death—reflections, retrospections, regrets, hopes, prayers, came thick and fast. Anon my reverie was interrupted. As I sat there, silent and motionless as the rock itself, a cormorant rose from beneath the water close by, and made for the Skerry, with the evident intention of coming to rest upon it. Catching sight of me when only a few feet off, he instantly dived with a splash. How I envied him! He was at home in the water, and I—oh, fool, fool, to have neglected the art of swimming!

Thus two and a half long hours slipped past; long they seemed—almost a lifetime—and yet all too short. The tide was rapidly rising. Only a small space of the topmost point of the rock now remained above the water, and still there was no indication of rescue. Not a sound was to be heard but the ripple and plash of the water, or the wild scream of the sea-gulls overhead. If all had gone well with Rolf, and he had been expeditious, it was fully time—it was something more than time—that succor should have come. Rolf had not returned to me, which I was sure he would have done if he had not carried the message home. That was now the only slender thread to which fast-fading hope still clung. And thus another miserable, torturing half-hour passed, and now the water was washing my very feet, and scarce enough rock for a cormorant to perch on was left uncovered. I sprung to my feet with a despairing groan. I looked at the cruel sea, the black frowning rocks, the bright sun, and blue sky. "Oh, horrible! Will no help come? Must I thus miserably die?—so young and strong too! Ah, Rolf! you have failed me in my need!"

But Rolf had not failed me. Standing there, with strained senses and bursting breast, just then I seemed to hear a sound different from the monotonous plash, plash of the waters around me. Was it the sound of oars, or was it only fancy? I held my breath and listened. Again that sound! Joy, joy! I knew it well—the stroke of oars, regular but more rapid than usual—quick, quick, like those who pulled for very life, as indeed they did. Loudly, wildly, half mad, I shouted my welcome. Another minute, and round the point, scarcely fifty yards from my perch, swept a light four-oared boat, urged on to utmost speed by four stalwart fellows, who knew too well the need there was for it all, and bent to their work with a will; while high in the bow, like a figure-head, with paws on the gunwale, ears erect, and trembling all over with excitement, the first sight that caught my eye was my noble, faithful Rolf! I had done him injustice when, for a moment, I thought he had failed me; and my heart smote me. The instant he saw me, he sprung with a joyful bark far ahead, and swam to me. I took him in my arms all dripping as he was. I was saved, and to him I owed my life! Not his the cause of the delay which had so nearly made the rescue come too late. He had carried my message safely and swiftly home. But, notwithstanding that all haste was made, it took a considerable time before a crew of men could be collected.

My darling Rolf lived to a good old age. He has long passed away to the "happy hunting-grounds." Since those days of my youth he has had several successors, but never one to equal him in intelligence and fidelity, never one I loved so well, and never one that so well deserved to be loved and cherished.

I shall only add that, after that day's terrible experience, I lost no time in putting it beyond possibility that I should ever again encounter a like mishap, for I soon became an expert swimmer, and found myself as much at home in the water as Rolf did.

THE BIBLE.

History of the Formation of the Divine Work.

It may help to an understanding of the work involved in revising the accepted text of the New Testament, says the Philadelphia Times, to recall the circumstances under which this collection of sacred writings had its origin. The history of the formation of what is technically known as the canon of the New Testament—that is, the collection of those writings that were accepted as of divine authority and the separation from them of other writings, even contemporaneous, that were not accepted—bears some points of resemblance to the long and gradual growth of the Old Testament canon. This, it will be remembered, was a process extending over centuries. After the return of the Jews from captivity, one of the first cares of Ezra and his associates was to collect, edit and transcribe, if not to translate, the Books of Moses—called in Hebrew Tora, a landmark—known to us as the Pentateuch, or, from the Greek title afterward given them, "the Law." After that an effort was made to gather together the various prophetic books, "the writings of the saints," and in the course of time there was gradually formed the second part of the canon, which is referred to in the New Testament as "the Prophets." Finally there were collected from the remaining body of Hebrew literature, both ancient and recent, a variety of sacred writings or "Hagiographa," some of them used in the Temple service, some handed down by popular tradition, and some evidently compiled from various sources to complete the historic record. This group, which took its popular title from the leading division, "the Psalms," was not closed until long after the Law and the Prophets. These were the three separate collections so often referred to by the sacred writers. The dates of the different books thus gathered together cover a period of at least 1,000 years, and there is no doubt that they were originally written in a great variety of dialects and characters. As finally transcribed and edited, however, they formed the sacred canon of the Jewish Church, in somewhat different order but substantially as we have them in our Bibles to-day. The whole of these sacred writings was translated into Greek, at Alexandria, by order of Ptolemy Philadelphus, by seventy-two learned men assembled for the purpose, and this version of "the seventy," or the Septuagint, was the version that was familiar at the beginning of our era and that is commonly quoted in the New Testament.

The history of the New Testament does not extend over any such long period, but within its narrower limits the process was not dissimilar. The earliest of the Christian writings is supposed to have been the first general epistle of St. Peter, which was written some sixteen years after the formation of the Christian Church. After this St. Paul wrote his letter to the Galatians, those to the Thessalonians, and like messages to other churches that had been established through his preaching. Naturally these letters were highly prized, and no doubt they were handed about and copied, and as the number of them increased the churches in different cities would take pains to secure copies for their own use. It was not until those who had been the personal companions of our Lord on earth were growing old, and felt that it would be well to leave a permanent record of what they had seen and heard, that St. Matthew and St. Mark were moved to write the Gospel narratives that go by their names. St. Luke wrote his Gospel and his history of the Acts of the Apostles a little later, St. Paul having meanwhile added to the number of his epistles, and the several writings of St. John, the last survivor of the Apostles, were written last of all, the date assigned to his Gospel being near the end of the first century of our era. There is no record of the manner in which these various writings were circulated, but that they were very commonly circulated is evident in many ways. St. Peter, for example, alludes to the epistles of St. Paul as though they were known to his readers, and St. John plainly wrote his Gospel as a supplement to the others. In the writings of the early Fathers we begin to meet with references to the Gospels and to the apostolic discourses, and by the middle of the third century we hear of the New Testament as a collective body of sacred writings to be named beside the Old.

Still there was no authoritative action like that by which the Great Synagogue had accepted or rejected and made up the Hebrew canon. By a gradual and natural process the extant Christian writings became divided into two classes—the "homologoumenoi," which the universal tradition of all the churches accepted as authentic, and "antilegomenoi," which were accepted by some or a majority, but not by all. Among the books which do not appear to have been at first universally accepted were the epistles of St. James and St. Jude, the later epistles of St. Peter and St. John, the epistle to the Hebrews and the Apocalypse, while some of the churches received as authoritative the epistles of Barnabas and Clement, the Shepherd of Hermas and some other books that were afterward discarded. The prominence given to the Christian writings in the persecution of Diocletian shows what importance they had then assumed, and it was during this period, no doubt, that the greatest efforts were made for their preservation. Long before the first General Council of Nicæa, which formulated the Catholic creed of the Trinity, the Holy Gospels had been held in the utmost veneration, alike in private devotions and in the divine service, but as to the apostolic writings the canon had not been finally determined even at that time, and it was not until the third council of Carthage, in the year 397—which was not one of the great councils—that the last of the books of the New Testament as we now have it, reduced to the generally-accepted writings of the Apostles themselves, was first set forth complete by what may be called official authority. This was the period of St. Jerome, one of the greatest Biblical scholars of that or any time, who, partly by original translation and partly by revision and comparison of the various partial translations already existing—for by this time portions of the scriptures had been rendered into many tongues—made up that great Latin version of the whole Bible, the Vulgate, which became to the middle ages what the Septuagint has been to the Jews and the early Christians and which has been the basis of all the early translations into modern languages. The English divines of 1611, who relied mainly on the Septuagint for the interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures, made use of such Greek texts of the New Testament as were accessible to them, but still they were helped greatly by the Vulgate. The considerable number of the early manuscripts that have since been brought to light have much enlarged the opportunities of modern scholarship to reach the exact meaning, if not the exact original text, of the apostolic writings; yet the result of the recent revision shows that, whatever verbal inaccuracies may have been introduced by successive generations of copyists, the Christian church has preserved and transmitted the body of the New Testament Scriptures through all these centuries with marvelous fidelity.

Freaks of the Telegraph.

Names are always a great stumbling block to the clerks, and addresses are composed of names. Most of us have tricks of writing names in any but a distinct fashion; and although the Post-office persistently reminds us, on the forms given to us to write our telegrams on, that the writing should be plain, this advice, like most other advice, is but too often neglected. Hence, many telegrams get altogether astray, sometimes to the not slight discomfiture of those into whose hands they fall, and who, unwitting that any error has been made, forthwith act upon them. It is related that a woman residing in some small street in Manchester once received what appeared to be a summons from her husband to come up to him in London. Very much alarmed, she at once started. On her way she got into conversation with another woman who was in the same carriage, and who she found was also going up to see her husband, who was in London ill. This woman had been expecting to receive a telegram from her husband, and, not hearing, had grown anxious and had finally set off without the telegram. Further parley revealed the fact that their names were the same; that their husbands' names were the same; that they both lived in the same quarter in Manchester; and it finally transpired that the telegram which had been delivered to the first woman was the very one which the second had been waiting for—the error in delivery having been caused by some such mistake as "Hamilton street" for "Henrietta street"—a mistake very likely attributable to want of distinctness in the writing. Another curious case of coincidence of which we have heard was that of a telegram addressed, "John Stillingwise, Brookdean, nr. Kirkby Lonsdale," from Robert Stillingwise, his brother, begging him to come at once to him at a hotel, which he indicated, in Leeds. The address "Brookdean" was in some way altered, and the telegram was delivered to another John Stillingwise, living somewhere in the neighborhood of Kirkby Lonsdale. This unfortunate man, who had not heard anything of his brother Robert for some twenty years, at once started off in stormy, wintry weather, reached Leeds in the evening, and was told by the landlord that he could not see his brother that night, as he was very far from well, and had gone to bed. The next morning, he was ushered into Robert Stillingwise's room, expecting to see his long-lost brother, when, to his extreme astonishment and disgust, he found himself confronted by an utter stranger!—Blackwood's Magazine.

Republican Simplicity.

One fact strikes the thoughtful reader of Revolutionary times, that, while there was among our forefathers a love of liberty deep enough to induce them to sacrifice life for it, we in this day understand practical democracy better than they. If President Garfield, or the members of his Cabinet, were to show one-tenth part of the assumption of superiority then made by the ruling class, the whole nation would be outraged.

The dress and manners of the republican court were simple, but it was a court. The people, used to look up to royalty, transferred much of the same homage to the President and "Lady Washington;" they followed his carriage in crowds, as the English do that of the Queen to-day, and stood uncovered and reverent as he stepped out, stately in velvet and lace, cocked hat and dress sword. Theoretically, they were all freemen on a level; practically, there yawned a wide gulf between the ruling class and the tradesman and laborer.

Mrs. Washington, finding a grease spot on the drawing-room paper, angrily accuses pretty Nelly Custis with having "had a call from one of those dirty commoners." Chief Justice McKean, in his robes of office, swoops down into a raging mob, and cows them by the sheer terror of his presence.

Negroes, laborers, tradesmen and rulers have learned to stand comfortably on a level since those early days, and wear their robes of equality easily.—Youth's Companion.

What Mamma Said.

The young woman who, with her lover and little niece, sat in the shadow of the curtain while the company was in the room adjoining, had a good deal of presence of mind when the niece said very loud, "Kiss me, too, Aunt Ethel." "You should say kiss me twice, or kiss me two times, not two," said Aunt Ethel, calmly. It is to be hoped that the well-known English "beauty lady" was equal to the occasion, also, when an elderly and eminently respectable gentleman made an afternoon call, and, as elderly gentlemen often do, he took the child and kissed her. "You must not do that," said the child, struggling, "I am a respectable married woman!" "What do you mean, my dear?" asked the astonished visitor. "Oh, that's what mamma always says when the gentlemen kiss her!" replied the artless infant.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC
Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.
Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

ALL stimulants, even tea and coffee, act upon the system as poison, and consequently are injurious.

FOR children, a nearly infallible peptic corrective is a fast-day passed in cheerful out-door exercise.

DIGESTION requires leisure. Never eat until you can be sure of leisure for digestion. After rest then "give an hour exercise to every pound of food.

POISON from bees, hornets, spider bites etc., is instantly arrested by the application of equal parts of common salt and bi-carbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the place bitten or stung.

PERHAPS the best and at the same time the easiest way to remove a wart is by rubbing the wart morning and night, or as often as convenient, until a sufficient degree of warmth is produced. We have never known a wart so obstinate that it would not disappear with the above treatment in a week or two at the latest.

FOR neuralgia in the face and other acute suffering elsewhere the following remedy has been tried with good effect: Cut a thick slice of bread across the loaf—fresh bread is best. Soak one side for a minute in boiling water, and rapidly sprinkle cayenne pepper over the hot side. Apply, while still smoking hot, to the painful surface. The bread retains the heat long enough for the cayenne to begin to act, and cayenne does not affect delicate skins as mustard does. It acts as a rubefacient, but not a blister. Another excellent remedy for congestion from cold is to apply a poultice of flaxseed meal and cayenne pepper. By keeping a bit of oil silk or the outside of the poultice-cloth it will retain both heat and moisture for a long time.

INGROWING toe-nails are caused by the improper manner of cutting the nail (generally of the great toe), and then wearing a short, badly-made shoe. The nail, beginning to grow too long and rather wide at the corners, is trimmed around the corner, which gives temporary relief. But it then begins to grow wider in the side where it was cut off, and, as the shoe presses the flesh against the corner, the nail cuts more and more into the raw flesh, which becomes exceedingly tender and irritable. If this state continues long the toe becomes more and more painful and ulcerated, and proud flesh sprouts up from the sorest points. Walking greatly increases the suffering till positive rest becomes indispensable. To treat ingrowing toe-nails, proceed as follows: Begin the effort at cure by simple application to the tender part of a small quantity of chloride of iron. It is found in the drug stores in a liquid form, though sometimes in powder. There is immediately a moderate sensation of pain or burning. In a few minutes the tender surface is felt to be dried up, tanned or mummified, and it ceases to be painful. The patient who could not put his foot to the floor now finds that he can walk without pain. By permitting the hardened, wood-like flesh to remain two or three weeks, it can easily be removed by soaking the foot in warm water. If thereafter the nails be cut no more around the corners or sides, but always cut in across the front end, they in future grow forward, and by wearing shoes of a reasonably-good size and shape all future trouble will be avoided.

Immigrants.

It has been estimated that the average sum possessed by each immigrant when he lands on our shores is somewhere about $60. The largest sum of money are brought over by men over 50 years old, and represent the saving of a lifetime, carried here for investment. The people who can best be relied upon to reduce the general average of capital introduced by immigrants are the Slavonians and Polanders. A great many of them have to be helped with small sums to get them away to places in the West where they wish to settle. The Hollanders, on the other hand, frugal, industrious and clean, come pretty well provided with money, as a rule, and are, apart from considerations of personal beauty, among the pleasantest to look at. One of the most curious distinctive peculiarities of the costume of their women is a strange sort of helmet, made of brass, silver or gold, according to the wealth of the wearer, filagree work or exquisitely chased—a thin sheet of metal, closely fitting the head, and worn under a snowy linen cap. On each side the thing comes down on the temples in a sort of metallic curl. They all wear wooden shoes, and it is really amusing to see the children, even little toddles just beginning to walk, clattering about easily and securely, in the clumsy sabots. Of all immigrants the Germans are least demonstrative in meeting their friends. Hearty hand shakings, sometimes a solemnly administered kiss on the cheek, and an explosive "So!" or a formal "Wie gaetes?" are about all they generally indulge in. But that their hearts are as warm and their affection as deeply stirred as any other person's may easily be read in their tear-moistened eyes and the happy smiles that light up their countenances. The Russians are great kissers. The Italians greet with noisy laughter, kisses, and irrepressible chatter. But of all the wild welcomings, those of the Irish are the most vigorous. Shouts, embraces, ejaculations of "Glory be to God!" "The saints be with us," "Alannah," and the like, make the rafters ring. In cases where children living and prospering have sent for parents to join them, the greetings are even more wildly enthusiastic.—New York Herald.

The Bedroom.

The room in which the enfeebled person has been sitting before going to bed has been warmed probably up to summer heat; a light meal has been taken before retiring to rest, and then the bedroom is entered. The bedroom perchance has no fire in it, or if a fire be lighted provision is not made to keep it alight for more than an hour or two, the result being that in the early part of the morning, from 3 to 4 o'clock, when the temperature of the air in all parts is lowest, the glow from the fire or stove which should warm the room has ceased, and the room is cold to a great degree. In country-houses the water will often be found frozen in the hand-basins or ewers under these conditions. Meanwhile the sleeper lies unconscious of the great change that is taking place in the air around him. Slowly and surely there is a decline of the temperature to the extent, it may be, of 30 or 40 deg. of the Fahrenheit scale; and, although he may be fairly covered with bedclothes, he is receiving into his lungs this cold air, by which the circulation through the lungs is materially modified. The condition of the body itself is at this very time unfavorable for meeting any emergency. In the period between midnight and 6 in the morning the animal vital processes are at their lowest ebb. It is in these times that those who are enfeebled from any cause most frequently die. We physicians often consider the houses as critical, and forewarn anxious friends in respect to them. From time immemorial those who have been accustomed to wait and attend to the sick have noted these hours most anxiously, so that they have been called by one of our old writers "the hours of fate." In this space of time the influence of the life-giving sun has been longest withdrawn from man, and the hearts that are even the strongest beat then with subdued tone. Sleep is heaviest, and death is nearest to us all in "the hours of fate." The feeble, therefore, are more exposed to danger during this period of time, and they are most exposed to one particular danger, that of congestion of the lungs, for it is the bronchial surface of the lungs that is most exposed to the action of the chilled air, and in the aged that exposure is hazardous.

How to Dress the Children.

The capacity of our ancestors to accommodate themselves to every climate depended not only on their physiological faculty of adaptation, but also on their skill in protecting themselves by artificial means from the inclemency of the higher latitudes. Houses and clothes are a blessing if they answer this purpose by a close imitation of nature's own plan in sheltering her children from atmospheric vicissitudes, but in degree as they deviate from that plan their hygienic disadvantages balance, or even outweigh, the gain in other respects. A swallow's nest protects her brood from cold and rain without debarring them from the fresh air; a human domicile, too, should combine comfort with the advantage of perfect ventilation, and our clothes, like the fur of a squirrel or the feather-mantle of a hawk, should keep us warm and dry without interfering with the cutaneous excretions and the free movement of our limbs.

Measured by these standards, the winter dress of an American schoolboy is nearly the best, the summer dress of the average American, French, and German nursling about the worst that could be devised. At an age when the rapid development of the whole organism requires the utmost freedom of movement, our children are kept in the fetters of garments that check the activity of the body in every way; swaddling-clothes, undershirts, overshirts, neck-wrappers, trailing gowns, garnitures, flounces and shawls reduce the helpless homunculus to a bundle of dry goods, unable to move or turn, incapable of relieving or intimating its uneasiness in any way save by the use of its squealing apparatus, and consequently squealing violently from morning till night. Outdoors, in the baby carriage, "cold draughts" have to be guarded against, and a load of extra wrappers completely counteract the benefit of the fresh air; faint with nausea and suffocating heat, the little dummy lies motionless on its back, resplendent in its white surplice, a fit candidate for the honors of a life whose every movement of a natural impulse will be suppressed as a revival of barbarism, and an insurrection against the statutes of an orthodox community. Hence, in a great degree, the disproportionate mortality in all northern countries of Christendom among infants under 2 years. In Spanish America, where infantile diseases are as rare as in Hindoostan, babies of all classes and sizes toddle about naked, nearly the year round; and the Indians of the Tamaulipas, between Tampico and Matamoras, raise an astonishing number of brown bantlings who are never troubled with clothes till they are big enough to carry garden-stuff to the city, where the police enforces the apron regulation.—Popular Science Monthly for June.

WITH an average price per annum of $7.33, and an aggregate daily circulation of 3,581,187, the people of the United States appear to pay out annually the sum of $26,250,100.71 for their daily newspapers. These totals are subject to certain obvious qualifications. Every newspaper has a free list, more or less large, the chief item of which is in its exchanges. Allowance must also be made for a small percentage of papers printed regularly, but not sold or circulated and including tear and waste. On the other hand, and especially in the large cities, a considerable per cent. of the total circulation is disposed of by the single copy at the retail price. While the average cost to the annual subscriber is 2¼ cents per copy, the average retail price per copy for the country is nearly 4¼ cents, the largest average for a State being Nevada, where it is twelve cents, and the lowest in Delaware, where it is 1¼ cents per copy. It is probable that the added cost of the papers sold at retail is quite sufficient to offset the deductions which are to be made in the total cost given on account of the causes enumerated. In the census year the number of daily papers throughout the United States was 962—morning, 436; evening, 526. Of this number New York has 115, Pennsylvania 98, Illinois 73, California 54, Missouri 42, Indiana 40, Massachusetts 35, Texas 32 and Virginia 21, and so on, down to 3 in West Virginia. During the year 114 were established and 86 suspended. The average circulation was 2,800, and the aggregate circulation 3,581,187. In the same year there were 682 weeklies and 138 Sunday papers running.

Mozart.

A great many curious anecdotes are told of this wonderful composer. Among others related by his biographer, it is said that his charity was once appealed to in the street by an old acquaintance who had seen better days. Mozart put his hand into his pocket, but found nothing there; the discovery was embarrassing and painful under such circumstances, but immediately an idea occurred to that great genius; he requested the man to wait—stepped into a coffee-room, and there instantly composed a minuet, folded up the paper and gave it to the applicant, recommending him to take it to a music-dealer in the city, who, when he saw the contents, would give him something. The man received 5 louis d'ors. It is needless to observe that the minuet is considered a masterpiece, it being the production of an artist who composed nothing but masterpieces; but it is more striking as it displays his musical originality and learning.

CHICAGO NOTES.

STRIKES.

There has been an epidemic of strikes in Chicago this spring. First, the strike of the car drivers and conductors of the West Side Street Railway Company, which was peaceable, orderly and successful, because their claim was just and was sustained by the moral sentiment of the whole community. Then there have been numerous strikes by the various trades, which have generally resulted in an increase of from 10 to 15 per cent. of wages. There have been strikes, too, of landlords, merchants and manufacturers to raise the price of rents and goods, and an excessive increase in the cost of building which has discouraged builders and been injurious to both employers and employes. But the most embarrassing and far-reaching strike has been the strike of the switchmen who make up the trains and transfer freight-cars on the different railroads which center in Chicago, on account of which hundreds of thousands of tons of freight have been embargoed, delayed in transit, and delayed in shipping and delivery, resulting in great inconvenience and loss to merchants and business members and elsewhere. Newspaper offices had car-loads of paper in the suburbs which they could not get, and were obliged to buy and use inferior paper till the blockade was raised. There ought to be mutual agreement between employers and employed, but the greed of corporations is so strong that they seldom raise the wages of their workmen till they are compelled to by their united protest and their refusal to work at their old wages. We do not moralize on the situation. We only state the facts.

But, notwithstanding these serious drawbacks, the tide of Chicago business rolls on, with ever-increasing volume, and was never so great and imposing as now. We note a few samples of leading houses.

JONES AND LAUGHLIN (American Iron Works), The largest manufacturers of bar iron in America, make most of the goods they sell—iron, nails, spikes, cold rolled shafting, T rails, bolts, chains, etc. The Chicago branch, of which Mr. J. M. Larimer is manager, is a vigorous plant, 25 years old, which has outgrown the original stock, and last year built a mammoth warehouse on its premises, 150 feet on Lake by 230 feet on Canal street, connected by railway with the Pittsburgh factory, giving unequaled facilities for handling their goods by car loads with the greatest economy and dispatch. For financial strength, extent of business and ability to meet the wants of the trade, it is confessedly the leading iron house of the West.

HIBBARD, SPENCER AND CO., Lake and Wabash, Hardware, cutlery, tinplate, fence-wire, etc., stand at the head of the line, like Saul among the prophets. Have been a land-mark in Chicago twenty-five years, and sell more goods than any similar house in the West.

GAGE BROS. AND CO.,

The leading Chicago millinery house, the famous hat and bonnet-frame makers, the only Western manufacturers of corsets, keep white goods, notions, and all ladies' apparel except shoes. Their force imitates the speed of lightning calculators in doing their immense business, working with a hearty good will, because this was the pioneer house in giving their employes a half holiday during the summer season.

J. A. FAY AND CO., 207-9 LAKE ST.

Wood-working machinery and machine tools. Mr. J. A. Roche, manager of the Chicago house, a practical machinist, has a peculiar aptitude for the business. He has made this the leading house of its kind in the West, increasing its trade, so that its Cincinnati factory, employing from 300 to 400 hands, can not supply its customers.

In the Matter of Stockings.

The United States Supreme Court has rendered a decision of considerable importance involving the customs duties on woolen stockings. The practice of weighing stockings and charging for them by the pound, as they do sausage, has long been repulsive to the refined sensibilities of the æsthetic portion of the people, and the Supreme Court has struck a popular chord in holding that the pound charge is illegal and that stockings shall be admitted at the duty of thirty-five per cent. ad valorem only. The ground of the decision is that stockings are in a sense works of art, and that it has been the purpose of the legislation on tariff to encourage art by admitting its productions at the lowest rate of duty. Recently the same Court decided that a plain porcelain plate is dutiable at the rate of fifty per cent., while a plate of the same material on which a picture has been painted shall be admitted at the rate of ten per cent. Consistency, therefore, demanded that the stocking, which is a work of art, should pay a less rate of duty than a man's wool hat. The Court states that its members have observed that stockings are elaborately embroidered in colors, ornamented with flowers and stripes, arranged in a manner truly artistic. Where the elderly gentlemen of the Bench observed these things is not stated, but as the windows of the Court-room overlook the back yard of a Treasury clerk's boarding house it is presumed they got their information from the appearance of the clothes-line on wash-days. However that may be, the fact of the artistic ornamentation of stockings is clearly affirmed. The Court further states that because of the pound duty on stockings the fashion of wearing long stockings has been threatened; that a lady correspondent in New York chronicles the arrival of an importation of stockings for ladies' wear which are not longer than the men's wear. There is no eight-to-seven business about this decision. The justices may divide on such minor questions as the election of a President, but they are solid in regarding stockings as works of art entitled to whatever encouragement a low rate of duty can give.—Milwaukee (Wis.) Republican.

An Exhilarating Drink.

Great authors have loved the coffee cup; Voltaire wrote pungent prose under its influence, and Schiller bright verse; Mozart composed light music, and we have heard that Rubenstein loves the delicate perfume during his weird studies

TO WASH CLOTHES WITHOUT FADING.—Wash and peel Irish potatoes and then grate them in cold water. Saturate the articles to be washed in this potato water and they can then be washed with soap without any running of the color. This will set the colors in carpets if oil or grease is to be taken out and the colors are apt to run. This will set the color in figured black muslin, colored merinos, stockings, ribbons and other silk goods. Often the potato water cleanses sufficiently without the use of soap. In woolen goods it is necessary to strain the water, else the particles will adhere; but this is not necessary in goods from which they can be well shaken.

Self-Luminous Photographs.

Self-luminous photographs are at the present moment, according to the Photographic News, attracting much public attention in Vienna. When these are examined by daylight they look like ordinary paper photographs; but in the dark they are beautifully phosphorescent in the high lights, have a more or less feeble glow in the half-tones, and in the deep shadows possess no luminosity. The preparation of these self-luminous photographs is very simple. A silver print on albumen paper, or collotype, is rendered transparent by brushing over it a mixture of equal volumes of castor oil and oil of turpentine. The superfluous oil is removed by means of cotton-wood or a linen rag, and the phosphorescent paint is then put on. The paper thus prepared is then dried, and afterward mounted with its reverse side on cardboard. So soon as it has been exposed to the daylight, and the light penetrates through the transparent or semi-transparents parts, the phosphorescence of the luminous paint underneath is excited, and in the dark the image is seen with all its gradations; brilliant pictures, and moonlight landscapes, give especially good results. These self-luminous photographs were first introduced to the Vienna public at a ball given by the chemical students of the Technical high school on the 3d of March last. The ladies' ball programmes were decorated with a self-luminous picture representing an alchemist at work in a laboratory.

EILERT'S EXTRACT OF TAR AND WILD CHERRY has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. The Ram at Church.

Mollie had a little ram, fleece black as rubber shoe, and every place that Mollie went, he emigrated too.

He went with her to church one day—the folks hi-la-rious grew, to see him walk de-murely into Deacon Allen's pew.

The worthy deacon quickly let his angry passions rise, and gave it an unchristian kick between the sad brown eyes.

This landed rammy in the aisle; the deacon followed fast, and raised his foot again, but ah! that first kick was his last!

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back about a rod 'tis said, and ere the deacon could retreat, it stood him on his head.

The congregation then arose and went for that ere sheep, but several well-directed butts just piled them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door, with curses long and loud, while rammy struck the hindmost man and shot him through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness would subdue the fiercest beast—"Ah!" then he said, "I'll try that game on you."

And so he kindly, gently called, "Come rammy, rammy, ram; to see the folks abuse you so, I grieved and sorry am."

With kind and gentle words he came from that tall pulpit down, saying "rammy, rammy, ram; ram rammy, rammy, ram—best sheep in town."

The ram looked meek, and on he came, with "rammy, rammy, ram; the nice pretty ram."

The ram quite dropped its humble air, and rose from off its feet, and when the parson lit, he lay beneath the hindmost seat.

As he shot out the open door, and closed it with a slam, he named a California town, I think 'twas "Yuba-Dam!"

Story About John B. Gough.

John B. Gough, who has faced over eight thousand audiences, acknowledges that on one occasion, and one only, he encountered embarrassment he could not overcome. It was his own fault, he says, and proved a sharp lesson he never forgot. In his own words:

"I was engaged to address a large number of children in the afternoon, the meeting to be held on the lawn of the Baptist church in Providence, R. I. In the forenoon a friend met me and said:

'I have some first-rate cigars; will you have a few?'

'No, thank you.'

'Do take half-dozen.'

'I have no where to put them.'

'You can put half a dozen in your pocket.'

I wore a cap in those days, and I put the cigars into it, and at the appointed time I went to the meeting I ascended the platform and faced an audience of more than two thousand children. As it was out-of-doors, I kept my cap on for fear of taking cold, and I forgot all about the cigars. Towards the close of my speech, I became more earnest, and, after warning the boys of bad company, bad habits and the saloon, I said:

'Now, boys, let us give three rousing cheers for temperance and for cold water. Now then, three cheers. Hurrah!'

And, taking off my cap, I waived it most furiously, when away went the cigars right into the midst of the audience. The remaining cheers were very faint, and were nearly drowned in the laughter of the crowd. I was mortified and ashamed, and should have been relieved could I have sunk through the platform out of sight. My feelings were still more aggravated by a boy coming up the steps of the platform with one of those dreadful cigars, saying: 'Here's one of your cigars, Mr. Gough.'

Though I never afterward put cigars in my cap or hat on going to a meeting, I am ashamed to say it was some time after that before I gave up cigars altogether.

Haunted Me.

A workingman says: "Debt, poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost."—Christian Advocate. 24-2w.

Why Wear Plasters?

They may relieve, but they can't cure that lame back, for the kidneys are the trouble, and you want a remedy to act directly on their secretions, to purify and restore their healthy condition. Kidney-Wort has that specific action, and at the same time it regulates the bowels perfectly. Don't wait to get sick, but get a package to-day, and cure yourself. Either liquid or dry for sale at the druggists.—Binghamton Republican.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

Volume 11. AUBURN, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, JUNE 23, 1881. Number 25.

AN ADDRESS

Delivered at Auburn, Ind., June 16, 1881, at the Fourth Annual Reunion of Pioneer Association of DeKalb County.

BY W. H. DILLS.

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN AND MEMBERS OF THE PIONEER ASSOCIATION OF DEKALB COUNTY: Between thirty-five and forty years ago,—the period in which we recognize the people we designate "Old Settlers" first settled in northern Indiana—during that time when we met and became acquainted, that meeting was had and acquaintances made almost invariably, not as we meet to-day, under the beautiful trees set out and cultured by the hand of man for his profit, but it was beneath the towering forms and broad branches of the giant trees of the native forest, planted, nurtured and reared by the hand of God, for His divine purpose. Instead of enjoying the sweet perfume of domestic plants and flowers placed around us by hands of youth and innocence, we met amid the aroma of the wild flowers of the forest.

And also, instead of being enwrapped and encircled with the beautiful flag of our country; that same flag, with the same stripes, but with less stars then, waved far above and over beyond our vision and was the same protection and the same insignia of freedom and unity, unsullied and unblemished then as now.

Then we met by twos and threes, now by the thousand—a fitting and beautiful contrast of this country to-day and as it was then.

Robert Burns, the great Scottish bard, sang to the world, nearly one hundred years ago:

"Shall auld acquaintance be forgot
And never brought to min' ?
Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And days o' lang syne?

"We a' hae run about the braes
And pu'ed the gowans fine,
But we've wandered many a weary foot,
Sin' auld lang syne.

. . . .

"And here's a hand, my trusty fiere,
And gie's a hand o' thine;
And we'll take a right gued willie-waught
For auld lang syne."

Kindly recollections of the past, fond memories of early friends, associates and acquaintances are well worthy the song of the bard or poet, at all times and in all places. These feelings and sentiments spring up spontaneously in the human heart, and are closely allied to the tenderest chords that vibrate in the human breast. Naturally, and as I said, spontaneously, they flow from the almost hidden recesses of the heart and memory; next in succession are the sweet, yet sorrowful but enduring recollections of an adored mother. These sentiments and early memories of friends and associates, are of the kindlier feelings of our nature, and like those of filial and maternal love should be cherished and cultured. They make us all better men and women, the skies seem brighter, our future seems brighter, and our pathway through life is brighter. By cherishing and cultivating these memories we forget the sorrows and burdens of the day; we cast aside the dull, heavy cares of life; we look back and enjoy the bright side and pleasures of this life, and the dull, dark days and heavy clouds which at times seemed to surround and threaten us with destruction, leave no trace to embitter the soul and render life a failure. Those who do not cherish and cultivate these sentiments fail to realize the joys of living. They become sour and morose, live lives of melancholy, lives of disappointment, and not only hate others, but absolutely hate themselves. Instead of thinking and speaking well of early associates and surroundings, the disappointed man or woman is always speaking and thinking ill of the past and its memories; and their evil thinking and speaking is not confined to the past, but by their long course of meditation on the dark side of life, they are continually thinking and speaking illy of their present associates and surroundings. They do not enjoy the pleasures of this life, nor indeed can they—nor are they here today. They would not enjoy these exercises and the memories that will arise from associating with these bent forms and gray heads,—these forms and heads which have withstood the heat of at least thirty-five summers' sun and the cold of thirty-five freezing winters in this county. That class of whom I have spoken, who look upon the dark side of the picture of life, are not here to-day. They would not enjoy our society, nor would they add to our enjoyments. Let us remember them with kindness, and that they are entitled to our sympathies.

Before proceeding further, ladies and gentlemen, let me congratulate you upon this, our fourth reunion of the Pioneer Association of DeKalb County. Once more in the providence of God we have the blessed opportunity of looking into the the faces of and taking by the hand those who were in part at least, instrumental in bringing civilization and enlightenment into the deep and heavy forests which once covered the entire surface of this country. Look at it to-day, you of younger years in life and of residence in our midst, and contemplate what the scenery was during the twelve years following the first settlement of this county.

Again on this occasion we are glad to meet so many of those who in early life quitted the society of their childhood homes where they were surrounded by not only the necessities but also the luxuries of life, to find homes in a then absolute wilderness. Here you, my old friends, came more than a generation ago, with only your household gods and your own strong arms and determined will—with no cleared land to cultivate, no markets at which to purchase the necessaries of life, even if you had had the money to buy with, no roads, no school houses, no mills, no churches, and no society save the wild men and beasts of the forest.

It is sad, very, sad, my friends, however, to reflect that many of the noble souls who have heretofore attended our meetings, will not be present to-day or at any of our future meetings. Their bodies have returned to mother earth. Their work and toil and labor is past. They cleared away the heavy forests, they built for us homes, planted orchards, built school houses, churches, highways, bridges, raised their children and devised unto them honorable names, performed every duty toward their country and their race. They have passed away forever and we know them now only by the kindly remembrances that are placed upon the tablets of our memories.

I am sorry that I cannot give you the names of our members who who have died within the last year. Mr Rose, the biographer, complains very bitterly that he has not been furnished with the proper information from the local committeemen. This, my friends, is a derilection of our duty, that we so justly owe these old men and women who came here in early days, and who have done so much that it is almost criminal and sacrilegious that we make no mention of their good and worthy deeds. It is absolutely wrong that these brave heroes should thus die and be thus forgotten.

These persons to whom I have just called your attention, and you who are here to-day, members of this society, are heroes in the true sense of the term. Not military chieftains, nor those who from ambitions motives for place and power are overturning policies and dynasties, but they and you sought and determined to and did conquer and subdue a wilderness, to found a colony which to-day smiles with civilization and enterprise, peace and plenty, nurtured and fostered by your and their hands, and those who followed in the track which you and they had broken.

We can very well remember seeing these early settlers with their families—with their white-covered wagons, the wife or daughter driving, the father and boys following, and driving, with the aid of a dog, a cow or two, sometimes a few sheep,—all wending their way towards the setting sun or plunging into the forest, and hauling up or stopping upon a tract of land upon which not a tree had been cut, and where for ages the rays of the orb of day had not penetrated, amidst the chorus of the feathered songsters of the grove, and the silence of the night, disturbed only by the hootings of the owl, or the indescribable howlings of hungry wolves. There you, or the fathers of you who came in early times, halted their wagons, which contained all they had on earth, and there to-day you will find comfort, luxury and ease. Before reaching that final resting place, weeks and months had passed in reaching the goal—following Indian trails scarcely wide enough to admit of the passage of a wagon, no bridges, dangers to be encompassed on every side, the early settler was of necessity his own sentinel, and upon himself relied for protection and safety. The trails would sometimes seem to run out—come to an end. Sometimes they would divide and create doubt as to the course that should be pursued. He had no compass and could not tell the cardinal points, but by an examination of trees he could tell the north side of them by the heaviest growth of moss or bark, and thereby determine his course. When night came ere he reached his destination, by the side of the trail, where water and grass were sufficient, he would would build a fire—without the aid of matches—by the side of some huge log, and there prepare their meal, his wife and little one retiring to sleep in the wagon, and he wrapped in a blanket on the leaves under it, with his faithful dog on one side and his trusty rifle on the other, there seek repose and rest, with as much confidence of safety and exemption from injury as you did last evening upon your downy couches, within bolted doors.

After reaching his land, purchased of the government at $1.25 per acre, or from some "speculator" for two, three or four dollars per acre, the pioneer finds for a time that his neighbors are few and far between, like angel's visits. There he could not hear his neighbors' chickens crow, their dogs bark, or their dinner bell or horn. With difficulty he at last succeeds in building his rude little cabin and in clearing off a few acres, by cutting down all the trees eighteen inches or under in diameter, and girdling all the others, which will give him a short supply of corn and vegetables. As for meats, he has none, except as he depends upon the chances of taking game from the forest, and then eat it, very often, without even salt or bread.

The privations of the early settlers were great, but often their perils were still greater. Diseases, indigeneous to a new country, of which he had previously no knowledge or experience. Malarial, generally, in their character, were certain to overtake him and his family. The massive foliage of the giant trees through which the sun scarcely penetrated, and the black soil vegetation, and the decayed vegetable matter everywhere abounding, generated vast volumes and columns of miasma. No physician or drug store, probably, within twenty miles, himself and family for months racked almost to death with the shakes, or scorched with raging fevers. Until acclimated by a residence of from two to five years and sometimes longer, the early settler was yearly visited with attacks of fever and ague, and felt thankful, indeed, if in the fall seasons he did not have an attack of bilious or intermittent fever. Snake bites, broken or cut limbs, and rheumatism from his frequent exposure, were of frequent occurrence, and no medical aid at hand. Indeed the hearts of these men and women were brave. A man may stand unmoved at the mouth of a cannon, yet the pitiful moans of a sick wife, the delirious tossing and crying of his children with consuming fevers, without medicine or a doctor, or even sympathizing friends or neighbors within miles would no doubt draw a tear that would rush down the sunburned face and would fill his very soul with the deepest sorrow and solicitude. So, too, it would be, if it were possible, tenfold more sorrowful to the wife should the husband and protector be stricken down. Even in health their privations seem almost incredible to us. Lumber was not to be had at any price; mills distant, and what roads there were, were almost impassable. A journey of weeks sometimes, leaving the wife and children, was often necessary to obtain the necessities of life. Families were almost driven to the verge of starvation, living for weeks on potatoes, wheat bran, and I have heard, on beech bark and milk. The private history of the sufferings, privations and the heroic endurance of many families in early times in this country has not, nor will it ever be written. Many, nearly all of those who have suffered and endured as I have stated, have gone where the weary are at rest, and no land to clear, no cabins to raise, no sufferings nor solicitude—the grave—has put its seal on their history. Peace be to their ashes.

The same bard from whom I have quoted, again sung, long years ago:

"John Anderson my jo, John,
When we were first acquent
Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonnie brow was brent;
But now your brow is beld, John,
Your locks are like the snaw;
But blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
We climbed the hill the gither;
And monie a canty day, John,
We've had wi' ane anither;
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand in hand we'll go:
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson my jo.

All who belong to our association are at least thirty-five and a half years old, all at least are in the prime of life, or are tottering down the hill to sleep, as all must sleep "thegither" at the foot. When first we met many years ago, our locks and brows were not gray and "beld," and although we may differ in politics and religion, and many other things of a secondary or ephemeral character, yet down the hill we will go, hand in hand "thegither."

In early days we asked not whether the newcomer was a Whig or Democrat, Jew or Gentile, Methodist or Baptist, rich or poor; all we wanted to know was, is he a neighbor and a man? These inquiries as to a man's religious or political opinions were not thought of. Was he a good fellow, truthful, honest and charitable? If he had not these qualities he did not stay long enough in our midst to become an old settler. Those who did not come up to that standard either returned to their old homes or sought other localities long years ago.

When we now look back and review the lives of the pioneers, criticise their character in view of their surroundings, and with the aid of now experienced judgments, although we may detect errors in their lives, yet is there not something over and above these short-comings that we admire? Is there a man or a woman here today who can stand up and truthfully say aught against the brave men and women who sought and subdued this wilderness, which we may now revel in and enjoy so well? Look around you and recall their manly and their noble deeds, and hardened and uncharitable will be the heart that will tarnish their character or speak illy of their ashes. It took bold and brave men and women to subdue this wilderness, to blaze out the road and bring into it civilization and enlightment, and it is the bold and brave men and women who have strong points of character. They are those too, who have sternness, fortitude, and determination, and with that class you will always find, almost to overflowing, veins of kindness, sympathy and charity. That is the true secret for our respect and admiration for these old settlers. They were brave, rough and nearly always uncouth in outward appearance, yet with a heart all aglow with kindness and sympathy. Did you ever hear of one of those early settlers, even if his cabin only had but one room, or his last morsel of corn meal had been baked, refuse the hospitalities of his humble home to a man or a family who entered his door? Did you, in those times know of any who would refuse to attend a house-raising or log rolling for his neighbor, although it would be two, four, six or eight miles distant? Or if a neighbor was sick or disabled from any cause, refuse to plant his corn, harvest his crops, or any other act of similar character? And after these acts of kindness had been performed, if the sick or disabled neighbor would offer to pay them for their labor, they would feel insulted.

It is the brave hearts and generous souls that first inhabit our new countries. The timid, cowardly, and selfish remain in luxury and ease at the old homestead. These are the reasons that we to-day admire and respect the names and character of the pioneers, and those are the reasons that we to-day meet to recall their many virtues and do honor to their noble deeds.

At the risk of wearying you, and I know you would be glad to listen to me an hour, I will name a few of those veterans who were the foremost men of the county in 1845, but who have gone to their long homes. Let us speak reverently of them, too. Their faults were human, but their good qualities and manly virtues will commend them to our consideration. I will give them by townships in the usual order, leaving out Keyser, which was not then formed:

BUTLER.

Those still living I do not mention. They, or at least a great many of them, are here to-day to speak for themselves. The men I have named were actively identified with the material interests of our county; their houses were ever the center of a liberal hospitality, and many brought to bear upon the difficulties and privations of pioneer life more than ordinary good judgment and natural ability. Many of them were thoroughly well educated and had the energy and perseverance so highly necessary to a pioneer. Many led lives of devout christianity and the Sunday schools and churches they established are all over our county as lasting monuments to their memories and the foundations of our moral and social society to day.

The men whom I have named, who came here prior to January 1st 1846, came before the period of railroads, before canals were dug, and many before the roads were cut or bridges built. Just think of it, that thirty-five years ago the residents of our county had never seen a railroad car, and we have over a hundred miles of railroad track in the county to-day, and two hundred trains daily through it. There was not then in the county a steam engine; there was not one cook-stove in a dozen families. What kind of dinner do you suppose the cooks of to-day would get up without a cook-stove? They had never even heard of kerosene oil for illuminating purposes. Matches—do you recollect the name, Lucifer matches, were hard to obtain, and only a few could afford the luxury. Why, the old-fashioned grain cradle, now out of use, was just then introduced. We had no such reapers and mowers and machinery for threshing and agricultural purposes that is now stacked on almost every forty-acre farm in the county. I recollect very distinctly the first threshing machine. It indeed was a beauty. It did not even separate the grain from the chaff and straw. It was brought into the county by John Zimmerman, who then resided on the Houk farm, in Jackson township. He was the father of Mr. Elias Zimmerman, of this place. In fact it would now be a novelty, and as it did then, would now draw crowds when set to work; and to use a homely expression, it was the "biggest thing out." Instead of being several weeks in flailing, tramping and winnowing out a hundred bushels of wheat, the farmer with that threshing machine could thrash out that quantity in a day, and then take his time to run it through the fanning mill. And when he had the wheat ready for market, then he would have to take about three days to carry a load of twenty-five or thirty bushels to Fort Wayne and sell it for fifty or sixty cents a bushel. This of course was after they had been here ten or twelve years. My friends, just think that to-day there is not a farmer in the county but who can market from his farm a load of forty bushels in an hour and a half's time in some railroad elevator. Corn had a value then proportioned to wheat, the same as now. Pork then ranged at $1.50 to $2.00 per hundred pounds.

Let us look at our county as it was in 1845 from another view:

Total amount of taxes assessed for all purposes that year	$8,330
Tax duplicate in 1880	$118,000
Total value of all taxables in 1845	$539,000
Total value of all taxables in 1880	$6,600,000
County tax levied in 1845	$1,331
County taxes in 1880, nearly	$40,000
No. of polls in 1846	731
No. of votes in 1880	5,290

Concord township at that time was the most wealthy and populous in the county. It had of taxables - $67,000
This (Union) then had - - $55,000

Concord had the most polls—102; Wilmington and Franklin next, each having 87; Union had 79, Butler 78, Jackson 77.

In about two months it will be thirty-seven years since I was brought to this county by my parents, settling in Spencerville then, as I have shown, the most wealthy and populous part of the county. Having a grist and saw-mill, postoffice, stores, ashery and other insignia of a new town in a new country, Spencerville commanded the trade of a large territory. At those times we knew all the people who made their appearance in a town, and if we did not know their names, we soon found out by asking. Let us look at the citizens of Spencerville to-day. I have carefully thought of and looked for all I then knew so well, and to-day there are but two persons alive and still living in that town who lived there in 1844, they are 'Squire Barney and Dr. Emanuel. Their wives—and noble women they were—have long since been gathered to their rest.

Now let us go among the farmers of Concord township, and see if we can find some old, familiar faces who were on the same farms thirty-seven years ago. Of them who then owned and still reside on the same farms, I am able to find only eight men, Robert Culbertson, Sol. Woodcox, Henry Robinson, Jonathan Boyle, Samuel Wason, David Shull, John Shutt and Wm. Henderson. But there are some who still reside on the same farm as then, having succeeded their parents. I name some: John Widney, Erastus White, Jackson Moody, Daniel and David Butler, Mort. Milliman, Milas Rhodes and mother, Emilius Case and mother, and R. G. Coburn.

Now, my friends, let me change the scene. Let the curtain exhibit this village of Auburn in December, 1856—now nearly twenty-five years, when I located here. Upon inquiry you will find only ten families occupying the same homes as then, viz: Dr. Ford, Mrs. Leasure, Mrs. Mott, George Brandt, G. W. Stahl, Major Sprott, James Brinkerhoff Mrs. H. Jones, and Mrs. Houghton, upon whose grounds we are now assembled—ten in all. Besides those named, the following families still reside in town, as in December, 1856: S. W. Ralston, S. B. Ward, J. W. Case, Lewis Bowers, James and Hiram Griswold, Mrs. Puffenberger, Mrs. Stephen Latson, Geo. Wagoner, Mrs. C. S. Hare, and Mrs. W. A. Sawrey—11, in all 20 families. But of these twenty families, death has entered and carried away either a husband or wife in all but eight.

Let us go out on the streets and ramble among the business men and houses—about the mills, shops, and in the professional ranks, examine the faces of these active men and see if any are here to-day still engaged in the same business as twenty-five years ago. I look carefully and find but three. Not counting Dr. Ford, who has retired from active practice, I find James W. Case, then and now a mechanic; I see also G. W. Stahl still cutting out pants and cooking the same old goose he did of yore—laughing just as joyously but not so vigorously. The third, myself, an humble follower of Blackstone and Kent. Those of my profession where are they? Judge Mott, good old soul, who never by word or action intended a wrong, and his son, Sheridan, bright, brilliant and promising—father and son lie side by side and fill honored graves at their old homestead. T. R. Dickinson, though eccentric, yet abounding in enterprise and integrity; as good a neighbor and citizen as ever lived, is buried in Waterloo. His son Timothy, of many rare qualities, is now only a breathing corpse—dying a slow death of softening of the brain, induced by over mental and physicial labor. A. S. Blake is in Denver, Colorado. S. J. Staughton and S. W. Dickinson I believe are dead. James Brinkerhoff is, and has been an invalid for years, and out of practice. And last of all, Judge Morris, a name honored and spoken of with reverence by all old settlers, resides at Fort Wayne and now the peer if not the superior in legal lore, in varied and enlarged intellectual attainments, and in unsullied integrity of any of his distinguished associates upon our supreme bench. Indeed

"I feel like one who treads alone,
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled, whose garlands dead,
And all but me departed."

Twenty-five years ago we thought we had a "staving" nice town here. There was not a steam or flouring mill in it, not a wheel turned by steam power, not a bakery, meat shop, family grocery store nor even a millinery or barber shop here.

Of the young men then of our town, on whom devolved the responsibility of taking care of of the social affairs, I now recall Philip Fluke, then tanning leather, making money and gadding all over the country. Judge McClellan was shoving a pen in the auditor's office. Our present good-looking sheriff, Gust Leus, Amo Park, now of Kendallville, and Lewis Ochs, a brother of Isaac and Simon Ochs, were all clerks in dry-goods stores. The two Weaver boys, Eli and Enos, were running drug-stores, and sometimes horses, but always after the girls. Steve Ford, Whead Griswold and Tom Gross, who were born tired, were not permanently engaged at anything, but were ready to snap up any good offer that presented itself.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE attention of the treasury officials in New York has been called to the large amount of punched and mutilated coin in circulation, and an investigation has been resolved upon. One broker receives each week from country customers from $150 to $300 worth of clipped silver, which he sells at 2 per cent. discount. The mischief can be stopped by a law prohibiting the traffic except on the basis of weight.

MAINE papers state that Justice Clifford's physical health has improved very much, but that he has not recovered his mental vigor He occasionally goes to his office and engages in conversation, but his memory is defective, and he soon forgets with whom he is talking. ....The great Brooklyn bridge is a costly affair. Thus far nearly $13,000,000 have been expended on it, and it will take another year and some more millions of dollars to complete it.

AT Brooklyn, N. Y., a fire at Pierrepont & Co.'s stores consumed Nos. 4 and 5. One workman was burned to death, and another fatally injured by jumping from the burning building. The contents of the warehouses, consisting of oils, molasses, wool, plumbago, etc., were very valuable. Loss, $400,000.... Silas M. Waite, ex-President of the First National Bank of Brattleboro', Vt., pleaded guilty to making false returns to the Government under the National Banking act, and was sentenced to six years' imprisonment in the House of Correction....Eighteen furnaces in the Lehigh and Schuylkill valleys, Pa., have stopped operations on account of the low price of pig iron. More will follow unless prices improve within the next ten days.... E. P. Cutter & Co., of Boston, Mass., an old and leading iron firm, have been forced to suspend, owing to depression in the iron trade. Liabilities about $600,000. It is said they will be able to pay 75 per cent....At Newark, N. J., a machinist named Martin shot and killed his wife and mortally wounded his child, a 3-year-old girl.

MARTIN CORCORAN, a striking printer of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, armed himself with a billy and laid in wait for a "rat" printer named McCahill, who was employed with others in place of the strikers. He struck McCahill, as the latter passed about 2 o'clock in the morning, whereupon McCahill drew his revolver and fired two shots, one of which put an end to Corcoran's life.

THE WEST.

A MOST destructive hurricane swept over Dickinson county, Kan., in the vicinity of Salomon City. It swept over a tract six miles long and five miles wide, demolishing nearly everything in its path. The hail beat the corn and other crops into the ground. Some of the stones were ten inches in circumference. Six houses were torn into fragments, and, so far, seven persons have been killed. It is thought that other persons have perished also.

OFFICIAL reports as to the condition of the fall-wheat crop in Illinois, says the Chicago Tribune, are very far from satisfactory. In the central portion of the State, where nearly one-third of the wheat crop is grown, 44 per cent of the ground sown with fall wheat has been plowed up, and the remaining acreage will not yield more than 45 per cent. of an average. In the southern division of the State, where nearly two-thirds is grown, 16 per cent. of the wheat acreage has been plowed up, and the remaining acreage will hardly yield half the average. Complaints of chinch bugs, army worms, etc., are numerous, and on the whole the reports are exceedingly unfavorable and very discouraging.

THE villages of King City, Rosendale and Berlin, situated in Northwestern Missouri, were visited on Sunday night, the 12th inst., by a catastrophe of appalling dimensions. Early in the evening a cyclone swept down on the devoted villagers and their rural neighbors with resistless fury, and marked its pathway with desolation and death. Scarcely had the people begun to comprehend the calamity that had befallen them when a second cyclone appeared to complete whatever destruction the first had left undone. The resultant loss of property is placed at from $200,000 to $500,000, while the death list is large but not definite. A most destructive hurricane also swept through Central Iowa on the afternoon of the 13th, killing and maiming a number of persons, causing immense damage to the crops, killing cattle and poultry, and demolishing many residences and outbuildings. The number of human lives lost has not yet been definitely ascertained, but it will not be much if any less than twenty. The storm at some points was of tremendous force, and there was no withstanding it. The hail-stones which fell were of immense size, in some cases as large as goose-eggs, and caused great havoc among birds, rabbits and game of all kinds throughout the storm area....The vicinity of Wells, in Minnesota, suffered from a cyclonic visitation on the 12th inst. Houses, barns and fences were prostrated, and two or three people killed.

AS THE Chicago express train on the Wabash railroad, going north, passed through Raymond, Montgomery county, Ill., on the night of the 13th inst., it ran into a wagon containing seven persons, killing four of them outright, and more or less injuring the others. The wife of a respected farmer named Albert Creswell, her child and two orphan nephews were the victims.

CHIEF JUSTICE SENER, of the Supreme Court of Wyoming Territory, decided recently that the marriage of Lee Chin with a white woman, which took place at Denver, Col., was valid. Cheyenne is all "tore up" over the decision.

PETER LEMEN, of Detroit, in the belief that his stomach contained a living lizard, fretted himself to death, his weight having decreased from 200 pounds to sixty. An autopsy disclosed a fibrous tumor of the duodenum, and his career was closed by actual starvation.

THE particulars of the recent great tornadoes in Northeastern Kansas, Northwestern Missouri, and Central Iowa show that wherever the cyclones struck the earth the destruction of buildings, orchards, forests and growing crops was complete. Many persons were injured, but only a few killed, as far as can be ascertained. Scores of people lost their homes and all their property. The terrific force and destructive effects of these tornadoes were similar to those which desolated the Western and Southern localities of former years. ....Eight coal-heavers were drowned at Cincinnati by the overturning of a skiff in the middle of the Ohio river.

THE SOUTH.

TWO STAGES running between Alma and Fayetteville, Ark., were stopped by armed men, who robbed the passengers and the mail-bags....Isaiah Larkin, a Tennessee moonshiner, resisted arrest at the hands of his cousin, Deputy Marshal George Larkin, and was shot dead.

POLITICAL.

THE New York Legislature balloted twice for Senators on the 10th inst., with about the same result as the two preceding days. Gen. Spinola rose in the House and proposed that the $2,000 alleged bribe money be devoted to the support of impecunious members kept in involuntary servitude at the capital. The Bribery Investigating Committee examined Speaker Sharpe. He testified to receiving the $2,000 from Bradley, and he handed the sum to the Chairman of the committee. Armstrong, of Oneida county, testified that he had been offered money by Edwards, a lobbyist, to vote against Conkling.

THE State Supreme Court of New Hampshire has decided that the present Legislature is the proper body to elect United States Senator.

THERE were only 104 members of the Legislature in the joint convention at Albany on the 11th inst., and the ballot for Senators showed no changes of candidates worthy of note. Assemblyman Trimble, a New York lawyer, testified before the Bribery Committee that he had been offered money by a lobbyist named Edwards to change his vote from Platt to Depew.

THE balloting at Albany on the 13th inst. was of about the same monotonous nature as of the preceding days, and gave no indication of an early break of the dead-lock. The Bribery Investigating Committee examined and cross-examined Assemblyman Bradley at great length. He reiterated the story that Senator Sessions had tried to corrupt him, and detailed the circumstances.

ASSOCIATED PRESS telegram from Washington: "The Secretary of the National Greenback Committee says that the Greenback members of the next Congress will stand solidly together on all questions. He says nine members of the next House are pledged to meet in Greenback caucus and determine upon and carry out Greenback politics. These nine members counted upon are Ladd and Murch, of Maine; Bramm and Mosgrove, of Pennsylvania; Rife, Hazeltine, Burroughs and Fort, of Missouri, and Jones, of Texas."....In the Senatorial ballot at Albany, Conkling received 31 votes to 23 for Wheeler, and 50 for Jacobs. For the long term, Depew had 55 votes and Platt 26. In the bribery investigation, Senator Sessions admitted that in 1862 he was present in Albany as a lobbyist, and received money for urging the passage of several bills, getting $5,500 on a scheme to secure a site for the postoffice in New York, and acting as a lobbyist for six or seven years. Assemblyman Bradley went through a long cross-examination.... Ex-Senator Thurman, in a letter to his son, says that he cannot be a candidate for Governor of Ohio under any circumstances; that when he left the Senate he made up his mind to retire to private life; and that he has arrived at the age when a man should stop holding office.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD, says a Washington telegram, is strongly inclined to help Mahone in the Virginia campaign, but has informed Congressman Tucker that the Cabinet will decide the matter....The Pennsylvania Greenbackers held a State Convention at Pottsville, and nominated R. W. Jackson, of Mercer county, for State Treasurer.... The Greenback-Labor party of Ohio met in convention at Columbus and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, John Sietz, of Seneca; Lieutenant Governor, Charles Jenkins, of Mahoning; Supreme Judge, Joseph Watson, of Knox; Attorney General, E. M. Tuttle, of Lake; Treasurer, W. F. Lloyd, of Montgomery; member of Board of Public Works, H. L. Morrison, of Ashtabula.

THE ballot for Senator at Albany on the 15th inst. showed no change in the situation. The Bribery Investigating Committee finished with Senator Sessions and heard two or three new witnesses. Sessions maintained his version of the interviews with Bradley to the end. Assemblyman Young related his experience with the lobbyist Edwards, and the latter's attempt to bribe him. The most significant fact of the day was given by the President of the National Commercial Bank of Albany, who testified that on June 4 his bank cashed for Edwards a draft on New York, signed by A. D. Barber, for $2,000.

THE sixteenth ballot for Senators from New York gave Depew, for the long term, 54 votes, Kernan, 52, and Platt 27; while for the short term Jacobs polled 51 votes, Wheeler 36, and Conkling 32. The Central Committee of the anti-Conkling Republicans met and adopted resolutions declaring that, inasmuch as Depew had received the votes of a majority of the Republican members of the Legislature, it was the duty of all the Republican members who desire that the State shall be properly represented in the United States Senate to concentrate their votes on him, and thus throw the responsibility of defeating an election on the friends of the Senators who created a vacancy. In the bribery investigation, Orsino S. Jones was examined, and corroborated Bradley's evidence.

THE Iowa Democratic State Convention met at Des Moines June 16, 350 delegates being in attendance. Judge L. D. Kinne was nominated for Governor, Capt. J. M. Walker for Lieutenant Governor, Hon. H. B. Hendershott for Judge of the Supreme Court, and Prof. W. H. Butler for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES, in reply to expressions of fear that he may carry economy too far and thus cripple the postal service, says that there need be no fear whatever on this head.

THE Government expects to be able to prove that the star-route people plundered the treasury to the extent of $1,000,000. A great many special agents are investigating the Territorial routes, and the reports which have recently been received show extensive frauds....Commander Montgomery Sicard has been appointed Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department, vice Commodore Jeffers, who has resigned.....The Collectors of Internal Revenue have been informed that, owing to the appropriation of the current fiscal year being nearly exhausted, gaugers and storekeepers will only be paid to June 20 at present.

BOB INGERSOLL's mining strike is the sensation at Washington. It seems that last winter twenty-one undeveloped silver mines in New Mexico were purchased by Col. Ingersoll, Gen. Halbert E. Paine, Navy Paymaster Stevenson, Col. Grafton and C. P. Farrell, a brother-in-law of Ingersoll. Gillette, who developed the wonderful Comstock lode, was sent out to work the property, and he reports an assay of $20,000 per ton. Four of the mines have shown wonderful richness....J. A. Bentley resigned the Commissionership of Pensions, at the request of the President, and W. W. Dudley, of Indiana, was appointed to the vacancy. Judge McFarland, of Kansas, was given the Land-Office Commissionership.

PROF. RILEY, of the United States Entomological Commission, says the locusts now appearing in the West and South are of two distinct breeds; that one is the thirteen-year and the other is the seventeen-year locust, and this is the first time they have appeared in the same year since 1660. Prof. Riley says these locusts cannot do any damage except to young fruit-trees, in the limbs of which they deposit eggs. He says the locusts will suddenly disappear before long.... ACCORDING to the official statement, the recent fire in Quebec destroyed 642 houses, rendering homeless 1,211 families, comprising 6,028 individuals. Two-thirds of the families burned out were uninsured and therefore lost their all.

THE Department of Agriculture at Washington has issued the following crop report: Spring Wheat—The acreage shows a large decline since last year. In the area reported to the department, only 86 per cent. of that sown in 1880. The condition is, however, fully equal to that of last year at the same time. Winter Wheat—The condition is reported at an average for the whole country of only 76. The principal complaints are from Michigan, Indiana and Illinois, where, added to most unfavorable weather, there is great damage from chinch-bugs and the Hessian fly. California reports a very low condition, caused by cold weather and drought.

FOREIGN.

IRELAND continues in a disturbed state, and the authorities seem to be at their wits' ends. Rows and riots, shootings and scrimmages, prosecutions and persecutions continue with great frequency, and there does not seem to be any indication of the return of peace and quiet, and the inauguration of justice and fair play. Meanwhile Britain is alarmed about rumors of Fenian plots to blow up buildings and people, so that, while the Irish policeman is engaged in quelling riots, his English brothers are employed in ferreting out conspiracies and looking out for conspirators.... An American agent has been trying to engage Patti for a tour through this country, but has not succeeded, owing to the influence of Nicolini. Patti, through her friend, asked 2,000,000 francs for the tour, which the American considered too much.... Two Irishmen, named McKevett and Roberts, made a futile effort to blow up the Town Hall, Liverpool, England. They were arrested.

FRANCE is on the verge of another test of the earnestness and adhesiveness of the new republican spirit of that land. What is known as the scrutin de liste has brought on the present menace of a Governmental crisis. The influence of Gambetta was strong enough to carry this project through the Assembly, but the Senate, by the close vote of 148 to 144, has rejected it. The present practice in France, as in this country, is to elect members of the popular branch of Parliament by districts, or arrondissements as they are called there. Gambetta originated, and after a desperate struggle carried through the Chamber of Deputies, the scheme for electing the Deputies by departments, which is called the scrutin de liste. The difference between the two methods of election may be fairly illustrated by the American system. The present method of election in France—the scrutin d'arrondissement—corresponds to the prevailing method in the United States where the various districts elect Congressmen by separate votes. The method proposed by Gambetta—the scrutin de liste—is the same as if all the Congressmen in one of our States were to be elected on a general ticket by the majority vote of the State....Once more an American horse has captured one of the leading turf trophies in Europe, Mr. James R. Keene's Foxhall having won the Grand Prize of Paris, otherwise known as the French Derby. The stakes amounted to $35,000. Thus in the two greatest foreign contests—the English Derby and the French Grand Prize—in both of which were entered the cream of the European thoroughbreds, American horses have carried off the honors and the money.

THE Scrutin de Liste bill, for the enlargement of popular representation in the French National Assembly, which passed the lower house of that body recently, has been rejected by the upper house. It is a defeat for Gambetta, and the effect will be an exciting campaign on vital political issues between the Progressive party, led by Gambetta, and the Conservative Republicans, under President Grevy.... Her physicians having decided that Mrs. Edwin Booth's condition requires her immediate removal home, her husband has been obliged to cancel all his English engagements....An Italian exploring party is reported to have been murdered near Bailul, Egypt, and the Italian Government has telegraphed to Cairo demanding strict inquiry and the punishment of the murderers.

A LARGE number of peasants are emigrating from the Russian province of Tomsk to Siberia because of poverty. So great is the exodus that the ferry-boat on the Volga is taxed to the utmost in order to transport them across. Voluntary exile to Siberia is something new....Lorillard's horse Iroquois, which won the Derby, carried off the Prince of Wales stakes at Ascot. The victory of Iroquois seemed to please the Britons present.... The refusal of the Republican members of the French Chamber of Deputies to support the proposal for advancing the time for the dissolution of the chambers is regarded as a greater rebuff to Gambetta than the rejection of the Scrutin de Liste bill. The proposal was supported by only seventy members and was opposed by 250 members.

THE French Government intend to introduce a bill which will provide for an additional deputy to each of nine provincial arrondissements, and seven additional deputies to Parisian arrondissements which have a population exceeding 100,000....The Italian Chamber of Deputies rejected universal suffrage by a vote of 314 to 83. Female suffrage was only supported by its proposer, Signor Fabri. Signor Crispi's amendment to grant to all who can read and write was rejected by a vote of 220 to 106.... The Irish Land bill is making rapid progress in committee. Conservatives and Liberals are sinking mutual differences to push the measure, believing it will soothe the disaffected Irish nation....A Russian Socialist who escaped from Siberia has reached Switzerland. Only one other case of a political prisoner escaping from Siberia has ever been recorded....By a vote of 196 to 154, the House of Commons passed Sir Wilfrid Lawson's resolution to give legislative effect to local liquor option.

SWITZERLAND has given to other European nations an example of intelligent and consistent action in respect to American meat. After the French decree of prohibition the Swiss Government directed an inquiry to be made into the real facts in respect to trichiniasis and diseased meats from America. After mature consideration the Sanitary Commissioner reports, and the Federal Government officially declares, that no prohibition or compulsory inspection of American meat is justified or will be required in Switzerland.... The New Zealand steamer Tararua was recently lost on the coast, while bound for Melbourne, and 130 people drowned....The dynamite fiends have broken loose in France. An attempt was made to blow up the statue of Thiers at St. Germain with a box of gunpowder. The statue was only slightly injured.... Seven leading members of the English royal family went to Ascot on the 16th inst., to see Iroquois, an American horse, win the St. James Palace stakes.

BUSINESS FOR TWO.

An Entertaining Sketch of the Daring LeRoy.

Some time since, while writing prison sketches, our reporter found a prisoner in the House of Correction who, under the name of "Dandy Jim," was for a year or more a sharer in LeRoy's dangers and successes. The two planned and executed some of the boldest adventures, and their success in evading capture was something marvelous. In the fall of 1867 they stopped a coach in Arizona and robbed eight passengers. Pursuit was made by thirteen men, and the party came upon the road agents while they were seated on the ground dividing their plunder. A complete circle was formed around the pair, but with the arms captured from the stage coach they drove the men over half a mile and put them to rout.

In that same year, one day when the pair were riding along the highway about forty miles from Fort Smith, they were suddenly attacked by a force of about forty soldiers, herders, and ranchmen. Their horses went down at the first volley, but the two men, shooting right and left handed, produced such confusion that escape into the bushes was an easy matter. In this affair Dandy Jim got two bullets through his hat and a rake across the left shoulder, while LeRoy had a charm on his watch chain shot away and two bullet holes in his clothing.

A month later the pair rode into a ranch in the Indian Territory and asked for dinner. While at the table a posse of nearly twenty men surrounded the house and demanded the surrender of the men themselves. The house had but one room, lighted by one window, and entered by a single door. While Jim took the door LeRoy guarded the window. With a cup of coffee in one hand and a revolver in the other he would fire a shot and then take a sip, having no more fear than a man of stone. The fight lasted upwards of two hours, and ended by the posse retreating and giving the outlaws a clear road to escape.

In 1868 the two men planned the plunder of a Texas railroad train. Each was armed with two revolvers, and at 10 o'clock at night they built a fire on the track in an unfrequented spot. The calculation was that the train would come to a stop at sight of the fire, and while Jim mounted the engine and took care of the engineer and fireman LeRoy was to go through the passenger coaches. They knew it was a train carrying at least 250 passengers, with a probability of half the men being armed, but the one man had planned to take all the chances against him. The engineer saw the fire and suspected a trick, and instead of shutting off steam he put on more, and dashed the burning brands clear over the smokestack as he rushed his train out of danger. No fewer than five men, outside of this instance, have tackled such a job as train robbing, but these two were going through the whole business alone, and they might have reaped a rich harvest for all that is known to the contrary. Both LeRoy and Jim have stopped stages when alone, and made from five to eight persons get down and submit to robbery. The officers will have to be wide awake if they catch LeRoy again. He is a sure shot, cool and daring and has many friends to send him warning and keep him posted.

The Versatility of Widows.

Widows exhibit a pathetic helplessness at times combined with the versatile sympathy of a father confessor. They might often vie with the lawyers in experience of the secret working of mental machinery of human nature. For the widow has graduated in the tender emotions. She is, therefore, able to regard with disinterested friendlessness those attacked with the premonitory symptoms of the malady, from which she has, perhaps, long ago suffered herself, and to prescribe accordingly. In the novels Pyramus tells his passions to the moon, and Thisbe to her pillow. As a matter of fact, they usually pour forth their story to the sympathetic ear of the widow, whom as advertisements say, no household should be without. She possesses the experiences and authority which attach by right to the fogy, and all the airy enterprise of the skittish matron. Even the young bride hangs on her lips. At Christmas parties she is an infallible oracle, an incarnate ballroom guide, a living and breathing file of Myra's Journal. At the meet her pony carriage is mobbed by the men, while the women half enviously recognize the charm of crape. Strange to say, she disarms the critics of her own sex. She can sympathize with the misgivings of the callow debutante and guide her as she learns to go alone. She has known the domestic cares of the matron, and even for the veteran campaigner, whose arms have not yet secured the matrimonial laurel, she abounds in experiences which always sound new and often prove invaluable, for she is regarded, rightly or wrongly, as disinterested. But there are widows and widows. Addison said that in his experience "widows did not mourn the loss of husband, but for the want of one." In such cases the weeds—at a distance a flag of distress—often resolve themselves, on nearer acquaintance, into the defiant symbol of the roving privateer. It is not for want of warning that weak humanity falls a victim. Mr. Weller spoke with the feeling of a long-suffering experience in warning his son to "beware of widows." As the widow unattached may work infinite good as an angel of light, she may do still greater mischief in the opposite character. Her words have weight and her example authority which carry conviction to the hearts of those among whom she lives and moves.

Roses.

By standard or tree roses is meant a rose, usually a remontant, budded at the top of a brier four to eight feet high. They seem to be very attractive to our amateurs, large numbers being imported every year and sold at auction at very high prices. It is probably their unusual appearance that makes them popular with those who do not know that they are almost as unsuited to our climate as are bananas and pineapples, for it is very rarely that they give a second bloom. As a whole, these standard or tree roses may be regarded as utterly unsuited to our climate. If those who buy them at the sales this spring will be satisfied with one year's bloom as a return for the price, very well; for they can expect in ordinary culture but little more. But why try to cultivate these tree roses when pillar roses are readily grown and—to persons who do not seek for the odd and unusual—vastly more beautiful. Any vigorous rose, even the climbers, such as queen of the prairie, may be grown in this form, with vigorous pruning, but usually the remontants (hybrid perpetuals, so called) are selected. The stake, one of durable wood, or of iron, being set in the ground, the rose is planted close to it. For its subsequent training one must have some knowledge of the principles of pruning; the upward growth must be encouraged, but not allowed to interfere with the formation of side branches. Another form of the pyramid rose is to set a strong stake in the center and train four or six roses, planted in a circle around it, to wires leading from strong pegs set in the ground to the top of the stake. Either of these methods is possible in our climate, and gives results more beautiful and satisfactory than the tree roses.—American Agriculturist.

The Oldest City in the World.

Damascus is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and the Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a center of trade and travel—an isle of verdure in the desert; "a presidential capital" with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun; the street, which is called Strait, in which it was said "he prayed," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did 1,000 years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass, and the water-wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still occupy the streets "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mohommed surveyed from a neighboring height, and was afraid to enter, "because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world," is to-day what Julian called the "Eye of the East," as it was, in the time of Isaiah, "the head of Syria."

From Damascus came the damson, our blue plums, and the delicious apricot of Portugal, called damasco; damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth, bright ground; the damask rose introduced into England in the time of Henry VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tamerlane carried the artist into Persia, and that beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with gold and silver, a kind of mosaic, engraving and sculpture united—called damaskeening—with which boxes, bureaus and swords are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters; the streams of Lebanon and the "silk of gold" still murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syrian gardens.

The Pope's Peculiarities.

His Holiness Pope Leo XIII. appears to be a decidedly enigmatical personage, if we may trust the account given of him by the Roman correspondent of the Cologne Gazette. The most striking fact about him so far appears to be the slight extent to which his character is known either by the faithful at large or by the inmates of the Vatican. Every one knew how Pius IX. lived; his hours were alloted beforehand, and the same duties always performed at the same moment. There is a total want of this regularity in his successor. He keeps late hours, and has sometimes been found by his servants at his desk in the early morning half dazed after writing through the night. He has all his meals served to him in the greatest privacy, is much more sparing of audiences than was Pius, and even his State Secretary and the Cardinals can only see him at irregular intervals. The great innovation he has made has been his partial supersession of the above mentioned official, who under Pius IX. practically administered the affairs of the the Papacy. He has set on foot a chancellery of his own, consisting of three Private Secretaries, and conducts his affairs with their aid quite independently of the State Secretary, and often over his head. It not unfrequently happens that orders go down to the Bishoprics from the State Secretary, and are canceled in a day or two by different orders from the Pope, or that the Secretary brings papers to His Holiness and tells him that he has settled a particular matter in such a way, merely in order to be told that the Pope himself had already settled it in quite a different way. One thing is clear, that Leo XIII. means to be master in his own house; but the exact aim and tendency of his policy is by no means equally evident. But Leo comes from the country of the Cioccari, and it is believed in Italy that a man from that district is commonly rather deep—a notion which appears also to be strongly entertained by the correspondent.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Strange Tradition.

The Seminole Indians have a singular tradition regarding the white man's origin and superiority. They say when the Great Spirit made the earth he also created three men, all of whom were fair-complexioned. He then led them to a small lake and bade them jump in. One immediately obeyed the command and came out purer and fairer than before; the second hesitated awhile, by which time the water became muddled, and, when he came up, he was copper-colored; the third did not leap until the water became black with mud, and he came out with his own color. After this the Great Spirit laid before them three sealed packages, and gave the black man his first choice, so that he might have a chance to amend his former misfortune. He closely examined each package, and, having felt their weight, chose the heaviest in preference to the rest, believing it to be the best and most valuable. The copper-colored man chose the next heaviest, leaving the white man the lightest. When the packages were opened, the first contained spades, hoes and other implements of labor, and the second unfolded fishing-tackle, and hunting and warlike weapons; the third gave the white man pens, ink and paper—the means of mental improvement, the social ink of humanity, the foundation of the white man's superiority.

CROP REPORTS FOR 1879.

WASHINGTON, June 14.

The census for the cereal product of 1880, which is the crop of 1879, has been completed. It shows the constantly-increasing prosperity of the country. The total wheat and corn crop is 3,232,679,681 bushels. The total rye, oats, barley and buckwheat is 481,905,000 bushels. The total product of the country aggregated 2,714,603,681 bushels. This is a remarkable increase in the productions of cereals during the last decade. During the last ten years Indiana and Illinois have nearly doubled their wheat production, Iowa has quadrupled hers, Minnesota doubled, Wisconsin suffered a loss of about 1,000,000 bushels. Kansas increased eight-fold, and Nebraska and Colorado seven-fold. The following are the complete returns of wheat and corn as compiled by the Census Bureau for 1880:

	Wheat, 1880.	Corn, 1880.
Ohio	46,014,869	112,093,860
Indiana	47,288,950	117,121,915
Illinois	51,136,455	327,796,898
Michigan	35,537,097	36,844,239
Iowa	31,177,225	276,000,905
Wisconsin	24,884,689	35,991,484
Minnesota	34,625,675	14,979,744
Missouri	24,971,727	202,404,620
Kansas	17,324,141	105,791,462
Nebraska	13,846,742	65,785,672
Colorado	1,475,369	455,968
Dakota	3,018,864	2,078,069
Montana	469,680	5,794
Wyoming	4,752	65,000
Idaho	540,584	16,408
Utah	1,167,260	164,244
New Mexico	706,788	630,854
Arizona	189,517	30,240
Washington	1,921,322	99,906
Nevada	70,404	12,891
Oregon	7,486,492	127,675
California	28,767,133	2,050,007
Total	372,647,811	1,362,182,529

Total for the country: Wheat and corn, 2,232,697,681; rye, oats, barley and buckwheat, 481,905,000. Total, 2,714,602,691.

Naming Her Baby.

On the train was a woman with a baby about eight months old, and in the next seat back was an old man who couldn't sit still until he had said:

"That's a baby you have got there, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir."

"About a year old, isn't he?"

"Mercy, no! He's hardly eight months old yet!"

"Isn't, eh? Well, I'm the father of nine children, but it's been so long since I've seen a baby that I've forgotten how they ought to look. Is he a girl?"

"No, sir; he's a boy."

"Just me, agin. I never can tell one from 'tother. Is he party healthy?"

"Oh, yes."

"Squall much nights?"

"Never squalls at all."

"Don't eh? That's the kind of a young 'un I like to see around. My Samuel did nothing but howl for the first two years, Sarah was allus sick, Moses fell out of the cradle and broke his arm, and something or other allus ailed every one of the lot. Have you named this baby yet?"

"No, sir."

"Haven't, eh! Say?"

"Yes, sir."

"'Sposen you call him arter me? My fust name is Jefferson, and they Jeff me for short. I've got two ten dollar gold pieces here for him if you want to call him Jefferson."

"I'll do it!" promptly replied the woman.

"That's business. Here's the cash and the boy is named Jefferson, arter me. Lemme kiss him about four times."

The baby was duly kissed and congratulated, and at the next station he left the train with his mother. The old man was tickled half to death over the matter, until the conductor came along and asked:

"Did you pay her anything to name that baby after you?"

"Yes—twenty dollars. He's a clipper, and don't you forget it."

"And so is his mother. She's down in the Detroit House of Correction, and the woman who had him takes care of him for two dollars a week!"

"N-o a!"

"Fact."

The old man's jaw fell, his eyes remained fixed on the ceiling for a minute, and then he fell back in his seat with the exclamation:

"Chaw me! Everybody has called me a fool for the past twenty years, and now I know they were right! Conductor!"

"Well."

"Please mop the floor with me and break my neck, and step on me a thousand time, and then throw the mangled wreck into some swamp, for I won't be no more good in this world!"—Detroit Free Press.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881.

The estate left by Col. Thomas A. Scott is valued at $4,000,000.

President Garfield's life is insured for $25,000 for the benefit of his wife.

New Orleans is not only now the second port of export in the country, but is far ahead of all the others except New York.

Robins selected fence-corners and bushes for their nests this season. This is said to portend violent storms all through the summer.

Speaking of the New Testament revision, the Rev. Robert Collyer, late of Chicago, thought the revisers should have left hell out in the twenty places in which it occurs, and substitute "Hades," "Gehenna" or "Tartarus."

The Panama Railroad Company has made a good bargain with the De Lesseps Canal Company, selling forty-seven miles of poor track for $20,000,000. The purchase of the road by the French crowds all American interests off the isthmus.

Patti has determined to retire from the operatic stage at the close of the present year. Twelve farewell performances at Covent Garden will be the end. She then comes to America to sing at 200 concerts at $2,000 a concert, receiving a sum of $400,000.

Mayor King, of Philadelphia, has issued a proclamation forbidding the making or selling of fire-works in that city at any time in the future, and announces that he means to enforce the prohibition to the letter. The dealers and the small boys are consequently in a state of gloom.

A London writer says: "I tasted quite lately some of the first oranges that reached London from the Southern States of America. They are distinctly superior to those from Spain and Portugal." It seems probable that a remunerative branch of commerce will be established between England and Florida.

The remains of William Penn are to be brought over from England and ceremoniously buried in Pennsylvania, probably in the yard of old Independence Hall, at Philadelphia. The present representatives of the Penn family make no objection to the removal, and a State Commissioner has been appointed to conduct the affair with dignity.

A Mexican at Las Vegas, New Mexico, tied his wife firmly to a board, leaned her thus helpless against a fence, took a position fifty feet away, and used her as a target for rifle practice. He did not hit her, his object being to frighten her by imbedding the bullets in the board close to her head and body. She fainted under the frightful ordeal.

Badeau's "History of the War of the Rebellion" is sharply criticised among military men for what they allege to be its gross inaccuracies and unjust criticisms. The work is sure to receive a thorough overhauling at the hands of an officer who held high command in the Army of the Potomac, and who has since filled a prominent military position.

George Clark, once a wealthy barber in Cincinnati, was one evening given all the whisky he could drink. He emptied a small glass twenty-seven times as rapidly as the barkeeper could fill it, taking into his stomach about three quarts. As he reached the door he staggered and dropped as if dead, and the physicians at the hospital have no hopes of having his life.

Martin F. Conway, the first member of Congress from Kansas, who is an inmate of the Government Insane Asylum, at Washington, and has been in confinement there for five years, has written to his old friends in Kansas asking their aid to secure a foreign appointment. Mr. Conway has spells of sanity, but at times is almost unmanageable in his maniacal frenzy.

The surgeons of the Marine Hospital Service hold that color-blindness may be acquired. In his address before the Board of Supervising Inspectors of the Steamboat Inspection Service, not long ago, Dr. B. Joy Jeffries, of Boston, said: "Color-blindness, beside being congenital and hereditary, may be acquired. It is a symptom of some diseases of the brain and the optic nerve. Men, after an exhausting disease, like typhoid fever, should be tested before again resuming their duties. Injuries about the head, such as sailors and railroad employes are particularly subject to, may cause diminished color perception. Alcohol and tobacco produce a deterioration of the vision and color sense.

Journalistic enterprise of a certain sort is not appreciated by the Japan authorities. Not long ago the Ministers addressed a communication to the Government deprecating official trading and too much paternal interference with matters of trade. The newspapers got hold of the document in a surreptitious way and published it, and all the offending editors have been fined in consequence.

The papers of Germany are just now very busy indorsing and encouraging the colonization societies which are established for the purpose of directing emigration to certain parts of South America, as, for instance, the La Plata states and certain portions of Southern Brazil. They claim that in those countries the German immigrant will retain his nationality, and that for the future he will remain in close connection with the old Fatherland.

INDIANA NEWS.

Bedford, Lawrence country, has a citizen who recently drank 100 glasses of beer in a day.

The wife of Mr. Doyle, a Decatur county farmer, is the mother of triplets, two boys and a girl, all doing well.

The police of Warsaw, Kosciusko county, arrested six pickpockets while engaged in plying their vocation near a wandering circus.

Iron for the Newcastle and Rushville railroad is being delivered at Newcastle in large quantities, and track-laying will commence in a few days.

The Conservatory Brass Band of Columbus, Bartholomew county, took the $100 prize in the band tournament at Seymour, contesting with sixteen other bands.

Over 100 new buildings are under contract in Seymour, Jackson county, and more are talked of. Seymour has doubled in size and population in ten years.

James K. Chamberlain, a citizen of Sharpsville, Tipton county, while walking on the railroad track, in a state of intoxication, was run over and killed by an express train.

William Deckman, aged 56 years, a deaf-mute, and a tailor by occupation, committed suicide, at New Albany, Floyd county, by drowning. He stated that life was a burden to him.

Work on the New York, Chicago and St. Louis railroad has begun west of Claypool, Kosciusko county. A large force of men are at work, and the grading will be pushed rapidly.

A farm laborer named James Bedson, living in Warrick county, was found dead in an old well. He had been missing for several days, and his body was in a bad state of decomposition when found. It is supposed that he committed suicide.

The good times and public improvements have caused much activity in real estate in Newcastle, Henry county, and several additions to the town have been made, and lots sold to those who will build houses.

Jacob Blume and John H. Emily, two old and highly-respected farmers of Harrison county, between whom an old grudge existed, engaged in a fight, in which Blume, who is quite an old man, had his jaw broken, and was so injured that he is reported to be in a dying condition.

Vanderburg county has a woman with two husbands living. The first one wandered away some years ago, and she, thinking him dead, married again. He now returns, and is enjoying the hospitality of his successor. The affair has been amicably arranged, he being given charge of his own children.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union is making strong endeavors to oust the whisky element in Colfax, Clinton county. The oldest saloon keeper withdrew his application for license through their endeavors, and one if not two drug-store keepers have been indicted before the Grand Jury. They say the other saloons must go.

A couple of Danville (Ill.) infants made application to the County Clerk of Montgomery county for a marriage license, but, after looking at them over his desk for a minute, the Clerk took them up, one in each arm, and gave them a little fatherly advice but no license. The fathers of the infants followed them to Crawfordsville, and returned with them to Danville.

The grave of Jonathan Jennings, the first Governor of Indiana, is on the farm of Mr. W. S. Ferrier, of Charlestown, Clarke county. There is nothing to mark his grave, and, indeed, no one knows where his grave is. The Masonic Grand Lodge once had the matter before it as to the propriety of erecting a monument to his memory, but the grave could not be found. The matter was once sprung in the Legislature, but for the same reason it fell through.

Gaar, Scott & Co., of Richmond, Wayne county, have discharged 120 men from their shops on account of the unfavorable crop reports they have received from their correspondents. They manufacture farm engines and threshers, and employ a force of nearly 500 men. All the manufacturers of agricultural implements in Richmond have advices from their agents indicating short harvests.

A 2-year-old son of Joseph H. Kibbey, of Richmond, Wayne county, ran away from his nurse and was not heard of until a telegram was received from Cincinnati, saying that a boy baby had been found in the depot there who said that he lived in Richmond and was the son of Joe Kibbey. An answer was returned, and the infant runaway was sent home on the next train. He had slipped in the cars and taken a seat, where he remained so quiet that the conductor thought he belonged to one of the passengers sitting opposite, and let him ride to the end of his run.

A personal encounter between Col. Charles Denby and George W. Shanklin, of the Courier, growing out of a lawsuit and certain editorial utterances of the Courier, occurred in the streets of Evansville. Both men are considerably above average size, Col. Denby being about six feet two and Shanklin six feet six or seven inches in height, and both are stout in proportion, the first weighing about 235 and the other about 250 or 260 pounds. Both were slightly punished, "and blood ('twas from the nose) flowed free."

The Mahone Movement.

Mahone's convention at Richmond has carried out the programme originally intended. The main idea of the whole movement is open repudiation of one-third of the State debt, without any honest provision for the remaining two-thirds, as prescribed in the now-notorious Riddleberger bill, which is the basis of the platform. The rest of the programme is mere claptrap, brought in with the hope of misleading Northern opinion, and of securing aid and comfort from the administration.

John F. Lewis, who is nominated for Lieutenant Governor, with the promise of the next Senatorship in case of success, is now United States Marshal for the Western district of Virginia. Charges of fraud, or extortion and of corrupt collusion were made against this officer. The Attorney General sent a special agent to find out the truth of the accusations. That agent made a careful investigation as to every charge, and reported as follows, with the testimony in detail covering each case:

"Upon consideration of the above facts, but one conclusion can be drawn, and that is that the Marshal's office is responsible for grave irregularities and corruption. The manner in which the office has been conducted for the last eighteen months has been a disgrace to the Federal judiciary, and a great hardship to the citizen; for the Deputy Marshals have engaged in regular traffic of Government processes, apparently recognizing no superior but their greed for fees."

Mr. Lewis became a Republican Senator in the days of reconstruction, and, in the regular course of events, became an office-holder when the people regained possession of the State. He joined hands with Mahone in the repudiating movement, and visited Mentor, at the head of a committee, to procure recognition and support from Gen. Garfield. There is hardly any doubt that he came away with the promise of succor, and that the President subsequently favored the coalition which gave the Republicans the committees of the Senate and nominated Gorham and Riddleberger. In testimony of his good will, Gen. Garfield sent Mahone a floral tribute from the conservatory of the White House on the day after his speech, together with a gushing note.

The attempt to cover this coalition scheme with a pretense of reform and of liberal ideas is already a failure. It is known to be a selfish sham, under the lead of a cunning Confederate Brigadier, who told the Senate he had no apology to make there or elsewhere for his endeavor to destroy the Union. The regular and respectable Republicans of Virginia will hold a convention in August and nominate a full ticket, and they cannot be repudiated at Washington without danger elsewhere.

The Question at Issue.

Amid the fury and clamor of the contest at Albany, it may be well to recall the principles involved on the one side and the other.

President Garfield contends for the right of the Executive to coerce the consent of the Senate to appointments by withdrawing nominations which Senators approve, until they agree to vote for nominations which they do not approve. The Senate, under this novel theory, may not consider each nomination separately, and dispose of it according to its merits, but may be forced, at the pleasure of the Executive, to consider any number of nominations together. This certainly is doctrine of a very startling kind.

Mr. Conkling, on the other hand, contends that the previous advice and consent of the Senate are necessary, not merely to an appointment, but to a nomination, and for this purpose the two Senators from a State are the Senate so far as appointments within that State are concerned. They name and they confirm; nobody else has anything to do in the premises.

Mr. Garfield would make the President a great national political boss, using the offices for political rewards and punishments. Mr. Conkling would make the Senators the bosses, divided into pairs, and having absolute control of the Federal patronage within their respective States.

Neither of the two parties regards the letter or the spirit of the constitution; and neither looks upon the purity and efficiency of the public service as a thing of any special importance.

As a matter of constitutional principle, it would be difficult to make a choice between them. Both positions are radically false and alike unsound. Perhaps neither the President nor the Senator ever thought, at the outset, of the real nature of his contention, or would care much about the precedent in comparison with the temporary success of the one machine over the other.

The struggle is not for principle but for spoils: for the control of a party which has outlived the sense of constitutional responsibility, and has become profoundly corrupt.

It is much to be hoped that in due course of time the people will determine to bury both factions in a common grave, and return to the Jeffersonian plan of dispensing with useless officials altogether, and filling the necessary places with men who are better fitted for the public service than for the private service of any political boss, whether President or Senator.—New York Sun.

The Savior of Indiana.

Stephen W. Dorsey in himself would not merit much discussion. Knaves of his sort are passing through obscure courts and into the penitentiary in well-regulated communities daily. But Dorsey is the agent of a great party—the honored and feted agent. He was chosen in February last as the one man meet to be worshiped by all that is regarded as of repute and influence in the party that elected Garfield President. He is the man, it should not be forgotten, who "carried Indiana." How he carried it Vice President Arthur with a broad wink declared it inexpedient to tell at that famous dinner, because there were "reporters present." Some of the ways in which he carried it are now breaking surfaceward. One of the patriots whom he neglected to placate quotes his instructions. This evangelist, one S. P. Conner, Chairman of a county committee, says: "Dorsey demanded that Newton should give 600 majority. I told him we could not give it. He then said he would give me money to help us, and that being on the Illinois line we could thus colonize and make the 600 majority. I told him frankly I was not zealous enough in the cause to engage in such disreputable business. As autocrat, he seemed greatly incensed, and dismissed me from his august presence with a promise to see me later." Conner now avers that Newton secured the 600 majority without colonizing, and that, having achieved this impossibility, he thought himself entitled to a Postmastership, but it was ungraciously refused. Hence Conner's contribution to the rapidly accumulating evidences of Dorsey's handiwork in postal thefts and electoral corruption. No wonder, with the postoffice mine in hand, he could declare a little while ago that he would stand a lawsuit sooner than take an office. Meanwhile Dorsey is the agent-in-chief of the Republican party organization. He has not secured his letter from Postmaster General James, exonerating him, as he modestly asked, but he need have no fear. His is a party that stands by its rogues. He will have opportunity of getting even with the marplots who have uncovered his rascalities. What a President he would make, as Gorham said of Brady. —Philadelphia Times.

The Solid Negro Vote.

The Republicans would like to break the solid South, but not the solid Republican negro vote in the South; yet there is danger of their losing a part of this vote, owing to the negro's frequent disappointments in his efforts to secure office from the party with which he has acted uniformly since he was made an elector. The colored editor of a North Carolina paper counsels the negroes that the time has come for self-interest to show them that independence in politics will best serve their future, and that they will never get office so long as the Republicans can lump the negro vote as a dead-sure thing. The negroes find, notwithstanding murmurings that have taken the shape of formal protests, that while they are doing all the voting for the Republicans in the Southern States, the few white Republicans step into all the offices. In several States conventions of colored men have been held, and the powers that be have been notified that loyalty and hunger are not compatible. Unless the loaves and fishes are dealt to Southern negroes with a generous hand, there is likely to be an alarming bolt before the next general election.—Chicago Times.

The Moral of It.

None knew better than Mr. Conkling, before the late Presidential election, that James A. Garfield is a man of vacillating character, a statesman of variable views, a politician of unscrupulous methods, a trimmer and a trickster who blows hot and cold in the same breath. Now that Mr. Conkling finds that he has been cheated and betrayed, let him reflect how well he understood, when he made his famous pilgrimage to Mentor last fall to bargain for the control of the Federal offices in New York, that he was about to deal with a man whose insincerity, tergiversation, and infirmity of purpose were the marked characteristics of his public career. Let him remember that he undertook to play with edged tools and then thank himself for the unkind cuts he has received. He has simply been the architect of his own bad fortune, and on that account forfeits the sympathy which a generous public might otherwise accord him.—Harrisburg Patriot.

Cosmetics and Coffins.

Paint your faces, girls, but first let the undertaker have your measure. Such at least is the lesson so often found in the reports of our medical practitioners. We thus learn that poison is poison, whether it reaches the vitals through the stomach or the skin. A well-known pantomimist who was wont to set the audience in a roar, became paralyzed by the paint incessantly applied to his face, and he died in an asylum in untimely dotage. Such was the fate of the once popular G. L. Fox, and now we have the case of Fanny Blanshard, whose death was also due to cosmetics. Her physician made a prolonged effort to effect restoration, but it was too late. The poison had become fixed in in the system and the poor girl died by unintentional suicide.—Utica Herald.

Training for Jersey Whisky.

There has always been a popular curiosity as to the diet of the Jerseyman. Scientists have wondered how and by what regimen the human stomach could be hardened so as to retain Jersey whisky. But the secret is out. A New Jersey child having recently suffered with an aggravated case of stomach ache, the family doctor dosed the infant with proper remedies, and the following articles which had been swallowed by the child at odd times were recovered, viz.: Ten lima beans, thirty-eight pins, five needles, three half needles, five tacks, one fourpenny nail, one match, half of a wooden toothpick, one pebble, three buttons, half of a hickory nut, three large safety pins (shut), and six hairpins. The child is doing well.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

He Was an American.

In a foreign settlement east of the Cape of Good Hope there lived, not many years ago, a person whom the rude public called "the self-made man." They always insisted that he put himself together in the morning—inserted his glass eye and his false teeth (some said added an artificial nose), adjusted his wig, strapped on his wooden leg—and sallied forth. It happened that trouble broke out between the country to which he belonged and the one in which he was living; and it was then and there reported that he had gone to the United States Consul and claimed protection. On being asked on what he founded his claim, he was said to have promptly replied that his leg was made of Oregon pine, and an American dentist made his teeth.

How Kentucky Horses are Trained.

A Lexington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader says: "One after another beautiful saddle horses were ridden out over the track moving along at a gentle, easy gait, flying at a rapid canter, racking or breaking into a trot, as the rider willed. All these horses, I believe, were thoroughbred, and their prices ranged from $300 to $1,000. So well were they gaited and trained that the rider had but to touch the mane in a given place or make a certain signal to have them take a rack, canter, trot, run, or lope. Anyone can learn to manage these gaits in a very short time, as I found from experience. But the method by which these horses are so perfectly trained I could not learn. Either the trainers do not know exactly how to impart this information or they are determined to keep it to themselves. Some answered my questions by saying: 'It is easy enough. You can make a horse do anything you want to. Only let him know what you want him to do. You had better wear spurs in riding, give him his head freely, and if he takes one gait when you spur him on the right side, just spur him again there when you want the same gait.' Here a horse passed on a rack, and as the rider touched him with the tip of his finger on the head he struck out on a square trot. 'Now,' said I, 'how was that horse trained so as to strike a trot by that signal?' 'Why,' answered the Kentuckian, 'our saddle horses all learn that from the time they are colts.' I asked Mr. Lindenberger, 'What is the secret of the superiority of Kentucky horses?' 'There is a combination of causes,' he answered. 'The great majority of the horses here have some good blood in them, and you will find it crossed somewhere back in their pedigrees. The best strains of running and trotting blood have been taken from here to other States, and they there fail to produce the desired result. There is something in the blue grass, the water, the atmosphere and the genial climatic influence, and then, as Mr. Treacy told you this morning, there is everything in judicious breeding and training. We force our horses to gait when they are one year old, and at three years old they are pretty well developed. The Northern men, however, always improve them.' 'How long have Kentucky horses held their high place?' I queried. 'No one hereabouts can tell. I know men who have lived here eighty-five years, and they state that from their earliest childhood they have heard of the superiority of our horses. Their fathers before them had the same story to tell. The fact is, that somewhere in the past there was brought into this State a pure strain of thorough blood, derived from the best stock of the mother world, and it has transmitted its qualities from sire to son to the present time. It is a lamentable fact that we have not the exact data upon which to base a history of the Kentucky horse.'

It is a singular man who won't sign a petition.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoro'ly re-established same as if never affected.) Sold ONLY by

HARRIS REMEDY CO. MF'G. CHEMISTS.
Market and 8th Sts. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

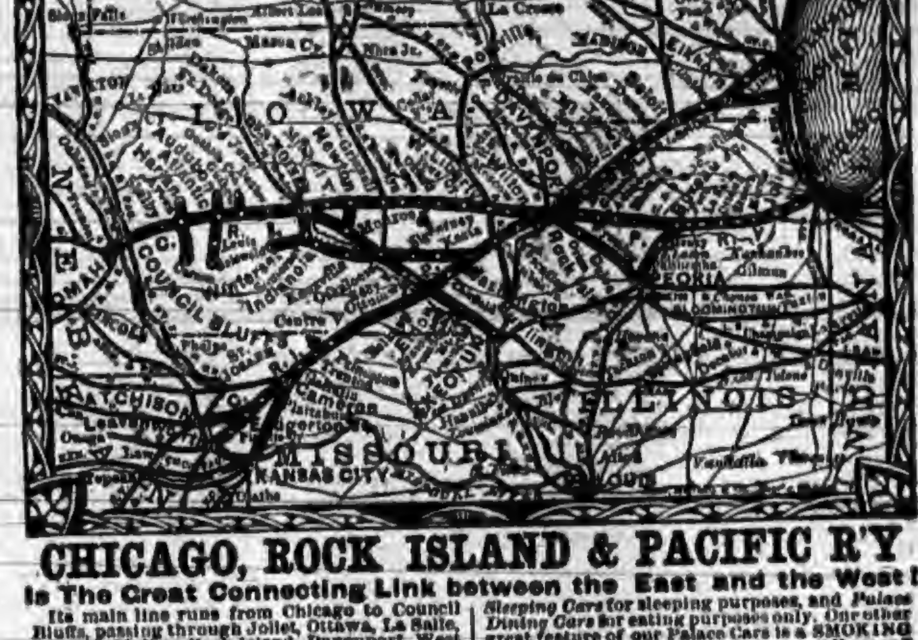
Missouri, June 26.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE



CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca: with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between Chicago and Peoria, Kansas City, Council Bluffs, Leavenworth and Atchison. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At Chicago, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At Englewood, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

At Washington Heights, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.

At La Salle, with Ill. Cent. R. R.

At Peoria, with P. P. & J.; P. D. & E.; I. B. & W.; Ill. Mid.; and T. P. & W. Rds.

At Rock Island, with "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line," and Rock Isl'd & Peo. Rds.

At Davenport, with the Davenport Division C. M. & St. P. R. R.

At West Liberty, with the B. C. R. & N. R. R.

BOTH the vice-presidents of the B. & O., Mr. Keyser and Mr. King, resigned last week. We did not learn the cause of this unusual state of things.

IT is claimed that Bob. Ingersoll has made fortunate investments in silver mines in New Mexico. Developments show them to be among the richest ever opened, and Bob. is already reckoned a millionaire. He ought to write an appendix to his "Mistakes of Moses," as it must be plain that the worst mistake Moses ever made was in failing to invest in a western silver mine.

LIGHTNING struck the house of the postmaster at Anderson last week. Truly the appointees of Garfield are having a hard time of it. What with senatorial opposition, investigations, convictions and the quarrels of competing candidates, it will not be very wonderful if now and then we are treated to the unusual spectacle of a republican not striving for an office.

BRADLEY, an assemblyman at Albany, claims that he received $2,000 to forsake Conkling and vote for Depew, a Garfield man for United States senator. An investigation is now taking place, in order to learn who paid him the money. Bradley says Senator Sessions gave it to him to secure his vote for Depew. But Sessions denies this. Another Conkling man, Senator Strahan, was offered the United States marshalship if he would leave Conkling and assist Depew.

TUNNELING under the English Channel has been commenced. An English party at one end and a French party at the other, are cutting a gallery under the sea, with the expectation of meeting in the middle of the channel in about four years. This will be only an experimental work, in order to see that no unexpected difficulties are encountered. Then a larger tunnel will be constructed, to be used for a railway, or such other purpose as may be thought advisable.

THE most recently discovered "respectable" dodge by which republicans raised money for last year's campaign, is brought to light in the Pitney business just unearthed. Pitney went around to the merchants, with whom he dealt in Washington, and collected from them $5,000 for campaign purposes. This they cheerfully gave, with the understanding that their extra profits in their dealings with him would more than reimburse them. Now that he is turned out into the cold, and their profitable patronage from him at an end, they have the cheek to appeal to "Dear Hubbell," of the republican congressional committee, to have the $5,000 refunded. But as that worthy has got his president already elected, the chances are he will let them get their money back as best they can.

PITNEY, the custodian of the treasury, as he is called, has at last been dismissed from that department by Secretary Windom. He is not likely to be punished, however, as some of the matters charged to him come close to persons high in authority, and it is claimed that some members of Hayes' cabinet would not be pleased to have the cause published. The "custodian" is not an office known to law, but was created by some former head of the department, and paid from a general fund used for purposes of that kind. It now explains that Pitney has been charged with making contracts for material used in furnishing rooms in that department—carpets, desks, etc.—paying enormous prices for them. This enabled him to get a share of the extra profits from the dealers. As long as the profits were great, they could afford to divide, but now that he is turned out, and the office is abolished, they have gone into deep mourning.

Obituary.

Died at her home in Auburn, June 16, 1881. Mrs. Kittie E. Scott. Age 27 years 7 months and 27 days. Deceased was born in Auburn, but lost her mother at an early age, and was then for awhile in care of her grandfather. Afterwards she was in the family of an uncle in Illinois, and later she lived with her uncle Enos Weaver, in this place. At the time of her marriage, in September, 1877, she was living with another uncle, Hiram Weaver. She leaves one child, 21 months old.

Sunday School Convention at Newville.

County Superintendents' Association.

The annual meeting of county superintendents is held in Indianapolis June 28 and 29. The programme is a very interesting one, and we regret that pressing duties will prevent our attendance. J. C. Mcpherson, of Wayne county, is the present president of the association, and J. S. Gamble, secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE

St. Joe News.

Two burglaries, one birth and one wedding.

Wm. Leighty and lady have an addition to their family; a nine (9) lb. baby girl.

The R. R. company have opened their gravel pit at this place, and will employ all the hands that apply. Wages $1.20 per day.

G. W. Woodcox had the misfortune to have his cow (an only one) come in contact with a camel-back engine on Sunday. Cow totally demolished.

Wm. Volmar and a Miss Lonsberry were made as one on Wednesday last. Bill set the cigars up to the boys, which prevented a grand old fashioned belling.

Leighty and Bishop's store, at this place, was broken into on Tuesday night, June 9, and about $100.00 dollars in money and twenty-five hundred to three thousand dollars worth of notes taken. The theives effected an entrance through the back door, it is supposed by duplicate keys, after gaining an entrance, they succeeded in drilling through the safe door, which they then blew open, the door of the safe was blown 10 or 1 feet, and landed in or against an egg box, which it partly demolished. The theives after disposing of the safe door, had an easy time securing the iron box, which contained the money and notes, after getting the box they went perhaps 20 rods north of the store to a lumber pile, where it is supposed they examined the contents of the box, taking what money they found, and leaving box, pocket-books and notes, where they were found the next day by some boys.

CORUNNA.

Will Shook, of Garrett, was in town Sunday.

Lafe J. Miller was around shaking hands last Sunday.

Mr. E. Armstrong, of the national fruit tree brigade is paying us another visit.

School is out, and the youngsters have a thousands hours to perfect the perpetual grin.

Pat Hagerty was in town last week, and says he don't believe in vaccination, for he had a child vaccinated, and it fell in the cistern the next day, and was drowned.

The Silver Cornet Band gave an ice cream and strawberry festival at Cissel Park, Corunna, last Saturday evening. There was a large attendance, and a pleasant time in general.

We called the other day at the stables of W. B. Adams, 444 Maiden Lane, and found it well stocked with fine livery carriages of the best discription, stylish and gentle horses. Mr. Adams is constantly on hand to attend to the wants of his numerous customers. Buses are run to all parts of the town under the personal care of Lafe.

SPENCERVILLE.

Mrs. John Beams is improving.

Millinery goods closing out cheap.

Miss Ollie Overhultzer has returned.

Stamping done at the millinery store.

Miss. Alice McKay went to Fort Wayne last week.

Beeks Erick "took in the sights" at Fort Wayne last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Sanders went to Fort Wayne Saturday.

Mrs. Allen, of Maysville, has been visiting her parents in this place.

Mr. Thomas, of Cedarville, was in town Sunday. What attraction?

Mrs. J. A. McKay, of Auburn, spent a few days of last week in this place.

Quite a number of people attended the grove meeting at Newville Sunday.

Eli Coder and family, of Auburn, have been visiting friends in this place.

The ladies will find bargains in millinery goods by calling at Miss McKay's.

Mrs. J. A. Provines spent a few days of last week with friends near Auburn.

Mrs. S. E. Rhodes, of Newville, was in town last week, "en-route" for Fort Wayne.

A number of Spencervilleites attended the Sunday-school convention at Newville last week.

A number of our young people attended the social at Mr. Thomas' near Newville last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Buchannan, of Concord, accompanied by Mrs Al. Dawson, were in town Sunday.

RUSTIC.

WATERLOO.

J. C. Boyer and wife returned from their visit to Ohio on Thursday.

The Jackson road paid its employes in gold last week, and an unusually pleasant of smile rests on the boys' faces.

The funeral of Mrs. Leas was largely attended. The sermon by Rev Christine is considered a fine one, by all who heard it.

The game of base-ball Friday, stood 19 to 13 in favor of Waterloo. As the Pleasant Lake boys were defeated both games, this settles the matter for the present.

Daisy and Charlie McBride are away on a visit to relatives in Mansfield, Ohio, and send word home that they are enjoying themselves as only children can.

The case of Jackman against Ridge was decided in justice Smith's court last week. Jackman got $30.00 for being upset into the creek, show day, but we understand that Ridge will appeal the case.

Ab. Kelley moves into his new house to-day. He has refitted it in a first-class manner, and it will be one of the best residences in the place. Ab. sits under his own vine and fig tree, eats his own make of maple syrup, votes the democratic ticket and is happy, as he ought to be.

Orson Edge came home Friday morning, from Ann Arbor. He is looking well considering the amount of suffering he has endured. His foot is doing well, and he thinks the amputation is the best thing that could be done.

In spite of his misfortune Ike Mannheimer is constantly at his post waiting on customers at Kahn & Co's., with all his old-time jollity and good nature. Ike is a lively boy, and the people all like him, and when he shakes hands with his customers, they know it means honest goods and good bargains.

WEST RICHLAND.

Mrs. George Keen and her daughter, Miss Sarah, have been on the sick list the past week.

A good deal of interest is manifested in the Sunday evening prayer-meetings held at the school-house.

Much damage has been done some of the roads in this vicinity by the recent heavy rains, but with gratuitous labor they are in tolerably good repair.

Rev. Mr. Robinson, M. E. minister of the Kendallville circuit, contemplates holding a protracted meeting at the school-house, beginning on Thursday evening. Protracted meeting in the country in harvest! How's that? He a worker, and says he does not wish to be idle from Sunday to Sunday. Come out, neighbors, and give him a good house.

It is rumored that in a few days a petition will be circulated asking for the construction of a road between the farms of Mr. Joseph Quince and Dr. Snyder, leading south to the road at Pleasant Hill. This would form a communication between two neighborhoods that are now separate. All who are desirous of the best interests of the community will sign the petition.

The north school, taught by William Franks, son of our present trustee, closes Friday. He teaches a good school, so report has it, for $12 per month and boards himself. Is he a Tannerite? He is a worthy young man and deserves better remuneration for his services.

First Honors.

Horace Hoffman, who recently graduated at Bloomington, took the first honors of his class. This is a high honor, and deserves to be mentioned. He returns to the university this fall to take a position as teacher. W. W. Spangler, of this place, is librarian in the same institution. DeKalb county has reason to be proud of her boys.

Remarkable Cure.

William Grube, Auburn Junction, says: "For the past two years I have suffered acutely with spinal disease and sciatic rheumatism, until my spine was drawn out of place and my thighs had lost their flesh. I was treated by a great many physicians without any relief, until treated by Dr Wilbarger, who has rooms at the Auburn House, and he has entirely cured me. I deem it my duty to suffering humanity to to make this statement. 25 eow-3w.

The cyclopedia contains a vast amount of useful matter in a condensed form. No family should be without some such work. It contains more knowledge than could be gathered in a life-time in any other way. The dictionary embraces most of the words in our language, and sells at the remarkably low price of $1.00

Old Settlers' Re-union.

The Pioneer Association of DeKalb County met in their annual re-union on Thursday, June 16, 1881, in the private grove of Mrs. O. C. Houghton. There was a good attendance of the old settlers, who, with others present made a very respectable meeting in point of numbers. The president, P. B. Nimmons and other officers were present. Under charge of the marshal, Gen. Blair, of Waterloo, headed by the Corunna band, the old settlers were formed in ranks at 10:30 a. m. at the court square and proceeded to the grove, when, after instrumental and vocal music, the Throne of Grace was addressed by Rev. John McCurdy, of Butler, after which an address by W. H. Dills was listened to with much interest. After a recess of an hour and a half, which was occupied in hand-shaking, and hearty greetings, and the partaking of dinner from well filled baskets, the association resumed the further exercises, consisting in the report of offices, which were approved. On motion C. K. Baxter, J. E. Rose and W. H. Dills were appointed a committee to report to the association names of suitable persons to act as officers for the coming year: whereupon said committee made report as follows: Dr. J. H. Ford, president; Cyrus Bowman, treasurer; J. E. Rose, biographer; W. H. Dills, secretary.

Executive committee: Philip Noel, Butler-tp.; Wm. Carr, Jackson-tp.; R. Culbertson, Concord-tp.; S. H. Bartlett, Newville; C. K. Wannemaker, Stafford; E. W. Fosdick, Wilmington; J. B. Cosper, Auburn precinct; H. Willis, Waterloo precinct; O. C. Clark, Keyser tp.; T. D. Daily, Richland; Josiah Wells, Fairfield; J. K. Thompson, Smithfield; M. Waterman, Franklin; W. R. Emerson, Troy.

This report, on motion, was received and adopted.

On motion of Major Sprott, it was resolved that a copy of the address be furnished each of the county papers, accompanied with a request for publication. It was also resolved that the thanks of this society are hereby tendered to the choir for the excellent vocal music discoursed by them on this occasion. The choir was composed as follows: chorister, Miss Frankie [illegible], assisted by Mrs. Mays, Mrs. A. Lewis, Misses Sprott and Matheny and Messrs Littlefield, Widney, Yesbera, and Shepherd.

The following communication was read:

WATERLOO, IND., June 16, 1881.

The officers and members of the Northeastern Ind. Agri. Ass'n. tender to the officers and members of the Old Settlers Ass'n. of DeKalb County, an invitation to attend the fair at Waterloo, October 4, 1881. Those who choose to accept the invitation will be admitted upon a certificate from the secretary of your association.

C. A. O. McCLELLAN, pres.
JNO. BUTT, R. N. CROOKS,
L. J. BLAIR, E. M. LOCKHART

On motion the above invitation was accepted with thanks.

Short speeches were listened to from S. B. Ward, S. H. Bartlett, S. W. Sprott, John McCurdy and Lewis Holbrook. Relics were then exhibited by Mrs. Burdie and Wm. Smith, after which Rev. McCurdy entertained the assembly with an old fashioned Methodist hymn.

The biographer reported three deaths and read biographies of the following persons who died the previous year: Catharine Jennings; born Jan. 14, 1806; moved to this county 1843, died Feb. 20, 1881. Enos Smith born June 22, 1821, came here in 1842, died Aug. 8, 1880. Rebecca Coats, born August 10, 1827, moved here in 1845, died April 18, 1881. Alice Eguew, born 1815, came to this county in 1840, died March 6, 1879. James W. Jeffords, born Aug. 22, 1809; came to this county in 1842, died October 3, '81.

Taken all in all this meeting was one of the best ever held by this society. The order and decorum observed the arrangement of the exercises, the pleasant grove of Mrs. Houghton, so generously tendered, the addresses, the vocal and instrumental music the generous hospitality of all, old acquaintances renewed and new ones formed; all render the occasion one long to be remembered by all present.

P. B. NIMMONS, Pres.

W. H. DILLS, Sec'y.

Prosperous Merchants.

THE ONES WHO ADVERTISE LIBERALLY.

It is a noticeable fact to us which business firms of our town are the most successful, those who advertise or those who do not. But a short time ago we can remember several stores as having but small stock of merchandise, and to-day, by advertising have worked up a trade, and carry a stock of goods equal in quantity and quality to many city establishments. A shrewd advertiser will endeavor to get before the greatest number of readers, at as cheap a rate as possible. It has been verified a thousand times that newspaper advertising secures this end to a greater extent than through any other element, and a prosperous journal is but the reflex of the prosperity of the locality in which it is published.

—Much interest has been felt in this community in the trial of the McDowell boys at Fort Wayne. Wm. McDowell was tried yesterday and was acquitted by the jury in a few minutes. Many of our leading citizens went there to testify and all speak in complimentary terms of the impartial and able manner in which the trial was presided over by Judge Borden. His learning and judicial fairness were matters of much praise on all hands. The acquittal of Wm. will probably result in the dismisal of the other cases The boys are highly respected here for their honorable character.

The new railroad, from Butler to Detroit, will be open July 1, so the Record says, and an excursion will be arranged from Auburn to Detroit about that time.

B. and O. Railroad.

Don't forget the Baltimore and Ohio low-rate excursion to Chicago June 28, 1881, tickets good ten days.

The B. and O. road some years ago inaugurated a system of excursions during the summer season, making the rates so low that every one can take a trip of hundreds of miles for a few dollars.

Chicago, the metropolis of the west, always a great point of merriment, will be doubly so from June 29 to July 4, on account of the Sængerfest of the North American Sængerbund, in which all of the principal singers of the world will participate. The B. and O. offers special inducements to excursionists on June 28, and in addition to the extreme low rates there will be three fast trains running through to Chicago without change, elegantly equipped with modern coaches, new sleepers and dining cars. No other line can offer such inducements in time, comfort and accommodations. En route the B. and O. track strikes the shore of Lake Michigan, and for miles follows the shore, affording passengers a magnificent view of the beautiful lake. Passengers by this line are landed at the exposition building in which the Sængerfest is held, and within five minutes walk of the leading hotel and the business portion of the city. For time of trains and rates of fare, see small bills. For tickets, and further information, call on agents of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, or address W. E. Reppert, passenger agent, 205½ North High street, Columbus, Ohio.

VALUABLE AND DESIRABLE OUT-LOTS.

BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER OF THE DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of Charles F. Mader, deceased, I will, on the premises herein described, on SATURDAY, THE 30TH DAY OF JULY, 1881, at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale at public auction, a part of the Mader farm, now platted into desirable out-lots, containing from two to five acres each, and designated as "Mader's addition" to the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, as follows:

Out-lots numbered one (1), two (2) and three (3), each containing five (5) acres.
No. four (4) contains 2 31 acres.
No. five (5) contains 2 25 acres.
No. six (6) contains 2 20 acres.
No. seven (7) contains 2 10 acres.
No. eight (8) contains 4 acres.

Each will be offered and sold separately. It is appraised at about one hundred dollars per acre, and will be sold for not less than two-thirds the appraised value thereof.

TERMS: One-third of the purchase price, to be paid on day of sale, one-third in twelve months, and the other third in eighteen months from day of sale, the purchaser giving notes bearing interest, waiving valuation laws and for attorney's fees, for the deferred payments, and the notes to be secured by mortgages on the premises sold.

The above lots, except No. 8, front on the Auburn and Waterloo highway. Number 8 lies on the north end of Van Buren street. There cannot be found a more desirable locality around for an out-lot than is now offered, and it may be years before another equally good opportunity will be presented to purchase such property. Original plat can be seen at W. L. Penfield's office.

Obituary.

Died in Waterloo, DeKalb county, Indiana, Mrs. Susana Leas, wife of Mr. John Leas, aged 61 years, 9 months and 27 days. The subject of this notice was born in Germany, August 18, 1819. In infancy, her parents consecrated her by baptism to the Lord Jesus Christ. At the age of thirteen, she personally assumed the covenant vows and was confirmed a member of the Reformed church in Germany; soon after, in the same year, she left her native land and came to America and settled in Stark county, Ohio. In the year 1839, on the twenty-second day of September, she was united in holy matrimony to her surviving husband. Three years after, they left Stark county, Ohio, and settled west of Hudson, Steuben county, Indiana. The country around Hudson and vicinity was at that time a comparative wilderness. Comforts were few, but trials many. It may be said of the piety of the deceased, that it was of the modest and retiring type, rather than ostentatious and demonstrative. Christianity in her case was not characterized by great outward agitation of mind and heart, but quietly and unseen by mortal eye. In the secret chambers of her soul, the new life moulded and leavened her whole being, and ruled her walk and conversation. She always rejoiced in the prosperity of our Zion, and took an interest in all that pertained to the welfare of the church of her father. There was no guile or hypocrisy in her mouth. She was kind, tender, sympathetic and charitable toward all. "And, being dead, she still speaketh." Her sufferings for the last few months were severe, but, with faith in Christ, she bore them with the most surprising patience and cheerfulness. As a mother, the departed one ever anxiously labored and prayed for the spiritual welfare of her children. She will not be forgotten. The record of her life has been engrafted upon the imperishable monuments of time and souls, and her life will be handed down in the family record to bless the children's children.

THERE'S MUSIC ON THE OTHER SIDE.

In last week's issue we sent a dart into the committee on music for the old settlers' gathering, and now one of these gentlemen asks us to publish the facts of the matter, which, he says, are substantially these: A proposal was offered to the Auburn band that they come out and play alternately with the Corunna boys, a collection would be taken up and divided equally between the two bands. The Auburn band refused the proposition, and asked a guarantee of $25,00 from the hands of these committeemen, which, of course, was not granted, and consequently music was furnished by the Corunna band alone. The COURIER does not wish to offend any one in its publications, while at the same time it will always be found ready to uphold the rights of our citizens, and to earnestly encourage the patronage of home institutions.

—Byron Rainier was arrested for "shoulder bumping," and the penalty was placed upon him in another case where there was no complaint entered against him. Republican brethren should dwell in harmony with each other.

—The grass is kept cut too close in the court-yard.

—Potatoes and corn are scarce articles in the market.

—Mrs. Little has a new invoice of millinery goods.

—Butler is making preparations to celebrate the fourth.

—Buck Allen has a new cab. It is the nobbiest rig in town.

—We will publish the commissioners' allowances next week.

—Organize a ball club. We have some pretty good players.

—Wonder if the Auburn band will have a call on the Fourth?

—Shaffer & Rush are building an addition to their harness shop.

—Men are putting the slate roof on Dave Snyder's new residence.

—The Moody property, on VanBuren street, is undergoing repairs.

—Dr. Allen, jr. catches a ball well, but don't like to run after them.

—Frank Philips has a hair restorative that is highly recommended.

—If Tom Mays were here we would have a celebration on the fourth.

—The Eighth street merchants amuse themselves pitching quoits.

—Put your cherries into a bucket of water and the wormy ones will float.

—We hear nothing more of the juvenile band. What's the trouble?

—It is not likely that we'll have a circus performance here this season.

—Billy Edgerton's barber shop has been painted and otherwise improved.

—Sam Tarney's new brick residence, south of town, is ready for the plasterers.

—Picker & Bumpus are building a brick residence in Allen county this week.

—The old settlers' meeting in Hancock county will take place Thursday, Aug. 4.

—The new barbed wire fencing is becoming quite popular in this community.

—The ditch on Cedar street, between Ninth and Fourteenth streets, has been widened.

—Pete Stutz was married last week. The band "belled" him, and he set up the cigars.

—The old settlers' re-union in Lagrange county last week was largely attended.

—LOST.—A small black pocket-book containing one nickel. Please leave at this office.

—John Kreuger is building a new arch and making other improvments to his ashery.

—One of Isaac Roth's dray horses died with the colic Friday. Her age is not known.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church gave a strawberry festival last Friday evening.

—Noll Bros. wholesale millinery store at Fort Wayne was burglarized last week. No clue.

—Old Peter, of the Republican, took a walk out of town the other day, and has not returned.

—We have noticed many fields of wheat that are looking fair, and will produce large yields.

—We can justify ourselves in the assersion that the "old settlers" have their share of this issue.

—We have received a copy of the bible published by the Chicago Times. No brimstone came with it.

—The Island Park Assembly at Rome City, will begin its session on June 29, and close on July 15.

—It is already evident that excursions this season will not be as extensively patronized as heretofore.

—Wm. Hiler says he is going to start a shoe-shop of his own in a short time. "Kirect, Willum."

—One of the fine mules at the County Farm has been strained, which will disable it some for heavy draft work.

—Frank Davenport is now deputy marshal. Put this * on the lapel of your coat.

—The Indiana State Fair is held this year, Sept. 26 to Oct. 1, and promises to be an unusually successful one.

—The late showers have very much brightened the prospects of our farmers. The Lord doeth all things well.

—There was a crazy man on our streets Monday evening, who furnished amusement for a number of spectators.

—Farmers, go to J. H. Umber's sythe factory to get your cradles repaired. Shop on Main street. 2t.

—Billy Little makes the best home-made boot in the town. Also all kinds of repairing done promptly.

—Byron Rainier and Johnny Spacht exchanged a few "old settlers" last Thursday. Johnny took his on, his nasal organ.

—A circus never runs too long for spectators, but let a sermon run over forty minutes and the congregation can't sit still.

—Cherries are plenty in town, and sold at low prices. This is caused by the fact that the entire crop is ripening all at once.

—The Garrett Herald office sells gasoline. Delinquent subscribers never use this kind of oil. They are afraid of an explosion.

—The thirteenth annual commencement, at the Academy of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, will be on the 28th of June, and will be a rare literary and musical treat.

—We learn that they have moonlight picnics over at Sedan. Be careful, young people, be careful. Thou knowest the failings of mortals.

—Last Sunday was the day set apart for us all to molder our frail forms back to mother earth. But there was a small mistake made somewhere.

—Dr. Sears has changed his office, and hereafter will be found over Pommert's barber shop during the day, and at C. C. Shaffer's residence at night.

—A large number of diseases are causes by a disordered liver. Use Dr. Marshall's Bromoline, the big fifty cent Liver Regulator. Druggists sell it. 2t.

—The marshal will raise the grade on Main street, between Seventh and Eighth streets, about six inches, thus giving the water a better fall.

—As far as we can ascertain, there will not be any celebration in this place on the 4th of July. A meeting was called last Saturday, and one citizen composed the audience.

—Purdy, the champion pump man, informs us that there are more drive wells being put down this summer than was ever known, to his knowledge, before.

—Now is the time when the pocket-book of the young man, who sports a nobby summer suit, looks as though it had passed through a mighty hard winter.

—A contract should have been made with Ben Williams to run the sprinkling wagon down Main street, as far as the grove last Thursday. The dust was annoying.

—Bob. Matheny got his hand in the hub lathe at the hub-and-spoke factory last Friday, and was compelled to lay off several days. That was not a very acceptable squeeze.

—A tin can with a dog's tail went up Seventh street yesterday. Billy Edgerton was considerate of the can, and tried to get the dog off of it—but his efforts were in vain.

—The shooting cracker nuisance has already commenced, and the residents complain that in addition to that, the boys shoot crackers and steal cherries almost simultaneously.

—Miss Rosa Shafler has closed her summer term of school in a very satisfactory manner to all interested. Rosa has had some experience, and knows how to make the little ones advance.

—In our hurry last week to join the army of old settlers, we neglected our paper somewhat, and consequently there were several bad typographical errors which would not have occurred, under other circumstances.

—Johnny Schaab, of the firm of Schaab, Beagnot & Co., has sold his interest to his partners and will leave soon for Fulton county, where he will engage extensively in the manufactory of staves and heading.

—The normal school to be opened July 18., under the supervision of W. P. Myers bids fair to have a large attendance. He will be assisted by Prof. M. W. Harrison, who was interested in our schools here last winter.

—List of unclaimed letters in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending June 11, 1881. Mrs Sillan Blodgett, John Fullam, Herrn Peter Kohnen, Hannah S. Hardinger, Joseph Mathews, W. F. Smith, Amanda Williams, Wm. Zerkel. JOS. RAINIER, P. M.

—Talk about swinging on the gate. There is a gate on south Main street that has performed more labor in this capacity, than all the other gates in town combined; For-she is in on duty every evening from six o'clock upward, and has not been Doc-ed during the summer.

—Thousands of ladies to-day cherish grateful remembrances of the help derived from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It positively cures all female complaints. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. for pamphlets. 25 2w.

—The water tank sprang a leak the other day.

—The threshing machines are preparing for work.

—John Eckenberger has not put on a summer suit yet.

—Billy Stimley drives the nobbiest single horse in town.

—Stand and jump is now the favorite sport for the boys of all grades and sizes.

—Hebel's building, on Seventh street, has just received a coat of paint. It looks better.

—Deputy Marshal Judge Picker is busy warning out able-bodied men to work on the roads.

—The Pommert Bros. have put up some screen doors. They don't want any flies in their'n.

—It looks a little too much like sporting to ride bicycles on the Sabbath day. Let up.

—An excursion party from Fort Wayne, passed through here Saturday for Pleasant Lake.

—There was a pleasant dance given at the residence of John Shugar's, south of town, last Friday evening.

—Phil. Bashelier has purchased his brother's interest in the Auburn House and now conducts the hotel himself.

—Esqire Hine, of Jackson township, has his new barn raised, and, will complete the work as rapidly as possible.

—Several Garrett roughs were trying to get up a fight Thursday evening, after the old settlers had adjourned.

—Treasurer Miller will move his family to this place this week, and occupy the Ward property on Fifth street.

—About every juvenile that one meets now has his trousers pockets full of green apples, and the quinine peddler smileth.

—MARRIED.—On the 14th day of June, 1881, at the office of O. P. Smith, Esq., Peter Stutz and Sarah Clute, both of Auburn.

—Court met Monday, and at the request of many of the lawyers the court adjourned. It will not be in session probably till September.

—If our streets are not large enough to run bicycles upon, they should be put away until we have a fair ground. They are a nuisance on the sidewalks.

—The McDowell boys, spoken of in last week's COURIER, as being in some way connected with a party who stole boots and shoes, are now on trial at Fort Wayne for guilty or not guilty.

—The township teachers' institute in Union township last Saturday, was a very successful one. Nearly all the teachers were present. Many pupils and some visitors were also in attendance.

—Owing to the death of Mrs. T. P. Scott, work was delayed on the road last week, and the marshal informs us that he is ready to accommodate all who wish to perform labor of this kind.

—J. J. VanAuken, we learn, has turned himself into a bridge contractor, and will open out business immediately. Jay has a long head attached to his frame, and a mechanical eye in his cranium, consequently success is bound to crown his efforts.

—In an article last week we made the assersion that the Auburn band had not been employed since its organization, at any public gathering. We have been informed, however, that the "soldiers" engaged and paid them for their music on decoration day.

—The Grit and Pluck Combination had poor success at Waterloo, and left the town in an embarrassed financial condition. Their name, however,—Grit and Pluck—is characteristic of the company, and with a determined resolution they started, for better or for worse, northward on the Jackson road.

—While T. P. Scott and his mother were in the country searching for butter, Saturday, some hungry tramp burst in the back door and filled his abdomen with eatables. There were articles of some importance that he could easily have taken, but nothing has been missed as yet.

—S. W. Ralston, esq., had a bet the other day as to the circumference of the willow tree standing at the corner of Main and Thirteenth streets. Measurement proves it to be nine feet and ten inches, stump high. And the top of the elm tree on Fourteenth street spreads over sixty-six feet of ground, or an area of over 3100 square feet.

—L. P. Welling having finished his work at Jackson, has obtained permission of M. D. Woodford, president of the road, to go to Gaylord, at the extreme end of the Saginaw road, for a ten days fishing excursion. We wish him a pleasant trip, and the Courier boys hereby engage to take two or three barrels of fish, without reference to their birth or previous condition of servitude.

—Geo. Grand thought it was asking too much of a laboring man to pay fifteen cents a quart for strawberries, so he took his little basket and started down the Saginaw railroad track to gather a few quarts of wild ones. He got mixed up with a poison weed of some kind, and now he is walking around town with a half dozen bed-sheets wrapped about his neck and hands, and pays the family physician a dollar a day to look over his cranium.

A Masterly Effort.

THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY W. H. DILLS AT THE OLD SETTLERS MEETING.

The speech made to the old settlers last Thursday, by our popular attorney at law, W. H. Dills, esq., is very highly spoken of by our best and most talented citizens. It was somewhat lengthy, taking fifty-five minutes to deliver it, but notwithstanding this fact the large crowd was so wrapped up in it, that even if it had been twice as lengthy, they would have willingly kept their seats and given undivided attention. It was an effort that does Mr. W. H. Dills great credit. It was replete with rich thought, couched in the most elegant and forcible language, and was certainly a literary treat to the large and appreciative audience who listened to it. We publish it upon the outside of the COURIER today, so that those who could not be present can have the pleasure of reading it.

Old Settlers.

A GALA DAY AND A BIG CROWD.

The old settlers meeting last Thursday was largely attended, and a general good time was had. The day was bright and beautiful, significant that nature was in harmony with the old settlers, who gathered at "Houghton's grove" to celebrate their fourth anniversary. The day was passed with short speeches from the old gentlemen, music by the glee club and instrumental music by the Corunna band. About four o'clock in the afternoon the sky darkened, and the thunder sent forth its loud voice, giving warning to the great mass of people gathered there that they would get wet if they did'nt seek shelter. A mixture of rain and hail fell for about a half hour, after which all departed for their homes, feeling that it had been a most pleasant occasion.

—A grand meeting of the many friends and neighbors of the aged and esteemed George Smurr, of the township of Wilmington, in DeKalb county, Indiana, was held on June 6, 1881, to celebrate the 80th birthday of this aged and esteemed citizen. It is needless to say that this event had been looked for and prepared for by his numerous friends and relatives, and as a consequence, every etc. was well looked for and provided in the most sumptuous manner, by his four sons and two daughters, assisted by their children, and the many warm friends who have long enjoyed the kind friendship of this aged pioneer. It is needless to say that the goodly number (to the amount of thirty to fifty persons) who enjoyed this social affair, will long remember this friendly gathering.

School Picnic.

Miss Olive Nelson's school in district No. 9, Jackson township, closed Friday, June 2d with a nice picnic in Milton Carnahan's grove. The children marched from the school-room at 12 o'clock to the grove, about a quarter of a mile distant, where a well-filled table awaited them. After they had partaken of the food, drank the lemonade and played a variety of games, the afternoon exercises, begun. These were all excellent, and were heartily appreciated by those present.

DAVENPORT.

JAMES T. FIELDS' LAST POEM.

ROVER'S PETITION.

Kind traveler, do not pass me by,
And thus a poor old dog forsake;
But stop a moment on your way
And hear my woe, for pity's sake!

My name is Rover; yonder house
Was once my home for many a year;
My master loved me; every hand
Caressed young Rover, far and near.

The children rode upon my back,
And I could hear my praises sung,
With joy I licked their pretty feet,
As round my shaggy sides they clung.

I watched them while they played or slept,
I gave them all I had to give;
My strength was theirs from morn till night;
For only them I cared to live.

Now I am old and blind and lame;
They've turned me out to die alone,
Without a shelter for my head,
Without a scrap of bread or bone.

This morning I can hardly crawl,
While shivering in the snow and hail.
My teeth are dropping one by one;
I scarce have strength to wag my tail.

I'm palsied grown with mortal pains,
My withered limbs are useless now.
My voice is almost gone, you see,
And I can hardly make my bow.

Perhaps you'll lead me to a shed
Where I may find some friendly straw
On which to lay my aching limbs
And rest my helpless, broken paw.

Stranger, excuse this story long,
And pardon, pray, my last appeal.
You've owned a dog yourself perhaps,
And learned that dogs like men, can feel.

Yes, poor old Rover, come with me;
Food, with warm shelter, I'll supply.
And heaven forgive the cruel souls
Who drove you forth to starve and die!

A LAWYER'S STORY.

Which, Being Altogether True, is Much Stranger Than Fiction Could Be.

"I never would convict a man on circumstantial evidence if I were a juror—never! NEVER!"

The speaker was a distinguished criminal lawyer of nearly forty years' active practice, and whose fame extended far beyond the limits of his own State.

We had been discussing a recent cause celebre in which, upon purely circumstantial evidence, a man had been convicted of an atrocious murder, although many of those most familiar with the circumstances of the case entertained the gravest doubts about the justice of his conviction, and had been swung off into eternity, protesting his absolute innocence with his latest breath and calling upon God to send his soul straightway to hell if he was not telling the truth.

As most of our party were lawyers the conversation, naturally enough, drifted into a discussion of the dangers arising from convicting accused persons whose own mouths were closed, upon purely circumstantial evidence, in the absence of any direct and positive proof of guilt, and case after case was cited in which, after conviction and execution, the entire innocence of the supposed culprits had been clearly demonstrated. Most of the laymen present agreed with the distinguished lawyer whose very positive expression of opinion has been quoted, while the majority of the lawyers contended, with that earnestness for which lawyers are noted when advocating their own side of any question, that justice could never miscarry when careful judges guard against the possibility of unsafe verdicts by refusing to permit a conviction except when every link in the chain of circumstantial evidence has been established beyond doubt, and the whole chain has been made so perfect and complete as to leave no room for any consistent hypothesis of innocence.

"The first murder case I ever tried," said one of them, "was stranger than fiction, as you will admit, and is quite as remarkable as any of the cases you referred to where innocent men have been wrongfully convicted upon circumstantial evidence. It ought to have been reported as an example of the unreliability of the direct and positive testimony of eye-witnesses who tell what they believe to be the truth."

He then related the main points of what was certainly a most remarkable and dramatic trial, and which constitutes a fair offset to some of the memorable cases to be found in every work on circumstantial evidence. The narrative produced so strong an impression upon my own mind that subsequently, with his consent, I put it into the following shape, having first carefully compared it with his notes of testimony taken upon the trial of the case. It can be relied upon as absolutely correct, with the exception that I have used fictitious names, for reasons which will readily be appreciated when it is known that most of the actors in the drama are still living:

One winter evening about 8 o'clock, in the early days of the war, in the quiet little town of ——, while patrolling the streets to pick up stragglers from the camp on the outskirts of the town, Corporal Julius Fry was shot and killed by one of three men of bad character, who were in company and upon terms of open amity with the soldiers. The men were arrested, committed to prison, and brought to trial at the next term of the Court. Two of them were gamblers and desperadoes, and supposed to have more than once had their hands stained with human blood. The third, whom I shall call Short, though bearing an unenviable reputation, was regarded as unlikely to slay a fellow man, except under compulsion of circumstances. On account of the character of the men and the trouble they had already brought upon quiet, law-abiding citizens, the sentiment of the whole community was against them.

In order to clearly understand the force of the testimony given upon the trial, and the subsequent result, it is important to bear in mind the physical peculiarities, dress, and general appearance of each of the three prisoners.

Short was a small man, of not more than five feet six inches in height, slender, weighing scarcely 130 pounds, with bright, fiery-red hair and side-whiskers, and at the time of the murder, wore a white felt hat and an old light-blue army overcoat.

Ryan was fully six feet in height, of robust frame, with black hair and moustache, dressed in dark clothes and wore a black Derby hat.

Grey was a heavy, broad-shouldered man of medium height, weighing fully 200 pounds, with a full, black beard reaching nearly to his waist. But as the evidence subsequently showed that he had not fired the shot it is unnecessary to describe his appearance more minutely.

Certainly it is difficult to imagine two men more unlike than Short and Ryan or less liable to be mistaken for each other even by strangers, much less by their acquaintances. There was no possibility here for a case of mistaken identity.

Short and Ryan were tried together with their consent—Grey having asked for and obtained a separate trial—and each was defended by separate counsel.

After the preliminary proof relating to the post-mortem examination, the cause of death and the identification of the body of the deceased as the person named in the indictment, the Commonwealth called as its first witness a woman, Mary Bowen. She bore a bad reputation for chastity, but nobody questioned her integrity or her purpose to tell, reluctantly, it is true, the whole truth. The prisoners were all her friends and were constant visitors to the drinking saloon of which she was the proprietress. She was a woman of powerful physique, almost masculine frame, great force of character and more than ordinary intelligence.

From her testimony it appeared that a colored woman with whom she had had some dispute had hit her on the head with a stone and ran, and the three prisoners, coming up at the moment, started with her up the street in pursuit of the fugitive. Although the night was dark there was snow on the ground, and a gas lamp near by gave sufficient light to enable one to recognize a person with ease some feet away. After running about one hundred yards the pursuers came to the corner of an alley and stopped under the gas lamp, being challenged by the deceased, who was in uniform, in company with one of his squad. She swore that when the corporal called "halt" Short, whom she had known intimately for years, replied, "Go to h—l," and, while standing at her side, so that their elbows were touching, both being immediately under the gaslight, he pulled out a pistol, pointed it at the deceased, who was four or five feet from him, and fired and then ran down the alley, the deceased pursuing him. She heard four or five more shots fired, and immediately the deceased returned, wounded, and Short disappeared. While the shots were being fired she saw both Ryan and Grey standing at the corner some feet away from her and after that they separated and she went home. It was also proved that this alley was bounded on either side by high fences, difficult to climb, and led down to a stream of water about fifty feet wide and three or four feet deep. No traces of footsteps were found in the snow except those of one man leading down into this stream, and it was evident that the person who had fired had not climbed either fence, but had waded through the stream and disappeared on the other side.

The next witness was the soldier who stood close by the deceased when the first shot was fired and who, not knowing either of the prisoners, described the person who had fired and ran down the alley as the man with red hair and side whiskers, dressed in a light-blue army overcoat and white soft hat, and upon being directed to look at the three prisoners immediately identified Short as the man whom he had seen do the shooting.

The testimony of these witnesses was in no wise shaken upon cross examination.

Then the sworn ante-mortem statement of the deceased, taken by a Magistrate was read to the jury. He said that he had known Short personally for some time, but had never had any difficulty with him. He fully identified him as the man who had fired the first shot and then ran down the alley, firing one shot after another until he fired the last and fatal shot almost in the face of the deceased. He also fully described the clothing worn by Short as it had been described by the other witnesses.

These were all the witnesses to the occurrence, except the prisoners themselves, and, of course, they could not be heard. The case against Short seemed to be as conclusively made out as though a score of witnesses had sworn that they had seen him do the shootidg. Neither the judge, the jury, nor the spectators entertained the slightest doubt of his guilt, and when the Commonwealth, at this point, closed its case, it seemed as though the fatal rope was already around his neck and his escape impossible.

Ryan heaved a sigh of relief which was audible throughout the whole court room, for he was safe; there was not one word of testimony against him or any circumstance tending to show any previous arrangement or concert of action between him and Short.

After a whispered consulation between the counsel for the defense one of them rose and moved the court to direct the jury to fortwith return a verdict of "not guilty" as to Ryan, in order that he might be called as a witness for the other prisoner. This was resisted by the District Attorney, and after lengthy and elaborate arguments, the court decided that it was bound to grant the motion, and accordingly Ryan was declared "not guilty" and the verdict recorded.

Then came a scene as dramatic to those present as anything ever witnessed on the stage. Without any opening speech by Short's counsel, Ryan, in obedience to a nod from his attorney, stepped out of the prisoner's dock and into the witness-box, looked around the court room, took up the bible and was sworn to tell "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." Every head was bent forward, every ear was on the alert, every eye fixed on the witness—something startling was expected. Would he attempt to show that Short had done the shooting in self-defense? That seemed the only thing possible. But how could he be believed in the face of the positive testimony of three witnesses, two of them living and in the court room, one of them dead—murdered?

Ryan stood for a moment looking down, and then slowly lifting his eyes to the bench, in a silence in which the falling of a feather might have been heard, he said:

"May I ask the Court a question?"

The venerable Judge, evidently surprised at being interrogated, looked at him and said: "Certainly, sir."

"I understand that I am acquitted," said Ryan, pausing for a moment, and then continuing: "I want to know from the Court whether anything I may say now can ever be used against me in any way?"

What did he mean? What need for that question? Every one looked at his neighbor inquiringly.

The flushed face of the Judge showed that he, at least, understood what it meant—an attempt to swear his guilty companion out of the hangman's grasp. Then, in a tone of unmistakable indignation came the answer:

"I am sorry to say, sir, that nothing you may say now can be used against you; that is, on a trial for murder. You have been acquitted."

Ryan's face grew pale and then red, and he said, slowly and distinctly:

"It was I who fired all the shots—not Short."

Most of the faces in the court room wore looks of incredulity; some of indignation at the hardened wickedness of the man who had just been declared innocent and who, by his own statement, was guilty of murder, if he was not guilty of perjury.

But, quietly and calmly, without a tremor, as coolly as though he was describing some trivial occurrence which he had casually witnessed, Ryan went on, step by step, detailing all that had occurred, and when he had finished his story there was probably not a person present who was not fully convinced not only that Ryan had told the simple truth, but also that he had himself fired the fatal shot in self-defense, or at least under such circumstances of danger as would have led any jury to acquit him.

He detailed how he had fired the first shot from a small single-barreled pistol in the air without any purpose except to give his challenger a scare, and then ran down the alley and upon being closely pursued by the deceased with sabre drawn and raised to strike, he was compelled to pull out a revolver and fire several shots towards his pursuer, who was rapidly gaining on him, to keep him back; and that when he had but one shot left he stumbled over a large stone and fell on his knees, and at this moment the deceased struck at him with the sabre, cutting him slightly in the cheek, and, being thus pressed, he aimed and fired the last shot, which subsequently proved fatal. He further told how, upon covering his feet, he ran, waded through the stream, and finding that he had lost his hat when he fell, retraced his steps, recrossed the stream, found the hat, and then went to a hotel, where he was seen by several witnesses to dry his wet clothing. His manner, his bearing, and his story itself convinced his hearers that he was telling the truth.

But, so that nothing might be wanting if any doubt remained in the minds of the judge or the jury, witnesses of undoubted veracity were called who corroborated him as to the condition of his clothing and the cut on his cheek within fifteen minutes after the occurrence. Besides, it was shown that, although the man who had fired had waded through the stream, Short's clothing was perfectly dry.

It is unnecessary to say that Short was promptly acquitted and warmly congratulated on one of the narrowest escapes ever made by any man in a court room. Nothing could have saved him had the court refused to direct the acquittal of Ryan and allow him to testify.

The deceased corporal, the soldier, and Mary Bowen were—mistaken. That was all there was about it.

So much for the occasional unreliability of the direct testimony of honest eye-witnesses.

And so much, also, for giving the accused an opportunity to be heard on the witness stand, the denial of which by the law is one of the relics of barbarism which still disgrace its administration in some States at this late day.—Lawyer XXX, in Philadelphia Times.

Expansion of Metals.

It is generally thought, says the London Times, that the expansion of bodies on heating and contraction on cooling hold good, as a rule, for the passage from the solid to the liquid state, and vice versa. Substances, like ice, which behave differently are regarded as exceptions. The researches of Herr Kopp have shown that phosphorus, sulpher, wax, stearic acid, stearine, chloride of calcium, phosphate of soda, hyposulphate of soda, and Rose's metal grow larger in volume when fused. As to metals the data of past observation are very discordant, and on this account Herren Nies and Winklemann have recently studied the subject anew. Their fundamental experiment was putting the solid metal into the fused metal. In some cases the difference of density could be measured. They found, then, that tin in solidifying, is increased in volume 0.7 per cent., that zinc is increased 0.2 per cent., and that solid bismuth is as much as 3 per cent. less dense than the fused metal. The fact of expansion in solidifying was also demonstrated for antimony, iron and copper. With lead and cadmium the results were indecisive, (the former presented difficulties in the probably very small difference of density as a solid and as a liquid, its small heat conductively and heat of fusion, the latter in the fact that in fusion it first passes into a viscous state.) Thus, of the eight metals examined six showed distinct expansion in solidifying; and the same may occur in the two others. So far as these experiments go, therefore, the phenomenon in question would appear to be the rule and not the exception for metals.

The Terrible Tragedy.

The thick thunder threatened torrents; the tempest tossed the trees, throwing their trembling trunklets topsy-turvy.

Tripping toward the town, Theresa thought, "To-night Theodore treads the tiresome thoroughfare, thinking things that—"

Thud!

The terrified truant turns to trace the threatening turmoil. There, toward the toll-gate, tramped Theodore, trying to throttle two thieves.

"Take to the timber, Theresa!" thundered Theodore.

"Tell that to timid things," thought Theresa, treading tiger-like, tip-toe toward the trio. Then, telling Theodore to throw the taller thief, Theresa, taking t'other's toga, tied through the thickness the thief's throat.

Thus terminated the terrible trouble that threatened the twain. They turned triumphantly to town, there to tell the tale. To-morrow ties them together.

When you buy peanuts, that's a quart. When you pay for them, that's a quarter. And when you have disposed of them, that's a quartette.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

If the crab is often interrupted he will, like the spider, pretend to be dead, and will watch an opportunity to sink himself into the sand, keeping only his eyes above.

Specimens of fossil woods and lignite are reported to have been brought to the surface from a depth of 191 feet, while boring an artesian well at Galveston, Texas.

M. St. Pierre once saw a vast number of ants overcome a centipede. They seized it by all its legs and bore it along as workmen would have done a large piece of timber.

Hiddenite is the name of a new gem of the emerald class, of a beautiful clear green color, and worth about the same as a diamond. It has been found only in Alexander county, N. C.

In 1854, in the Bay of Bengal, Capt. Kingman passed for thirty miles through the middle of a large patch of sea white with tiny creatures, whose diameter was less than that of a hair, 300 of whom placed in line would not make an inch in length. Thirty miles of animalcules!

The total human population of the earth is estimated to be 1,421,500,000. To this is added a daily birth-rate of 104,800 which is in turn depleted by a daily death-rate of 97,790! What a vast sea of human emotion is here suggested; rising into crests of joy and falling into deep troughs of grief and reaching up hopefully or receding despairingly on the shores of time.

Atlanta, Ga., has a pig which very much resembles a young elephant, having no hair or bristles on its body. Both of its eyes are in one socket, which is just the center of the pig's face. Just above this dual eye there is a large trunk or proboscis about the size of a man's thumb and several inches long. It also has large fan-like ears, somewhat like an elephant.

M. Treve mentions the fact that the flame of a lamp appears brighter, and that a vertical shaft, a post or mast is seen more distinctly through a vertical than through a horizontal slit, while a house, a landscape or the disk of the sun or moon is perceived more clearly through a horizontal slit. He finds similar differences in photographs according as the light passes from the object to the plate through a vertical or a horizontal slit, and ascribes the results to the action of diffused light.

To Duter, of Greifswald, is attributed the first visible demonstration of the circulation of blood in the human body. In this operation, the patient's head being fixed in a frame having a contrivance for supporting a microscope and a lamp, his lower lip is drawn out and fixed on the stage of the microscope by means of clips, the inner surface being uppermost, and having a strong light thrown upon it by a condenser. This arrangement being complete, all the observer has to do is to bring the microscope to bear on the surface of the lip, using a low-power objective, and focusing a small superficial vessel; at once he sees the endless and wonderful procession of the blood corpuscles through the minute capillaries, the colorless ones appearing like white specks dotting the red stream.

A Scared Ex-Confederate.

"I think, Vest," said Senator Butler the other day, "that the story you tell about that fellow in Richmond who went to have his picture taken is about the best you can get off. Let's have it."

"Well," said the humorous little Senator from Missouri, "we had a man by the name of Peter Wilkes, who was elected to the Confederate Congress from the Springfield (Mo.) district, and he came down to the seat of Government with the air of a Webster about him, and just looked and talked for all the world as if the entire responsibility of the cause rested on his individual shoulders. I knew him at home, and hence was spared the anxiety of being disturbed about his greatness. It was not long before the close of the war when Garland and I were walking down Grace street, and Peter ran into us. He had a benign smile on his face, and I knew he had been engaged in some agreeable sport. Coming up to us, he said: 'Vest, I've been down street here to a photographer's. Got a card from him the other day asking me to call and sit for a picture. He wants to get up the whole Confederate Congress—something historic, eh?'—and Peter's waistband stretched perceptibly at the thought of being thus embalmed for posterity. Tipping a wink to Garland, I said:

"'What shop do you mean, Peter?'

"'Oh, down here on Main street,' giving a certain number. Just then I turned to Garland with alarm painted on my face, and said:

"'Why, Peter, you big ass, where have you been in the last two weeks? Haven't you heard anything about that fellow down there pretending to take historic pictures? He is a spy in the employ of the Federal Government. We've just about proved it on him, and he's come to Richmond to photograph all us members for the Federal gallery; and when this thing blows up the other side will have all our pictures to aid them in the search and prosecution! Fact, Garland; ain't it?'

"'So I've heard, Vest,' he said.

"Well, Peter didn't stop any longer than it took him to say, 'My God!' and in two minutes he was just out of sight. That evening he came rushing into my room with: 'Vest, you've done me a great favor, and I'll remember it to my dying day.'

"'Find your man, Peter?'

"'You bet I did. The infernal rascal had that machine of his in the back room, and was oiling me up. I just went up to him with this trusty six-shooter, (it was about a yard long) and put it to his ear, and says I, 'Shell out!' Well, he shelled kind o' lively like, and I mashed it into 1,000 pieces. No Federal gallery in mine!'

"Well, when the surrender came, Peter was under the conviction that the whole Federal Government had combined to capture him, and he set out for California on foot. Yes, he's out there yet, waiting for the animosity against him to cool down."—Washington Capital.

Who Buy the Costliest Fabrics.

The simple costume of the Friend, particularly that of the female Friend, is often quoted as the quintessence of neatness and economy, but the truth is that no ladies in the world dress more expensively in proportion to the effect produced than do the wives and daughters of wealthy Quakers. They always select the finest and most costly linens and cloths, and though, with the strict members of the sect, lace and furbelows are eschewed, the price they pay for delicate hemming, stitching and tucking would startle a belle of society. Once I watched a lady Quaker buying some jet buttons, plain ones, of course. She commenced by looking at some which were shown her at 25 cents per dozen, mounted gradually to 50 cents, $1, $1.50, $2, and took those marked at $2.50 per dozen.

One day I was at a private opening of French millinery. The bonnets were $40, $50 and even $80 each. A lady bought three bonnets, one at $80, one at $40 and one at $35. I was told she was the wife of a clergyman, but she had $500,000 in her own right, and was justified in some extravagance in the selection of her bonnets. Oh, happy clergyman, to have won the heart and hand weighted with $500,000! A lace merchant, who once spoke of his business, told me that religious persons were the best patrons of laces. They always wear the most expensive kinds, because the quiet nature of their festivities necessitates all apparel to be of a character which will bear inspection.—Philadelphia Times.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

For Felon.—Take equal parts of gum camphor, gum opium, castile soap and brown sugar; wet to a paste with spirits of turpentine. Prepare it, and apply a thick plaster of it.

For Sprain.—Bathe with arnica diluted with water, and bandage with soft flannel moistened with the same. A sprained wrist thus treated will grow well and strong in a few days.

A Sure Cure for Chilblains.—Three applications of vaseline will cure the worst case of chilblains. For ordinary cases one or two applications will be sufficient. Although vaseline is made from petroleum, it is far more rapid in its work of healing than kerosene.

Tapeworm.—Salicylic acid, given at intervals of an hour for four hours, and followed by castor oil in full dose, succeeded in expelling tapia which had resisted all other remedies. One case reported had resisted all other medication for nine years.—Louisville Medical Herald.

For Cancer.—Gather wood-sorrel when in blossom (that bearing a blue flower is better than the yellow-flowered), pound and press out the juice, put it in a plate and cover the whole plate with glass; set it in the sun until a paste is formed, then cork it tightly in a vial. When applied, it should be spread on cloth or wash-leather, and placed over the cancer only in the daytime, so that the patient may sleep. If properly gathered, prepared and applied, it will draw out the cancer in about four days. Meantime the patient should drink much yellow-dock tea. The newspaper correspondent who furnishes the recipe adds that it is vouched for by Mr. Samuel Baker, of New Hampshire, and Mrs. Warren James, of Deerfield Center, N. Y.

Apples.—A more extensive use of apples as food at our meals, remarks Dr. J. H. Hanaford, will do much to diminish dyspepsia and biliousness. They are "loosening," and therefore tend to remove constipation—a prominent cause of digestive derangements. The acid of this fruit—one of the very best known in aid of digestion—acts favorably on the liver, causing it to secrete the bile, which is nature's cathartic, thus preventing this constipation. While eating them between meals must derange the stomach—like the use of all food at that time—they are really a very valuable food, demanded especially in warm weather. They may be too cooling in the coldest weather, while the more-acid berries are better in the spring and summer.

Quantity of Food.—If children are very hearty eaters their food should be of the simplest kind, and thus prevent eating more than the system really needs. The first reason for consuming food should be necessity, and the second may be the gratification of the appetite. Usually children have appetites so strong that they need no stimulants, no condiments, as spices, pepper or mustard. These articles should be reserved for the failing appetites of debility and age. They are useful only by way of increasing the appetite and promoting the dull digestion of what is eaten. They may stimulate the nervous system, and should be avoided in all inflammatory tendencies of the system. The excessive use of sirups, sugar and molasses may induce fermentation in the stomach and long canal. In moderate quantities they are useful, and sometimes are strongly needed. Articles preserved in sirup should be sparingly taken, as they are usually not easy of digestion—that health and growth demand that the amount of food should vary with the amount of exercise; the kinds of food should be such as may supply the needs of the system; the amount of food should be no more than can be easily digested.

Beautiful Expressions.

Your former conversation has made me think repeatedly what a number of beautiful words there are of which we never think of estimating the value, as there are of blessings. How carelessly, for example, do we (not we, but people), say: "I am delighted to hear from you." No other language has this beautiful expression, which like some of the most lovely flowers, loses its charms for want of close inspection. When I consider the deep sense of these very simple and very common words, I seem to hear a voice coming from afar through the air, breathed forth and intrusted to the care of the elements for the nurture of my sympathy.—Samuel Johnson.

Two ladies, handsomely dressed, entered a car. A gentleman rose and offered one them a seat. She said to the other lady: "Dear, you take it. I am very tired; but you are much more tired than I am." The other said: "No, dear, you look so weary, and I can't rob you of it." Then another gentleman rose, both the ladies took seats, and one said: "What a lovely time we have had. I feel so much brighter for running out;" while the other replied: "I haven't felt so well for ages. Shopping is a great pleasure. I'm all in a glow."

HOLMAN'S PAD
CURES Without Dosing
Simply by Absorption
TRADE MARK.

Is a sovereign remedy for all forms of Liver and Stomach troubles, and is the ONLY SAFE and ABSOLUTE cure for Malaria in its various types.

Dr. Holman's Pad is a genuine and radical remedy, WITHOUT TAKING MEDICINE.

It was the FIRST article of the kind that was introduced to the public generally. It was the ORIGINAL PAD, and was devised by DR. HOLMAN alone.

He struck out from the beaten path and made a NEW WAY. No sooner had he rendered the undertaking a CERTAINTY than the Imitators and Pirates who hang to and infest ever successful enterprise, started up and have since followed in his footsteps as closely as the law will tolerate.

Against these Dr. HOLMAN gives SPECIAL WARNING. Not only do they FAIL TO CURE, but in disappointing the purchaser they bring doubt and odium on the principal of Absorption, of which Dr. Holman's Pad is the GENUINE and ONLY TRUE EXPONENT.

Every Imitation is an emphatic endorsement of the substantial worth of the genuine article. A poor one is never copied.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD CO., with the above Trade-Mark printed in green. Buy None Without It.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC
Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.
Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your Iron Tonic, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

Most gratefully yours,

HENRY VILLARD, the railroad manager, was born in Speyer, the capital of Rhenish Bavaria, in 1835. He came to this country when twenty-one years old, was among the first of the Pike's Peak emigrants, and afterward acted as a newspaper correspondent. At the close of the war he passed a year in Germany, came back and married a daughter of William Lloyd Garrison and then went to Germany again for two years. There he formed business connections out of which his control of transportation interests has sprung.

THE old lady kept a private bottle from which she refreshed herself from time to time, as she felt the need, though none of the family knew it. One evening her daughter, in rummaging through the pantry for doughnuts for her beau, spied the bottle and had the curiosity to draw the cork and apply her nose to the aperture, at which moment the old lady hove in sight and angrily demanded: "Well, are you any wiser than you were? What do you suppose it is?" "I don't know what it is, mamma," answered the shrinking maiden, "but it smells just like Charlie's moustache."

"Auld Robin Gray."

It was written by Lady Anne Bernard. She happened to be at a house where she met Mrs. Duff Johnstone, a well-known person, who played the air and accompanied it by words of no great delicacy, and Lady Anne lamenting that no better words should belong to such a melody, immediately set to work and composed this very pathetic story. Truth, I am sorry to say, obliges me to add it was a fiction. Robin Gray was her father's gardener, and the idea of the young lover going to sea, which would be quite out of character here among the shepherds, was natural enough where she was then residing on the coast of Fife. It was long unknown who the author was; and indeed there was a clergyman on the coast whose conscience was so large that he took the burden of this matter upon himself, and pleaded guilty to the authorship. About two years ago I wrote to Lady Anne to know the truth; and she wrote back to say she was certainly the author, but wondered how I could have guessed it. When I mentioned having heard it long ago from a common friend who was dead, she then recollected me, and wrote one of the kindest letters I ever received, saying that till now she had not the smallest idea that I was the little lame boy she had known so many years before. —Sir Walter Scott.

The Printer-Advertiser says: "Englishmen are not famous for great jokes, but one has recently been perpetrated in London which is really admirable, and the result of a vast amount of hard work. A Boer Homestead.

Let us visit one of the homesteads in the gardens. The white-walled house, although but one storied, is well elevated, and its roof is iron. Outside shutters of a pleasant green flank the two windows, and the door between them is green and paneled. There is, indeed, some pretense to architecture, and the whole is well kept and substantial. The stoop is high and approached by steps. The water-course beneath it is masoned out with solid stone and bridged with the same material. Leafy trees of divers sorts shade the place and the stable and outhouses in its rear. We enter a voorhuis, or front room, very lofty and but slightly furnished. Its walls are lined by benches, and a table stands in the middle. There are pictures, it may be very quaint and old world; scenes in the life of the prodigal son, or limnings of the manger at Bethlehem, or the cross on Calvary. A new piano may be noted and a good harmonium, and pious books with Dutch titles lie scattered about. And there are flowers on the table, and on mantel-piece photographs and albums, for there are daughters in the house. In some place of honor lies a great old Bible, a massive folio bound in leather and with brass clasps; it is printed in foreign-looking type, on ancient-looking paper, and full of the strangest pictures that ever delighted the antiquary or mystified the child. A companionable book upon a dull occasion, but disappointing, inasmuch as its date discovers it to have been printed but the other day. Spittoons stud this chamber's floor, for it is the great reception-room, and visitors sit round it and smoke their pipes at and seasons of conference and waiting; and many such times there be. At the back of this voorhuis is the dining-room, entered by large and even handsome folding-doors. In both apartments the walls are painted light blue, or green, or mauve; in both the ceiling is raftered and wooden, varnished and dark. The great feature of the dining-room, apart from the usual furnishings, is a small table near the window, with a chair on either side. Upon this table stands a coffee-urn, with a chafing-dish beneath it; and the day has scarcely turned before this urn begins to steam and to bubble. On its dexter side is seated the lady of the house, who pours out coffee for all comers, and, with feet well planted one a box-like foot-stool, rules and manages her household. Children play around her, a colored girl sits watchful at her feet, and at favorable moments her lord and master occupies the corresponding chair, utters familiar maxims and remarks, and his friend, sitting hard by, carries on an intermittent conversation between wary mouthfuls of the scalding beverage. He is a well-built man, not unlike the English farmer of our early days, but more sallow and less cheery, more Puritanical and staid. His ancestors came from France and Holland, but in this wonderful climate of the Cape, perchance for animal life the finest under the sun, their offspring have developed into a race sui generis, nobly grown and quite unlike the typical Hollander or Frenchman. We converse in Dutch, the only language he cares to speak, although his children are apt scholars in the English tongue, and by and by he takes us into his garden.—Contemporary Review.

Life's Brightest Hour.

Not long since, I met a gentleman who is assessed for one million. Silver was in his hair, care upon his brow, and he slightly stooped beneath his burden of wealth. We were speaking of the period of his life he had reached the most perfect enjoyment, or rather, when he had found happiness to be nearest unalloyed.

"I'll tell you," said the millionaire, "when was the happiest hour of my life. At the age of one and twenty I had saved $800. I was earning $500 a year, and my father did not take it from me, only requiring that I should pay my board. At the age of twenty-two I secured a pretty cottage just outside of the city. I was able to pay two-thirds of the value down, and also furnish it respectably. I was married on Sunday —a Sunday in June—at my father's house. My wife had come to me poor in purse, but rich in the wealth of womanhood. The Sabbath and the Sabbath night we passed beneath my father's roof, and on Monday morning I went to my work, leaving mother and sister to help in preparing my home.

"On Monday evening, when the labors of the day were done, I went not to the paternal shelter, but to my own house—my own home. The holy atmosphere of that hour seems to surround me even now in the memory. I opened the door of my cottage and entered. I laid my hat on the little stand in the hall, and passed on to the kitchen—our kitchen and dining-room were all one then. I pushed open the kitchen door and was in—heaven! The table was set against the wall—the evening meal was ready prepared by the hands of her who had come to be my helpmeet in deed as well as in name—and by the tea-table, with a throbbing and expectant look upon her lovely and loving face, stood my wife. I could only clasp the waiting angel to my bosom, thus showing to her the ecstatic burden of my heart.

"The years have passed—long, long years—and worldly wealth has flown upon me, and I am honored and envied —but as true as heaven—I would give all—every dollar, for the joy of that June evening, in the long, long ago."—Exchange.

THE complete independence of man and wife, where property is concerned, is nowhere carried to such a point as among the Indians of Central America. Every day the husband buys his meals from his wife, who purchases from him raw material for the table.

A GREAT REVELATION.

Some Valuable Thoughts Concerning Human Happiness and Timely Suggestions About Securing It.

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered by Dr. Charles Craig Before the Metropolitan Scientific Association.

"The public speaker of the present day labors under difficulties of which the speakers of the last century never dreamed, for while the audiences of the past received what was said without question, those of the present day are usually the mental equals or superiors of the ones who address them. Rev. Dr. Tyng, of New York, when a theological student supplied a church in a neighboring town, and, on his way to preach one morning, met an aged colored man. 'Well, Uncle, do you ever go to hear the young preacher?' asked the unfledged doctor. 'No, Massa,' replied the negro, 'dis chile don't let none o' dem students practis on him.' The darkey had begun to think. The free and independent thought of this age accepts statements only where they are proven to be truth, while the development of mental power seems equally great in every other department of life. The valuable inventions of the day are counted by thousands. The increase of scientific study is universal. The spirit of inquiry in all fields is so marked as to cause COMMENT ON EVERY SIDE, while people seem investigating and advancing in every direction which can help them morally, mentally or physically. This is specially true of the human body and everything which concerns it, and the truths which the people have found, even in the last fifty years, are simply marvelous. How really ignorant some cultured and supposably scientific people were only a few years ago, as compared with the present day, may be better understood from a few illustrative facts. A prominent writer prepared an elaborate essay to prove that steamships could never cross the Atlantic, and his pamphlet was issued just in time to be carried by the first steamer that went to England. People once believed that the heart was the seat of life and health. It is now known that this organ is only a pump, simply keeping in motion what other and more important organs of the body have created and transformed. It was once supposed that if a person felt a pain in the back, the liver was deranged; if a pain came in the lower chest the lungs were affected and consumption was near; it is now known that a pain in the back indicates diseased kidneys, while troubles in the lower chest arise from a disordered liver and not imperfect lungs. A severe pain in the head was once thought to come from some partial derangement of the brain; it is now known that troubles in other parts of the body, and away from the head, cause headaches, and that only by removing the cause can the pain be cured. It is a matter of PRIVATE HISTORY that Gen. Washington was bled to death. His last illness was slight, and caused principally by weariness. A physician was called who 'bled him copiously.' Strange to say, the patient became no better. Another doctor was called, who again took away a large amount of the vital fluid. Thus in succession four physicians drew away the life of a great man who was intended by nature for an old age, and who prematurely died—murdered by malpractice—bled to death. That was the age of medical bleeding!"

The speaker then graphically described another period which came upon the people, in which they assigned the origin of all diseases to the stomach, and, after showing the falsity of this theory, and that the kidneys and liver were the causes of disease, and that many people are suffering from kidney and liver troubles to-day who do not know it, but who should know it and attend to them at once, continued:

"Let us look at this matter a little more closely. The human body is the most perfect and yet the most delicate of all created things. It is capable of the greatest results and it is liable to the greatest disorders. The slightest causes sometimes seem to throw its delicate machinery out of order, while the most simple and common-sense care restores and keeps them in perfect condition. When it is remembered that the amount of happiness or misery we are to have in this world is dependent upon a perfect body, is it not strange that simple precautions and care are not exercised? This is one of the most vital questions of life. People may avoid it for the present, but there is certain to come a time in every one's experience when it must be faced.

"And here pardon me for relating a little personal experience. In the year 1870 I found myself losing both in strength and health. I could assign no cause for the decline, but it continued, until finally I called to my aid two prominent physicians. After treating me for some time, they declared I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and that they could do nothing more for me. At this time I was so weak I could not raise my head from the pillow, and I FAINTED REPEATEDLY. My heart beat so rapidly it was with difficulty I could sleep. My lungs were also badly involved; I could retain nothing upon my stomach, while the most intense pains in my back and bowels caused me to long for death as a relief. It was at this critical juncture that a physical longing which I felt (and which I most firmly believe was an inspiration) caused me to send for the leaves of a plant I had once known in medical practice. After great difficulty I at last secured them and began their use in the form of tea. I noticed a lessening of the pain at once; I began to mend rapidly; in five weeks I was able to be about, and in two months I became perfectly well, and have so continued to this day. It was only natural that such a result should have caused me to investigate most thoroughly. I carefully examined fields in medicine never before explored. I sought the cause of physical order and disorder, happiness and pain, and I found the kidneys and liver to be the governors, whose motions regulate the entire system."

After describing at length the offices of the kidneys and liver, and their important part in life, the doctor went on to say:

"Having found this great truth, I saw clearly the cause of my recovery. The simple vegetable leaf I had used was a food and restorer to my well-nigh exhausted kidneys and liver. It had come to them when their life was nearly gone, and by its simple, yet powerful, influence had purified, strengthened and restored them and saved me from death. Realizing the great benefit which a knowledge of this truth would give to the world, I began in a modest way, to treat those afflicted, and in every case I found the same HAPPY RESULTS which I had experienced. Not only this, but many, who were not conscious of any physical trouble, but who, at my suggestion, began the use of the remedy which had saved my life, found their health steadily improving and their strength continually increasing. So universal, where used, was this true, that I determined the entire world should share in its results, and I, therefore, placed the formula for its preparation in the hands of Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, N. Y., a gentleman whom I had cured of a severe kidney disease, and who by reason of his personal worth, high standing and liberality in endowing the Astronomical Observatory and other public enterprises, has become known and popular to the entire country. This gentleman at once began the manufacture of the remedy on a most extensive scale, and to-day, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the pure remedy that saved my life, is known and used in all parts of the continent.

"I am aware a prejudice exists toward proprietary medicines, and that such prejudice is too often well founded, but the value of a pure remedy is no less because it is a proprietary medicine. A justifiable prejudice exists toward quack doctors, but is it right that this prejudice should extend toward all the doctors who are earnestly and intelligently trying to do their duty? Because Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure saved my life before it became a proprietary medicine, is it reasonable to suppose that it will not cure others and keep still more from sickness now that it is sold with a Government stamp on the wrapper? Such a theory would be childish."

The doctor then paid some high compliments to American science, and closed his lecture as follows:

"How to restore the health when broken and how to keep the body perfect and free from disease must ever be man's highest study. That one of the greatest revelations of the present day has been made in ascertaining the true seat of health to be in the kidneys and liver, all scientists now admit, and I can but feel that the discovery which I have been permitted to make, and which I have described to you, is destined to prove the greatest, best and most reliable friend to those who suffer and long for happiness, as well as to those who desire to keep the joys they now possess."

How Long Man May Live.

It was Professor Hufeland's opinion that the limit of possible human life might be set down at 200 years; and this on the general principle that the life of a creature is eight times the years of its period of growth. That which is quickly formed quickly perishes, and the earlier complete development is reached the sooner bodily decay ensues. More women reach old age than men, but more men attain remarkable longevity than women. Some animals grow to be very old. Horned animals live shorter lives than those without horns, fierce longer than timid, and amphibious longer than those which inhabit the air. The voracious pike exists, it is said, to an age of 150 years; the turtle is good for 100 years or more, and among birds the golden eagle is known to have lived nearly 200 years, while the sly and somber crow reaches the venerable age of a century. Passing up in the scale of life to man, and skipping the patriarchs, we find many recorded instances of longevity among the classic Greeks and Romans. Pliny notes that in the reign of the Emperor Vespasian, in the year 76, there were 124 men living in the limited area between the Appennines and the Po of 100 years and upward, three of whom were 140 and 4 over 135. Cicero's wife lived to the age of 103, and the Roman actress, Luceja, played in public as late as her 112th year. Coming down to more recent times, the most notable authentic instance of great age is that of Henry Jenkins, of Yorkshire, England, who died in 1670, 169 years old. He was a fisherman, and at the age of 100 easily swam across rapid rivers. Another historic case is that of Thomas Parr, of Shropshire, a day laborer, who lived to the age of 152 years. When more than 120 he married his second wife, and till 130 he could swing the scythe and wield the flail with the best of his fellow-laborers. In his 152d year Parr went up to London to exhibit himself to the king. It proved an unlucky visit, for, violating the abstemious habit of a century and a half, the old man feasted so freely on the royal victuals that he soon died, merely of a plethora. On examination his internal organs proved to be in excellent condition, and there was no reason why he should not have lived much longer save for this unfortunate taste of royal hospitality. Professor Hufeland's roll of centenarians includes many more remarkable cases.

demands immediate attention. Nothing so quickly regulates the system and keeps it pure as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Methods in German Schools.

No time was lost even in the gloom of this dark winter morning, for the girls had scarcely removed their wraps and settled themselves in their seats when the school-mistress, pointing to a little girl in front of her, asked:

"How old art thou, Gretchen?"

"Six years and one month," was the answer.

"How old art thou, Marie?"

"Six years and seven months," said Marie.

"Who tells me this, my little maids! How much older is Marie than Gretchen?"

"Fraulein! Fraulein! Fraulein!" went up in an eager shout from every part of the room—so eager were they all to give an answer. The answer came, and she continued:

"How many little girls are sitting on the bench, Madchen Louise?"

"Four," replied Maiden Louise, looking carefully along the line.

"Will Madchen Helene be kind enough to count them?" which Helene did, and gave five as a result.

"Now, how does it happen that Madchen Louise had only four?"

The whole school paused a moment, until suddenly it dawned upon them all, and, bursting into a hearty laugh (which rightly enough did not horrify this sensible teacher), they cried:

"Why, Fraulein! Louise forgot to count herself!"

So Maiden Louise was corrected, and in this simple manner, passing from one subject to another, counting desks, scholars and window-panes, adding, substracting, and employing only objects before their eyes, or rows of little wooden balls strung upon parallel wires, they learned the two great principles of increase and decrease without so much as touching a text-book in the first whole year of their schooling.—*Cor. A Connubial Involvement.

We have seldom read a case of greater connubial involvement, personally, than the following, which Col. Forney publishes, growing out of a case of bigamy that recently came before a court at Plymouth. Thrown into tabular form, the facts are as follows:

WILLIAM COX

was charged with intermarrying	Rosina Knight,
his first wife	Caroline Drake,
being alive. It was proved that	William Cox
had married	Caroline Drake,
but as she was the first wife of	George Merrifield,
he left her, and married	Rosina Knight.
On learning this	Caroline Drake
(whose husband	George Merrifield, had since been married to	another woman)
instituted proceedings against	William Cox.
But it was proved that before	George Merrifield
married	Caroline Drake,
he had	another wife
living. His marriage with	Caroline Drake
was therefore illegal and	William Cox
felt himself at liberty to marry	Caroline Drake.
But it was also proved that	Caroline Drake
had a husband when marrying	William Cox.
His marriage with	Caroline Drake
was therefore illegal, and	Rosina Knight
became the lawful wife of	William Cox.
The bench accordingly ordered	George Merrifield
and	Caroline Drake
to be prosecuted, and discharged	William Cox.

A Boot-Buttoner.

"Please draw upon the blackboard an interrogation point," said a teacher to one of her pupils.

"Can't make a good one," replied the boy.

"Draw a boot-buttoner," said the teacher; "that will answer."

The boy took the crayon and drew a hair-pin. Sharp rebuke by the teacher. Other pupils smile.

EILERT'S EXTRACT OF TAR AND WILD CHERRY has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. Try this excellent remedy, and we are sure you will be convinced of its merits. Chronic Coughs, and even Consumptives, are cured by following the directions. Every bottle is warranted to give satisfaction. Prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago. Sold by all good druggists.

UNCLE SAM'S CONDITION POWDERS are recommended by stock-owners who have used them as the best Horse and Cattle Medicine to be had. If the animal is Scraggy, Spiritless, or has no appetite, these Powders are an excellent remedy, and every owner of stock will do well to try them. They are prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago, Ill., a very reliable firm, and sold by all good druggists.

IT is fair to presume that there are to be found but few intelligent persons in this country and in portions of Europe who have not heard of DR. HOLMAN'S AGUE AND LIVER PAD. Tens of thousands who have tried them bear testimony to their wonderful efficacy, in language strong and zeal more earnest than can be shown in behalf of any other remedy in existence.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

Ex-Auditor Hague and Thad Meese were taking their first lessons in making boots and shoes, under the lynx eyes of Isaac Brandt. John Somers was then, as now, temporarily absent in the western mountains, engaged in the pleasant past-time of killing Indians and picking up nuggets of gold. At the same time, we claimed as belonging to our crowd, two others (still veterans in the cause) Uncles Jacob Somers and Moses Brandon, then just as desirable "catches" as they are to-day. I do believe they are engaged in the fatal game of wearing each other out by seeing which can out live the other in the state of "single blessedness."

We then had a younger class coming on, then just in their teens, who were neither man nor beast—the liveliest set of miscreants you ever knew—If you would catch out at night, Dick and Guy Plumb, Jack and Coop. Ralston Sam and Clark Ford, the Mott boys, Joe Loveland, Bill Tinney, Dry Houghton, Harry Ward, Sam Puff and a few others I could mention, you would next morning find there had been done more gilt-edged, clear-cut, mischievous devilment, than could have been accomplished in a week by a regiment of old settlers, all of whom to-day are good business men and citizens, and alive, except poor Clark Ford and Sheridan Mott, who sacrificed their young lives upon their country's alter.

Notwithstanding the privations and exposures of these early times, which you, my aged friends, have passed through and encountered, when I look around me and behold your ruddy and gladsome faces, I must say as you will undoubtedly tell me, these cares of life, these many years, and nature itself has dealt lightly and gently with you. When we think back (even those of my age and those still younger, and some so many years your joniors) and revive and recount the vicissitudes of life, the many trials, vexations and disappointments, with the foolish and unwise exposures which we might or could have been avoided, and the almost, if not entirely criminal indulges of our passions and appetites, we are surprised that we are still alive and are not older in appearance, or in a worse physical condition than we are. The compensating and recuperating powers of nature are indeed wonderful. All seems to work for the best. How terrible life would be were there none of those compensating and curing powers to come to us? We have sickness and pain, mutilated limbs, sore afflictions of body and mind, we stand by the dying bed of our children, our sons, daughters, companions, and feel as though it is impossible to give them up, as I know some of you have felt. Yet, although a deep scar may be left to mark the injury done, it does not kill, and in the mutations of life, the poigniancy of grief is assuaged, and the occurrence scarcely thought of. The dark and dreary clouds of life will in time dissolve, and the bright sun with its warm rays, the pleasant hours, the kind friends and the beauties of this life will appear and if we will only permit nature to have its sway, the beautiful side will appear; but if we drown down nature in its efforts to cure these wounds, if we but ponder and dream only of the dark side, permit that side to be uppermost in our thoughts, we are looking through the glass darkly. We become melancholy, sour and morose. Although we may have trouble and pain (and we must expect them) there is a great abundance of joy, happiness and pleasure in this world. It is a pleasant world to live in, if we could only make up our minds to be satisfied, and be contented with our lot.

Even in early days when the pioneers were undergoing the privations I have spoken of, they had a very large amount of the real pleasures of life and when an opportunity afforded it was enjoyed with a relish equally as well then as now. It certainly was true enjoyment to help a neighbor raise a house or a barn, do his logging, have quilting and sewing bees, dance on the puncheons in the cabins, take your girl up behind you on horse-back and carry her through the woods six, eight or ten miles to some gathering—and she would have to hold on awfully tight or she would be brushed off the horse by the limbs or trunks of the trees. Think of the making of sugar, hunting bee trees, gathering cranberries, wild plums, cherries, grapes, crab-apples, all kinds of nuts and ginseng. Think of the excellent hunting and fishing there was here then, all kinds and in large quantities were the fish, wild fowls and wild animals.

They had other pleasures and were as keen then to devise and play off some joke, prank or sport at each others expense as their sons and daughters are of to-day. For the purpose of showing by its sequel the good heart of one of its actors, of the many I have heard I will mention only one. I take the now oldest settler in the county, and because he is such, I take the liberty of using his name, he feeling well assured that I would not set down aught in malice. It seems that long years ago, at least forty, Sam'l. Wason unsuspectingly entered into a contract with that ever practical joker, shrewd lawyer and afterward honored Judge, R. J. Dawson, whereby Wason agreed to let Dawson strike Wason three strokes with a raw-hide—then W. was to strike Dawson five strokes with the same instrument, Wason agreeing before-hand that he would not touch Dawson until he had given him all of his three strokes. Dawson was a strong and powerful man and probably struck harder than he intended, but having struck Wason only twice he hurriedly put away the raw-hide and concluded to postpone, indefinitely, the giving to Wason of the last stroke. He felt safe because he had Wason's word, which then as now, was as good as a bond, that Wason would not strike. Wason demanded the other lick and to have the contract fulfilled at once. Dawson argued that by the contract he could take all the time he wanted to finish up his work. Wason begged and demanded, Dawson equally stubborn and determined in his way. The truth was that thereafter on that day, it was not very quiet on the St. Joe. Dawson always thereafter kept postponing the execution of his contract, and Wason ever waiting, watching and wishing to have Dawson strike him. Wason nursed his IRE (and I have heard nurse it) because he was such a fool as to enter into such a foolish scheme. They lived within a mile of each other for twenty years but were not as friendly as they ought to have been and be neighbors.

Twenty-two years ago the 15th of last month a man at Spencerville, with his weeping wife and three little boys by his side, and other mourning friends around, lay dying. Many of his neighbors were there to take their last look and render assistance. A few moments after midnight, after a few gasps, and Reuben J. Dawson was dead. Wason was not present, but Dawson had not been dead five minutes before the tall, bent form and shaggy beard of Sam'l. Wason came into that house of mourning from the darkness outside, where he had been silently and alone awaiting the crisis. As tenderly as a sister would, he gently carried the little boys and weeping widow to their rooms and with his own hands shaved, dressed and fitted for sepulture the body of that neighbor. The next day, solitary and and alone with his shovel and mattock, Wason wended his way to the village grave-yard and with his own hands and strength, dug and prepared the grave of one whom he had thought had so grievously wronged him. And there in that grave that day Sam'l Wason buried all the ill will, hatred or malice he ever had against Dawson. My friends such is only one of many of the great big noble hearts of the Old Settlers. A great big, warm heart of that kind is worth more to a man than all the land now owned by Lockwood. And when such men or women die, there are more bitter tears shed and sadder hearts around their grave than there was around the bier of that railroad magnate and millionaire, Thomas A. Scott, a few days ago.

A few more words, my friends, and I close. I have spoken more fully of Concord-tp. and Auburn, than of other localities of the county. It was only because that in them I have lived nearly my whole life. Other parts of the county are just as beautiful and pleasant to you as Concord and Auburn are to me. They are all dear, sacred and hallowed spots. All over this county, in every school district you will find hearts who worship and idolize each spot Here it was that long years ago, with your companions, you sought to make a home, here your children were born and with parents, children and companions, here lay buried, your dead. Let us all hallow and keep green in our hearts these sacred spots. We sometimes shudder when we think we too must be laid beneath the clods of the valley, but yet it is our uppermost desire and wish that when we shall have paid the last and final debt of nature, our dust shall be permitted to mingle with that of our kindred dead. In the village church-yard near Spencerville, lies all that is mortal of my parents. Here in our cemetery, almost within the sound of my voice, also lies moldering into dust the little forms of three of my children. To-day let us again reconsecrate these spots, let us revive the sacred memories of other days, and of former acquaintances, and when we return to our homes to-night let us realize that it is the most sacred spot on earth.

My friends, excuse me a moment by bothering you with a little more poetry. It is true that persons as old as you and I, who have received the hard blows and ugly strokes through life, have about all the music and poetry there ever was in us pretty well knocked out. But when the poetry strikes the right chord it answers the same purpose now just as well as at any time.

My address has been somewhat sombre and solemn. I cannot leave you in a melancholy condition of mind. The poetry I propose to read is not old, nor Scottish, nor Irish as that which I have read. It is quite modern, it is American, too; and to still make it better and refine it down it is American of African descent. It is an address to the members of the Lime Kiln Club and published in the Detroit Free Press. Here it is:

THE LIME KILN GLEE CLUB CHORUS:

Yes, we am passin' down de lane,
An' haltin' by de way,
Jist long 'nuff to rest our limbs,
An' fur de chil'en pray;
Last Sunday preacher Gordon said:
"De march will soon be o'er,
An' all de ole folks safely cross
Upon dat shinin' shore."

Chorus—But old folks am jolly folks,
An' while we wait to go,
Let's gin de fiddle lots o' work,
And rush de ole banjo.
Dar's Uncle Dan'l, he am lame,
An' Peter White am bald,
An' Dianah Rock an' old Aunt Clo'
Am waitin' to be called;
An Trustee Pullback says to me:
"De summons soon mus' come,
For you an' me an' us ole folks
To tote our baggage home."

Chorus—

Dar's Pickles Smith and Daddy Toots
A-nearing of dar end,
An' Deacon Spooner an' his wife
Am crutchin' round de bend;
Aye! us ole folks am hangin' on,
An' kinder waitin' round,
To let de chil'en grow a bit
Fo' we go under ground.

Chorus—But old folks am jolly folks,
An' while we wait to go,
Let's gin de fiddle lots o'work
An' rush de ole banjo.
—Detroit Free Press.

And now my friends, in bidding you good-bye, I hope and trust that in kind Providence we all, without the loss of one, may be permitted to meet again next year, and be favored to meet at many re-unions; and that, when we have crossed the River of Death, our course through life may meet the approval of our neighbors, and receive recognition of Him who doeth all things well. Adieu.

Thousands of persons are constantly troubled with a combination of diseases. Diseased kidneys and costive bowels are their tormentors. They should know that Kidney-Wort acts on these organs at the same time, causing them to throw off the poisons that have clogged them, and so renewing the whole man. Hundreds testify to this. —Pittsburgh Post.

Haunted Me.

A workingma says: "Debt, poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost." —Christian Advocate. 24-2w.

Prejudice Kills.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery, under the care of several of the best (and some of the worst) physicians, who gave her disease various names but no relief, and now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had poohed at for two years before using it. We earnestly hope and pray that no one else will let their sick suffer as we did, on account of prejudice against so good a medicine as Hop Bitters."—The Parents.—Telegram.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

Bruin and the Bees.

Two thousand hives are not uncommon on one hillside in a California wilderness, under one bee-keeper, who, in his solitude, far from the haunts of men protect them with his dogs and guns from the assaults of grizzly bears, that keep watch by day and night. In one night a dozen bruins make a concerted raid on the apiary, each takes a hive in hug, upsetting it, and using his huge paws, spoon fashion, gobbles up honey, comb, bees alive, wax, bee-bread and all. Having no wiping conveniences, Bruin comes out of the fray thoroughly bedaubed, head to tail, eyes not excepted. In the absence of soap and water, he rolls in the yellow dust and converts the viscous coat into a dusty ulster that laughably disguises the animal beyond recognition. But how do the bees take it? Their sting is powerless against the bear's hide, and the bear rather likes the buzzing music at his supper. But when fire sweeps the over-dry brush, the keeper flies for his life and the bees are burned up with their honeyed treasures.—Bal. Sun.

War Department.

There being now pending in this department great numbers of volunteer pension claims which cannot be satisfactorily verified for want of information which missing records of discontinued volunteers commands would afford, and it having transpired in many instances that officers of the late volunteer forces have still in their possession, or under their control books and other records pretaining to their corps, divisions, brigades, regiments and companies, their attention is called to the fact that all such books and records should be deposited with this office, and they are earnestly requested to cause the same to be forwarded without delay to the adjutant general of the army, at Washington, District of Columbia.

No expense, other than postage or proper express charges (when packages exceed four pounds, the limit for mail parcels), can be paid by the government.

In the interest of the great number of widows, orphans and disabled soldiers whose claims are involved, the newspapers of the country are requested to give the substance of this circular the greatest publicity.

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant General.

Shaking Jay Gould.

Mr. Gould went out on the rear platform of the train, and stood there enjoying the scenery. A sudden lurch of the car caused him to clutch instinctively at the hand-rail. A lynx-eyed brakeman observed the suspicious movement. So he opened out on Mr. Gould.

"There now, you can just go inside the coach. We don't propose to have any dead men on our hands. Cows are bad enough."

Mr. Gould regarded the brakeman attentively.

"Now then, don't you tumble to the racket? You go inside the coach. We can't slow up all the way on your account."

"I am merely enjoying the—"

"Well, now, no back talk. Rules is rules. Perhaps I know what I'm here for, and perhaps I don't. At any rate you toddle for the coach. D'ye hear?"

The brakeman advanced threateningly on Mr. Gould, who stepped down on the first step, and clung to the safety rail. The brawny brakeman grabbed his coat collar, and lifted him back to the platform.

"Do you—shake—propose to—shake—go inside or—shake, shake—not?"

"If I was but a conductor—" grasped Gould.

"But yer ain't a conductor, nor a brakeman, nor an engineer, nor a fireman, nor a porter, no, not even a peanut. Yer nothing but a passenger, and yer—shake—place—shake—is inside—shake, shake, shake—the coach."

He shook Mr. Gould's hat over his eyes, from beneath which issued, among a confused mass of English, the word "reported."

"Report, would yer? Report me, will yer, yer skinny sun-of-a-gun? Goramighty, have I been twisting brakes on this line for seven years or more, to be reported for a doing on my duty? You jog now—" Here he threw Mr. Gould into the car—"and if I catch you out on this ere quarter deck again, I'll dump yer at the next siding as sure as yer a foot high. Yer hear me? My name's Polonious, and I have bad spells."

Then the brakeman threw down his cap, executed a jig upon it, donned it, and seating himself on the brake-top, allowed his indignation to be lulled to sleep by the rumbling of the train.

The Autophone

Is the cheapest, best, and most comprehensive automatic musicial instrument ever brought forth. It has 22 notes; (six more than any other musical instrument) plays in 3 keys; is simple in construction; it can be played by a child; it is absolutely perfect in its rendition of music—beating its own time—while all others require faster or slower motion. It does away with cranks and handles, being played by direct action of the bellows. It plays any kind of music. Both autophone and music are cheaper by far than all others. Send for circular. No Hospital Needed.

No palatial hospital needed for Hop Bitters patients, nor large-salaried talented puffers to tell what Hop Bitters will do or cure, as they tell their own story by their certain and absolute cures at home.—[New York Independent. 26 3w.

Wonderful Power.

When a medicine performs such cures as Kidney-Wort is constantly doing, it may truly be said to have wonderful power. A carpenter in Montgomery, Vt., had suffered for eighty years from the worst of kidney disease, and had been wholly incapacitated for work. He says: "One box made a new man of me, and I sincerely believe it will restore to health all that are similarly afflicted." It is now sold in both liquid and dry form.—[Danbury News.

An English sparrow pecked on a library window in New London, Conn., during a storm one night, until the gentleman within raised the glass and let it in. It was allowed to pass the night within the friendly shelter, and in the morning to fly away.

Mrs. Cunningham, a woman of 102 years, living at Mallet Scheuech, eight miles south of Glasgow, Scotland, is the only living person who has seen the poet Burns. Her father occupied a neighboring farm when Burns and his brother Gilbert owned Mossgiel, and she repeatedly saw and heard "Robbie" cracking jokes with her elder sister, for whom he had a passing fancy.

Story About Early Railroading.

R. R. Randall, of Lincoln, Neb., was in Toledo a few days since, and related an incident of his first experience in railroading in Illinois. This was in 1846, and Mr. Randall was then a boy. The Springfield and Meredocia railroad, at present the oldest link in the great Wabash system, had just been built.

One bright sabbath morning, while all good little boys were at Sunday-school, Mr. Randall, with other urchins, going out on an exploring expedition in search of fresh mischief, found a flat-car standing on a side track. The boys, after many experiments, hit upon a plan to propel the car. A strong breeze was sweeping across the prairies. They obtained a piece of scantling and a sheet, and rigged a sail upon the car. The wind rose, the sail filled, and the car moved down the track. By the time it reached the main track a good speed had been obtained, and the boys, enjoying their first trip upon the railroad, were in high glee. The car swept on down the main track, gaining speed every moment. Houses, corn-fields, gardens, and orchards were passed in quick succession, but the car sped on, its velocity never slackening. The boys were becoming uneasy. They were getting too much of a good thing. They tried to lower the sail, but in that they failed, with the car in such rapid motion. They could not even stand upon their feet. An engine whistle attracted their attention. Down the track, approaching them at full speed, was a train. The boys all jumped from the car into the soft mud. As they scrambled out of the mud and dived into the adjoining cornfield, Mr. Randall says he remembers the impression of a shock, and something going up into the air behind him. Fortunately no one on the train was hurt, but the collision made a great stir in the neighborhood at the time. The boys, covered with mud, never stopped running until they reached home. The country was scoured for the persons who wrecked the train, but even to this day, now thirty-six years since the occurrence, the boys have kept the secret of their first ride on the Wabash

The railroad builders of that day had some peculiar ideas. The western terminus of the Springfield and Meredocia was located in the public square in Jacksonville, right in the heart of the city. When the road was finished, a grand excursion was given to Jacksonville. Thousands of people, very few of whom had seen a locomotive, came into the city from the surrounding country. The streets adjoining the square were literally packed with all kinds of vehicles. Some one cried out, "The train is coming!" The people rushed into the square to see the wonderful sight and left the horses and wagons standing all around the square. The engine, then an object much more frightful to dumb brutes than now, came puffing and screaming and panting down into the square, throwing out great clouds of steam and black smoke, the engineer evidently intent on showing the people how much fuss the old thing could make. The horses outside snorted and panted in imitation of the terrible iron monster which was frightening them to distraction. Then a stampede commenced, and such a stampede was never seen before. A thousand runaways were in full blast at the same time. Mr. Randall estimates that in three minutes after the arrival of the first train in Jacksonville a half dozen whole vehicles of any description could not be found in Morgan county. Fortunately but few persons were seriously hurt, but such a wreck of wheel carriages was never seen before or since.

At this time serious doubts were entertained of the success of railroading, the principal argument being that the cost of building roads was too great. Judge Semple, a well-known gentleman of Springfield, proposed to solve the problem by dispensing with the road bed and track. He invented and built a monster engine which, without road bed or track, he proposed should traverse the prairies between Chicago and St. Louis, drawing after it long trains of wagons, just as many as the farmers along the routes should choose to hitch on. He made the first experiment with his monster engine, built after the fashion of the railroad engines of that day, on the prairies near Springfield, in the summer of 1845. The engine had nearly completed a circuit of five or six miles over the rough, uneven surface of the prairie, crushing down the tall grass in its track, when, getting up considerable speed on the homestretch, it struck an unusually large gopher hill and toppled over, breaking some of the machinery. The trip from Chicago to St. Louis was never made.—Toledo Railroader.

A Healthy State.

People are constantly changing their homes from east to west and from north to south or vice versa, in search of a healthy state. If they would learn to be contented, and to use the celebrated Kidney-Wort when sick, they would be much better off. The whole system can be kept in a healthy state by this simple but effective remedy. See big adv.

KIDNEY WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES! WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Stork, of Junction City, Kansas, says, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular Physicians had been trying for four years.

Mrs. John Arnall, of Washington, Ohio, says her boy was given up to die by four prominent physicians and that he was afterwards cured by Kidney-Wort.

M. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was not expected to live, being bloated beyond belief, but Kidney-Wort cured him.

Anna L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says that seven years suffering from kidney troubles and other complications was ended by the use of Kidney-Wort.

John B. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years from liver and kidney troubles and after taking "barrels of other medicines," Kidney-Wort made him well.

Michael Coto of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with kidney difficulty and was unable to work. Kidney-Wort made him "well as ever."

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES

KIDNEY DISEASES,

LIVER COMPLAINTS,

Constipation and Piles.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

☞ It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

VALUABLE AND DESIRABLE OUT-LOTS.

BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER OF THE DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of Charles F. Mader, deceased, I will, on the premises herein described, on SATURDAY, THE 30TH DAY OF JULY, 1881, at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale at public auction, a part of the Mader farm, now platted into desirable out-lots, containing from two to five acres each, and designated as "Mader's addition" to the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, as follows:

Out lots numbered one (1), two (2) and three (3), each containing five (5) acres.

No. four (4) contains 2 31 acres.

No. five (5) contains 2 26 acres.

No. six (6) contains 2 20 acres.

No. seven (7) contains 2 10 acres.

No. eight (8) contains 4 acres.

Each will be offered and sold separately. It is appraised at about one hundred dollars per acre, and will be sold for not less than two-thirds the appraised value thereof.

TERMS: One-third of the purchase price, to be paid on day of sale, one-third in twelve months, and the other third in eighteen months from day of sale, the purchaser giving notes bearing interest, waiving valuation laws and for attorney's fees, for the deferred payments, and the notes to be secured by mortgages on the premises sold.

The above lots, except No. 8, front on the Auburn and Waterloo highway. Number 8 lies on the north end of Van Buren street. There cannot be found a more desirable locality around for an out-lot than is now offered, and it may be years before another equally good opportunity will be presented to purchase such property. Original plat can be seen at W. L. Penfield's office.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

OLD TESTAMENT.

In Genesis the world began;
'Twas then that God created man.

In Exodus the law was given,
As Israel's guide from earth to heaven.

Leviticus, from Levi's name,
The tribe from which the priesthood came.

Then Numbers tells about the way—
What God would have us do and say.

Deuteronomy, which means "twice told,"
The truth, once learned, must ne'er grow old.

Then Joshua came, in Moses' place,
When Law had failed, God brought in Grace.

So next by Judges Israel ruled;
His love toward them never cooled.

And then, the story sweet of Ruth
Foreshadows very precious truth.

In Samuel First we read of Saul—
The people's King—his rise and fall.

In Second Samuel then we hear
Of David—man to God so dear.

In First of Kings the glory filled
The temple Solomon did build.

And Second Kings records the lives
Of prophets, Kings, their sons and wives.

In First of Chronicles we're shown
The house of David and his throne.

And Second Chronicles records
King Solomon's good deeds and words.

Then Ezra builds God's house again
Which had for long in ruins lain.

And Nehemiah builds the wall
Round Judah's city, great and tall.

Then Esther, Jewish maid and wife,
Raised up to save her people's life.

And Job—his patience sorely tried,—
At last God's dealings justified.

Then come the Psalms, whose sacred page
Is full of truth for every age.

The Proverbs, which the wise man spake,
For all who will their teachings take.

Ecclesiastes show how vain
The very best of earthly gain.

The Song, how much we need to prize
The treasure set above the skies.

Isaiah, first of prophets, who
Foretells the future of the Jew.

Then Jeremiah, scorned by foes,
Yet weeps for faithless Israel's woes.

The Lamentations tell, in part,
The sadness of this prophet's heart.

Ezekiel tells, in mystic story,
Departing and returning glory.

Then Daniel, from the lion's den,
By power Divine, is raised again.

Hosea shows the Father's heart
So grieved for sin on Ephraim's part.

And Joel tells of judgment near;
The wicked nations quake and fear.

Then Amos, from the herdmen sent,
Calls hardened sinners to repent.

In Obadiah, Edom's fall
Contains a warning word to all.

Jonah, though prophet of the Lord,
Yet fled to Tarshish from His word.

Then Micah sings in sweetest lays
The glory of millennial days.

And Nahum tells the fear and gloom
Of Ninevah and of her doom.

Habakkuk—though the fig tree fail,
His faith and trust in God prevail.

Then Zephaniah tells of grace,
And love that comes in judgment's place.

And Haggai in the latter days
Repeats: "Consider well your ways."

In Zachariah's wondrous book
We find eight visions, if we look.

Then Malachi, the last of all,
Speaks sadly still of Israel's fall,

INDIAN ROBBERS.

Robbery on the largest scale ever known was carried on once in India under the system known as Thuggee. This was the most extraordinary system of crime the world has ever seen. Its operations extended over thousands of miles of country. Its victims would have populated many a small kingdom. It carried on crime under religious sanctions and with religious ceremonies, made theft holy and murder sacred. It killed in a cold-blooded, ruthless, wholesale way. It held human life as of no account. It had no respect for weakness, age or innocence. When a company of travelers—against whom its operations were chiefly directed—had come within its coil, it allowed none to escape. It slew all—the father and mother, the grandsire and the babe in arms; man, woman and child. It used no baleful drugs, no deadly weapon. It dealt out destruction by the simplest of all means—a handkerchief. Though the confederation numbered thousands of members, it carried on its work of robbery and slaughter undetected, if not unsuspected, for years, even under British rule.

Gang-robbery with violence was also very prevalent in India when it was first conquered, and also for some time after. This is known in India as Dacoitee, and in many parts of the country all robbers and thieves were once called Dacoits. Dacoitee is of two kinds. The first is the attack on a shop, warehouse or private dwelling. This is not the same as burglary; for whereas the burglar enters secretly, and only resorts to force in the last extremity, the Dacoitee is an open attack by an armed body of men. The place is carried by open assault. If a closed door bars the way it is simply burst open. The robbers are well armed, carrying swords and iron-shod clubs, and sometimes even matchlocks; and resistance tends to wounds and deaths. This flagrant and open breach of the law has been suppressed in great measure, though not altogether.

The attack is generally made on the house of a rich banker or the shop of a jeweler in some small town where the police force is not very strong, or on the house of a rich zemindar (landowner) of a village. One case of the latter kind, which occurred in a village at the time when I was encamped not far from it, was managed thus. The zemindar was reported to have a large sum of money buried in the house—a common way of keeping it in India, the house being built in the usual Eastern fashion—namely, round a central court-yard. The lower story was simply an open corridor or cloister, and was used for domestic offices and the stabling of cows and horses, and had no windows on the outside. To its full height there was nothing but a smooth surface of wall. The upper story, the dwelling-place proper, had windows on the outside; but these, as usual, were very small, and high up. When the massive gates were closed of an evening the house was, in fact, a fortification, with the household for a garrison, and entry was almost impossible.

The old zemindar and his two sons were seated in the gateway enjoying the cool evening air. Their two or three man-servants were busied about the house, inside and outside. It was just getting dusk when there was heard on the road which passed through the village the usual cry of pilgrims proceeding to some sacred shrine: "Bom bom Mahadeo" (Great, great is Mahadeo), and "Gunga mai ki jye" (Victory to Mother Gange). And now the first pilgrim of the company came in sight. There was nothing suspicious in his appearance. He looked a simple pilgrim, and was barefooted; in one hand he carried his shoes; with the other he steadied the long bamboo pole which rested on one shoulder, and from each end of which hung the wicker-work baskets which hold the bottles, or rather flasks, in which water is carried from the sacred rivers to some far-distant shrine. He stopped in front of the old zemindar. "How far is it, father, to the next good well by the roadside? for there we mean to rest for the night."

"Two miles, my son," replied the old man.

"The water in the well is good?"

"It is."

"And the grove near it is a good one to sleep in?"

"Yes."

"Perhaps there is a bunya's (grain-dealer's) shop near it where we could get some flour?"

"No; there is not."

"Then how far is the next well and resting-place?"

"Two miles more."

"And is the water in that well good?"

"Thou asketh many questions," said the old man.

But the purpose of the questioning had been gained; the seeming pilgrims had been moving in single file; it had given them time to come up and form a group.

Some of them had put down their poles and baskets, as if to rest themselves. But now the baskets were slipped off, the staves taken in hand and a rush made on the old man and his sons and servants, who were soon overpowered, and the robbers in possession of the house, while some kept guard outside. They carried no arms, so as to avoid suspicion after the robbery as well as before it. But a heavy "male" bamboo club is a formidable weapon. Torture was soon applied to the old man to make him reveal where his treasure was buried.

Two little grandchildren, a boy and a girl, were seized, and the heavy clubs held over their heads with a threat of dashing their brains out if the old man did not confess speedily. He did so. The rupees were dug up and distributed among the band, whereupon the robbers moved off and kept together until they got clear of the village, when they separated, going across country singly or by twos and threes, and by the time the police arrived from the nearest station they had a good two hours' start.

The second kind of Dacoitee is robbery on the highway. Here the gang of robbers attack a party of travelers, rob carts conveying goods, and sometimes stop and plunder the mail cart.

A trader was going from one town to another with a good deal of money and some valuable goods. He had with him two carts and two servants. As he was moving along a frequented highway, he deemed himself safe from all danger.

But one evening, in a somewhat infrequented spot, a gang of robbers, looking like travelers, suddenly set on him and his servants, overpowered them, gagged and bound them, and then, taking them off the road, left them in a piece of scrub, where it was not likely they would be discovered until next morning.

One of the robbers then dressed himself in the trader's clothes—almost every occupation in India has a special dress—and assumed his part. The two others acted as his servants. They got into another and more-frequented road, along which police stations were established at short intervals. Going up to the first, the sham trader represented that he was most anxious to push on that night; that he had a good deal of valuable property with him; that he thought some robbers had got wind of this, and asked that he might have a policeman to escort him from one station to another.

And so the police actually escorted the robbers with their booty to a large town at some distance off, reaching which they soon disposed of the carts and all their contents.

Cattle-lifting is a form of robbery very prevalent in some parts of India, more especially in the neighborhood of woods and forests, into which the stolen cattle can be driven. It prevails in the country lying between the Ganges and the Jumna, as the forest tract at the foot of the Himalaya affords the needful hiding-ground. A pair of stolen bullocks will be driven to this forest from the village where they were lifted, twenty-five or thirty miles off, in the course of the night.

The ordinary forms of robbery, simple theft from the house or person, done secretly and not openly, and where craft takes the place of force, are of course the most common. Here everything depends on quietness of movement and sleight-of-hand, in both of which the Indian thief has attained great perfection. Then he is accustomed to go barefoot. His tread is habitually light. His limbs are naturally supple, and are made more so by the use of unguents, which enable him to roll himself up into a marvelously small space.

The delicious coolness of the night has succeeded the fierce heat of a day in May. The moonlight makes a mimic day; but how soft is its light, however bright, compared with the sunlight of a few hours before! A party of travelers, having cooked and eaten their frugal meal, have now spread their carpets and quilts on the ground in the mango grove, and laid themselves down to sleep. All is now silent, save when the jackals rend the air with their horrid cries. A jackal gives a yelp on one side of the grove; another answers with a howl from the other side. These are not jackals, but confederate thieves, one of whom enters the grove at the end farthest from where the sleeping travelers lie. On his stomach he steals quietly along from one tree to another. Some leaves rustle; a traveler calls out; whereupon the stealthy one coils himself into a heap and lies dead still, and will so lie for half an hour or more, if necessary.

A "jackal" howls quite near the grove, as if it had just crossed it and rustled the leaves. The thief drags himself along the ground again. At length he reaches the head of the sleeping row of travelers. He passes his hand quietly under the pillows. This fat man is the rich man of the party; that bundle which he uses for a pillow probably contains something valuable. The dusky thief removes it gently without waking the snoring sleeper. He next makes this other man turn over on his pillow by gentle touches on the face; and, having got what he wanted, creeps gently away. One of the extemporized jackals gives a bark here, the other a short howl there; and the two thieves meet and decamp together.

When out for the night, the thieves strip themselves of all their clothing except a short, tight loin-cloth, and smear themselves with oil, so as to be able to slip out of the grasp of any one seizing them. They seldom carry arms, in the ordinary sense, but strap a couple of light spear-heads to each forearm, with the points projecting beyond the elbows, with a backward stroke of which they can give a severe if not deadly wound to any one trying to seize them. Generally, however, they carry a small, sharp knife.

The houses of many of even the well-to-do natives have mud walls only, through which the thieves dig a hole to effect an entry. This requires long, quiet, and patient work. A great number of the Indian stories about robbers turn on this mode of proceeding; how one woman alone in the house with her children waited quietly until the thief put his head through the hole, and killed him with a blow of an ax; how another waited with a rope in her hand, and, the thief this time putting his heels in first, she tied his ankles quickly together and took him prisoner; but when the neighbors appeared they found only a headless trunk.

English people in India are seldom robbed, though for half the year the doors of the bungalows in which they live are left wide open, for the sake of coolness, all night long. The chief reason is that the articles in the house are so different from those in use among the natives themselves that the attempt to dispose of them would at once attract suspicion. A thief in India trying to sell a spoon or fork would be like an English thief trying to dispose of an altar-cloth or rare gem. Another reason is, that every householder keeps a chokedar or private watchman, though it is not the personal prowess or vigilance of this often very aged man that potects you—he himself being a thief by caste or profession, and his salary forming the blackmail you pay the confraternity. Dogs are also a source of protection. The native thief with his bare legs is especially afraid of them. A good many robberies, however, take place when people are marching about the country during the cold weather. It is so easy to enter a tent, either by creeping under the canvas or by making a slit in it; and this reminds me of a case in which one of those thieves showed a great knowledge of psychology. A lady and her husband were asleep in their tent; the lady was disturbed by a noise, and saw by the light of the lamp, which hung from the tent-pole, that a thief was gliding about making up a bundle of things that he thought would suit him. This bundle he had placed on a table which stood not far from the bed. As he glided up to the table to add another article to the mass, his eyes and those of the lady met. She had half opened her mouth, in order to scream and awaken her husband, when the man made one long step to the side of the bed and simply made a pass with his hand over the lady's face. She was at once paralyzed for several minutes; the man kept his eyes fixed on hers while he gathered up his bundle of things; then, just as the long-delayed scream burst from her lips, he dived under the curtain of the tent and disappeared.

The Girl and the Hen.

In the village of Pandapura, hard by the town of Savatthi, there lived a girl, who by tasting a turtle's egg contracted a great liking for hen's eggs. The hen seeing the greedy girl eating the egg she laid daily bore a grudge against her, and a strong wish arose within her that in her re-birth she might become a ghoul and eat up the girl's offspring. In the course of time the hen died and became a cat in the same house, and the girl on her death became a hen in her mother's house. Whenever the hen laid an egg the cat, out of grudge to her, ate it up. After this had happened several times, the hen prayed that she might be so reborn as to be able to devour the cat and all her progeny. The girl dying and leaving the condition of a hen was reborn a leopard, and the cat in due time reappeared as a deer; the deer gave birth to a fawn, and the leopard, who still bore her a grudge, ate them both up. In this way, during the course of 500 existences, each of them devoured each other in turn. In their last existence the girl regained her human form and the cat became a ghoul, and both were converted by the Buddha's discourse, which was to this effect: "No one must bear a grudge against another, saying, 'He has injured me, he has beaten, he has robbed me, he has conquered me,' for if he does this, hatred will be repeated successively in future existences; but if no grudge be borne, enmity subsides." This round of rebirth often brought about some very curious and complicated relations, as in the case of the uncharitable Brahmin who always dined with closed doors and windows, lest he should be disturbed by importunate beggars. One day, when he was dining, along with his wife and child, off a fowl, Buddha appeared before him as a mendicant, and upbraided him for his inhospitable conduct, and with the family disgrace with which he was involved. In a former birth, the bird the Brahmin had just eaten was his father; the little boy, his son, had been a demon and had eaten the father, and his wife, in former days, had been his mother.—Contemporary Review.

"GENTLEMEN of the jury," said an Irish lawyer, "it will be for you to say whether the defendant shall be allowed to come into court with unblushing footsteps, with a cloak of hypocrisy in his mouth, and draw three bullocks out of my client's pocket with impunity."

HOW OFFICIALS SWEAR.

A Comparison of Oaths of Loyalty Taken in Different Countries.

[From the New York Times.]

A comparison of the official oaths of several countries, apropos of the Bradlaugh affairs, is not uninteresting. France demands no oath, nor even any equivalent formality, before her Legislators enter upon their duties. Even under the empire, the Deity was not called upon, the simple formula being: "I swear fidelity to the Emperor and the constitution." In Austria, also, there is no oath, but, in reply to a question from the President of the Reichsrath whether the new member "promises loyalty and obedience to the Emperor, inviolable observance of the constitution, as well as other laws, and conscientious fulfillment of his duty," the new member simply replies, "I promise." The reason that the members of the German Parliament take no oath is that many of them are under an oath of allegiance to their respective states in the German federation; and so a conflict of duty might arise if two oaths were insisted upon. The Prussian members of Parliament take an oath beginning "I swear by God the omnipotent and omniscient," and ending "so may God help me. As if this were not enough, those who choose, it is provided, may add, "through Jesus Christ to eternal bliss, amen." The Spanish Deputies are put through something of a catechism. The Secretary asks them: "Do you swear to observe, and to make others observe the constitution of the Spanish monarchy? Do you swear obedience to the legitimate King of Spain, Alfonso XII.? Do you swear well and true to behave in the mission confided to you by the nation, always and in everything seeking the welfare of the nation?" The answer expected is, "Yes, I do swear," and the replication is, "If you do so, may God reward you, and if you do not, may He call you to account." In 1879, it may be said, Senor Castelar and fifteen others were the Bradlaughs of Spain, but their objections were not based on religious or irreligious grounds. In Italy the President of the Chamber of Deputies says with elaborate politeness, "I invite the honorable gentleman to take oath in the form following: "I swear to be faithful to the King and to observe loyalty to the fundamental statute and the other laws of the state, with a single view to the inseparable welfare of the King and the country." The new Deputy responds with the single word, "Giurgo," (I swear). The oath to which Mr. Bradlaugh objects seems harmless enough. It reads:

"I do swear that I will be faithful and bear allegiance to her Majesty, Queen Victoria, her heirs and successors, according to law; so help me God." Obviously, any man who believes in God, whether Jew or Mohammedan or Christian, might honorably assent to every letter of this oath. And so, too, of course, might any man who believes in one God at all. For him the oath lacks its usual sanction, and scrupulous honor might lead him to point this out at the time of complying with the custom of oath talking; but there can be no doubt that dozens, perhaps scores, of other members of Parliament do not agree with Mr. Bradlaugh in the view of the subject. He, having explained his position once for all, cannot be expected to be forever explaining and objecting, and so cannot be blamed for swearing. The United States, it is generally known, have two oaths, but their precise forms are familiar.

Something in a Name.

A Hungarian gentleman, C. G—s, occupying a prominent official position in an association of his countrymen in San Francisco, relates an amusing story of a singular contretemps attending his debut in this city. His first name is Cornelius, which in Hungarian is spelled Cornel. Like any business man and stranger, he found frequent necessity after his arrival in the city to act as his own master of ceremonies, and introduce himself, which he did after the foreign custom, stating his name in full, without any prefix of Mr. or Herr. He was astounded at the free-and-easy manner which characterized Americans. "Cornel G—s," he would say on encountering a stranger, perhaps the father of a family. "Ah, Cornel G—s," would be the genial response, "happy to make your acquaintance; Cornel, ladies, Cornel G—s," and the bold California girls would take up the refrain and address him as familiarly by his Christain name as if he had been their brother. Sometimes inquiries were made which perplexed him. "Did you participate in the late war between France and Germany, Cornel?" "No, sir." "Ah! In what companies have you served?" "In none, sir. I have never been a soldier." The confused expression of his interlocutor and giggles from mischievous young ladies only served to mystify him more and more. At last he grew offended—indignant. One of his new acquaintances, an elderly gentleman of considerable dignity, met him on the street and hailed him loudly: "How are you to-day, Cornel?" "How are you to-day, Johnnie?" returned the irate Hungarian gentleman. The old gentleman looked murderous at this affront. "How dare you call me Johnnie, sir?" "How dare you call me Cornel?" Explanations ensued, and when it transpired that the name had been naturally mistaken for the sobriquet of "Colonel," both parties had a hearty laugh and shook hands over the mistake, but the foreigner now resolutely writes and pronounces his name with an initial only before it.—San Francisco Cronicle.

Boiled Eggs Flavored with Truffles.

Truffled boiled eggs owe their discovery to the forgetfulness and negligence of a cook. The epicurean master one day brought home some truffles, and gave them to his cook, with the injunction to keep them for the preparation of a pheasant that was to grace his board. The cook, not knowing where to put the precious tubercles, placed them into a glass jar where she kept her eggs. The next morning, at breakfast, the Marquis de Cussy and his friend had boiled eggs. "But your eggs are truffled!" suddenly exclaimed the sharp-scented Marquis. "Certainly they are," replied the host, "But how do you manage it?" "I feed my chickens on rasped truffles!" "No! joking aside, call up your cook and let her explain," said the Marquis. The cook came, and said that she had put the truffles into a glass globe full of eggs, the globe had been shut with a cork plug, and kept covered for twenty-four hours; the shell of the eggs seemed to be permeable, and the subtle perfume of the truffles had penetrated the meat of the eggs.—Parisian.

Even Burglars Are Rushed.

"Why," he replied to a cop, "I never saw so much push and rush in Detroit since the war, and I presume it is so all over the country. The boom even extends to my profession, which you are aware is that of burglary. I haven't been so rushed in ten years. I have advertised in a dozen papers for a 'pal,' but can't get one at any price. Third-class men, only fit to put up ladders, hold lighted candles, pound with a sledge, and swear an alibi, are getting their own prices this year. The two I had struck for $7 a day apiece, and I had to pay it or let my business go to ruin. You have no idea of the number of chances we have had for 'jobs' this year, and the season is promising all that any burglar could ask for. I am so pushed that I hardly know which way to turn first."

"Anything very big on hand?"

"Oh! a dozen of 'em. I ought to go up Woodward avenue to-night and rob a house where two back windows have been left up for a whole week, but I may not get around to it because one of my pals is dead drunk in his room upstairs. Then there's a splendid show down Fort street. Two of the back doors won't lock, some of the chamber windows are unfastened, and there's half a cord of silverware piled up in one room. Duty tells me that I ought to take it in right away, but something may prevent. Dear me, but I wish I could hire at least three first-class burglars for the next six weeks. I've got a special lay for them."

"Anything startling?"

"Well, no. There's a bank in Toledo we could get at very handy, a jeweler over in Chicago who aches to be robbed, and I know of a farmer out here a few miles who has $3,000 in gold in the house. If I had two good men I could gather in at least $50,000 within the next ten days; but this boom has taken me all aback. I need two full sets of burglar tools right off, but my blacksmith is rushed with other work, and must delay me. I went yesterday to see about wigs and whiskers, and found a dozen orders ahead of me."

"It's unfortunate."

"Well, I should say so! It just makes my heart ache to know that scores of back doors are unlocked, hundreds of windows left open, heaps of silver and jewelry left kicking around, and here I am so fixed that I can't half push business. I'm nervous and uneasy, but I can't mend matters as I see. If you happen to come across a first-class hall-thief and a pair of professional cracksmen, I wish you'd send 'em to me. I'll guarantee the very highest wages and steady employment for the season."—Detroit Free Press.

The Leslie Assignment.

When the final proceeding in the matter of the Frank Leslie assignment was taken, an order was entered acquitting Mr. Isaac W. England, the assignee, from all further obligation to the trust, and discharging and releasing the bondsmen who had become his sureties in the sum of $100,000, and canceling their bond.

The case has been a remarkable one, and probably stands unparalleled in the judicial history of New York. It is peculiar in that it probably is the only instance on record where an assigned estate, instead of being sold in accordance with the provisions of the assignment, has been carried on by the assignee in the interest of the creditors for a period of nearly four years. The experiment was a hazardous one, but in this case it seems to have been attended with the best results.

The estate, at the time it came into the possession of the assignee, was inventoried at $75,000, and was incumbered by debts amounting to about $400,000. In less than four years the assignee compromised with, and obtained releases from, all the creditors, and turned over to the executrix of Mr. Frank Leslie, who had meantime died, an estate worth certainly not less than half a million dollars.

Though several millions of dollars passed through Mr. England's hands during his assigneeship, his accounts were passed without the challenge of a dollar.

In these days, when so much has to be published about delinquent trustees and estates absorbed in the process of administration, it is gratifying to find so conspicuous an illustration of a trust faithfully and wisely administered.

Geraniums.

For constancy of bloom the geranium is unequaled. Small plants, that can be bought very cheap, if put out in May, will completely fill a bed in three weeks after planting, and early in June will be a mass of flowers, and continue getting better and better until blackened by the frosty nights of autumn. While other plants are wilting under the scorching rays of our summer sun, the geranium seems to glory in the hottest weather. There is such a variation in the color of the flower, as well as in the form and color of the leaves, that with a few varieties of geraniums a more artistic and varied bed can be made than with almost any other flower. The center of a large bed may be scarlet, with light colors around, or a few rows on the border may be of the silver-leaved kinds. Indeed, we have seen delicate and intricate patterns formed of geraniums alone in some of the celebrated gardens of Europe.

THERE are many amazing superstitions still prevalent among the herring fishermen of England and Scotland. For years the Manx fishers durst not put to sea without a dead wren to ward off storms and disaster. This was due to a tradition of a Jes spirit which hunted the herrings and was attended by storms; at length it took the form of a wren and flew away. Consequently a dead wren was thought to keep things straight. As lately as 1854 the herring fishery, being very bad at Banff, Scotland, some fishermen dressed a cooper in a flannel shirt "with bars stuck all over it," and carried him in procession through the town in a handbarrow. This was done to bring better luck.

IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

Most gratefully yours,

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

THE white of an egg into which a piece of alum about the size of a walnut has been stewed until it forms a jelly is a fine remedy for sprains. It should be laid over the sprain on a piece of lint and changed as often as it becomes dry.

A MEDICAL journal gives the following simple remedy for relieving hiccough: "Inflate the lungs as fully as possible and thus press firmly on the agitated diaphragm. In a few seconds the spasmodic action of the muscles will cease."

A STANDING antidote for poison by dew, poison oak, ivy, etc., is to take a handful of quicklime, dissolve in water, let it stand half an hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated cases.

THE cure for night sweats depends entirely on the cause. Malaria gives rise to it, and then the cure is quinine and arsenic. Debility may cause them. In that case tonics and good, nutritious food should be used. Consumption causes it, and the cure is sulphuric acid, ten to twenty drops in water, an hour after meals. Oxide of zinc and hydrocyanite extract pills, and, above all, atrophia sulphate, one-two hundredths of one grain to begin with. This must be taken with great care. Dr. Nairn, of London, says he sponges the body with tincture of belladonna, but the drug is too powerful to be used by any one but a physician.

MILK, says Dr. J. H. Hanaford, contains all of the elements needed to sustain life in the young, and is one of the simplest in use—wholesome, if it is pure. Its purity depends on the health of the producer, and that largely on the quality of the food eaten. If at first pure, it may become otherwise by carelessness. To keep it in tins, made of lead and arsenic, if it become sour, especially, is to endanger the life of the family. If uncovered or in any way exposed to fresh paint, or to filth or poison in any form, it soon becomes affected by absorption, since water and all liquids containing it are grand purifiers of the air, these impurities being retained in the liquids. Never keep milk in a newly-painted pantry—only water, and that to be thrown out.

CORN silk is said to be an efficient and powerful remedy for dropsy, bladder troubles and diseases of the kidneys. The Louisville Medical News gives an account of the medical properties of corn silk, and the cures that have been effected by its use. The way to use it is to take two double-handfuls of fresh corn silk and boil in two gallons of water until but one gallon remains. Add sugar to make a sirup. Drink a tumbler of this thrice daily, and it will relieve dropsy by increasing the flow of the urine most enormously. Other diseases of the bladder and kidneys are benefited by the remedy, which is prompt, efficient and grateful to the stomach. The treatment can be continued for months without danger or inconvenience.

Brother Gardner on the Revised New Testament.

"I take pleasure an' satisfaction," said the President, as he held up a parcel, "in informin' you a worthy citizen of Detroit, who does not car' to have his name menshun'd, has presented dis revised edishun of the Bible to de Lime-kiln Club. How Shot Are Made.

A shot-tower is certainly a curious place to the uninitiated visitor, and the process of manufacturing the leaden missiles is most interesting. Of course it is necessary that the shot should fall from a considerable elevation, and the height of many of the towers is over 200 feet. As pure lead will not make perfect globules, it is necessarily "tempered." This "temper" is prepared by the addition of ingredients, of which arsenic is the main property. It is run into bars convenient for use, and with pig-lead hoisted to the top of the tower. Here are two small rooms, one about twelve feet below the other, and each containing two huge kettles, in which the pig-lead and the "temper" are melted. From one or the other of the two kettles in both rooms—as each room has a separate shaft—streams of shot are constantly flowing. At the bottom of each kettle the molten stuff pours into square pans perforated at one side. These perforations are large or small, according to the size of shot desired, and separate the mass into distinct, delicate, gleaming streams, which in turn, as they come in contact with the atmosphere, separate into perfect globules, or shot, which are cooled in their 200-feet journey and the water into which they fall below.

An Exciting Incident.

The Augusta (Maine) Journal relates an exciting incident of somnambulism, at Clinton, that State, the subject of which, Miss Sadie Lord, is a young lady of sixteen years. Miss Lord is an active young body, and sometimes the events of waking hours so crowd into her dreams that she commits strange freaks. Her father is dead, and she lives with her mother and brother on a farm. On the night in question, mother and daughter went to bed early and were soon asleep. The young man came in soon afteward and retired to his chamber over his mother's apartment. About half-past nine Mrs. Lord awoke. She was horrified to find her daughter gone. The mother listened a moment and then heard some one moving in an adjoining room. She at once proceeded to the spot, and found Sadie putting on her clothes and fast asleep. She called her name softly, not wishing to rudely awaken the dreamer. The moment her mother spoke the girl grasped a shawl, and, half clothed as she was, ran out doors like a startled deer. Mrs. Lord tried to follow her, and could discern the outlines of her little form hastening toward the railroad track. It was time for the Pullman train from Bangor. The mother could hear the shrill whistle in the distance. What if her darling should be crushed beneath the cruel wheels? She saw the moving lantern of one of the section men, and shouted to him to intercept the fugitive. But he did not hear her. The train came nearer. The great headlight of the locomotive threw a dazzling path of light adown the track. The girl, unconscious of her danger, crossed right in front of the engine and narrowly escaped from the jaws of death. Heaving a great sigh of relief that her darling was safe from imminent peril, the mother returned to the house and called up her son. He hastily dressed and continued the search fully an hour, when he aroused the neighborhood to assist him. The church bell was rung, and the entire community turned out. A little after midnight the wanderer was found. She had crawled under the barn belonging to Charles Baker, about one-third of a mile from her home, and had nestled beside a great ox-cart, where she was slumbering as peacefully as if she was in her own comfortable bed. She was gently awakened and taken home.

[From the DesMoines (Iowa) State Register.]

WE NOTICE the following in an exchange: Mr. G. B. Haverer, foreman N. Y. & N. H. S. B. Co., suffered for eight days with terrible pain in the back, almost to distraction, until he heard of and used St. Jacobs Oil, one bottle of which cured him completely.

He Was Just Out.

Some of our city stores are constantly annoyed by children coming to the door and asking for cards, empty boxes and that sort of things. The clerks are, of course, down on the youngsters, and the warfare never ends. The other day a little girl opened a store door, and sticking her head in called out.

"Say mister, have you got any empty boxes?"

"No," said the clerk, not very politely.

"Got any cards?"

"No."

"Got any almanacs?"

"No."

"Got any empty bottles?"

"No."

"Got any pictures?"

"No."

"Got any sense?"

"No—yes—no—yes—you miserable little wretch," and the clerk flew out the door, but the youngster was up in the next alley making faces at him, and he came back madder than he had been since his salary was reduced.—Steubenville Herald.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.]

EDGAR T. PAGE, Esq., druggist, writes us from Chicopee Falls, that Mr. Albert Guenther, under Wild's Hotel, has used that remarkable remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, for a severe case of rheumatism and it cured him as if by magic. He also used it with great success among his horses, in cases of sprains, sores, etc., and it cured every time.

The Art of Dining.

Thomas Walker has written a book called "Aristology; or, The Art of Dining." Six or at most eight persons, he says, are the proper number to be seated at one table; "for complete enjoyment a company ought to be one; sympathizing and drawing together, listening and talking in due proportions—no monopolists, nor any ciphers." Small, unceremonious bachelors' dinners, he adds, are those that he likes best, because "gentlemen keep more in view the real ends, whereas ladies think principally of display and ornament, of form and ceremony—not all, for some have excellent notions of taste and comfort; and the cultivation of them would seem to be the peculiar province of the sex, as one of the chief features in household management. There is one female failing in respect to dinners which I cannot help here noticing—and that is a very inconvenient love of garnish and flowers, either natural or cut in turnips and carrots, and stuck on dishes, so as to greatly impede carving and helping. This is the true barbarian principle of ornament, and is in no way distinguishable from the 'untutored Indian's' fondness for feathers and shells."

Toodles Always Kept a Coffin in his house. Had he lived now he would have kept Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Too Smart.

Some men, and boys also, are so smart as to think they can dispense with honesty. Such usually overreach themselves, as did the boy referred to here:

A youngster was sent by his parent to take a letter to the postoffice and pay the postage on it. The boy returned highly elated, and said, "Father, I seed a lot of men putting letters in a little place; and, when no one was looking, I slipped yours in for nothing."

ENGLAND manages to get along with the use of $50,000,000 worth of liquor annually.

The Osculatory Art.

Beginning with Bernhardt, her osculation is described as a convulsive hug, accompanied by a kiss that seems to come from just back of the spine, but which has no explosion to it. Fanny Davenport has a different style entirely. She catches "Armand" just as a Western New York girl does the fellow she means to marry, gives him a tender yet robust squeeze, and kisses him with a fervor that can be heard clear to the Custom-house. No nonsense about that kiss, and if Ed Price gets 'em regular in private life he ought to be contented. In the opinion of many Fanny's kiss discounts the kiss Emma Abbot carries around with her, packed in the ice to keep it fresh. Emma's kiss was learned away in the West, but never practiced much till after she was married to a Boston druggist. The first words of praise of it came from an actor whom she nearly strangled in a luxurious embrace. He never got over it, and raves about it to this day.

How sadly different is Mary Anderson in her kisses! They are delivered at a temperature of 40 degrees below zero. Said an actor whom she had once partly congealed: "When I was a boy I was induced by false and fleeting friends one winter day to place my tongue against a lamp-post. The experience was so unutterably agonizing. So was that of my kiss from Mary Anderson."

Scott-Siddons' kiss is peculiar; a peck like a bird, and a chirrup that sounds like a "chip." It's all over with that. But she's such a dainty body that he who is kissed aches because it is over so soon. Mrs. Siddons is fond of English decollete, or low-necked style, probably because she has about the finest neck and bust in the world.

Janauschek's kisses are but rare, and they are very matronly. They come with words that are growled forth from a deeply-imbedded diaphragm, and are mere touches, not like Soldene's used to be in the old days, when she gave her stage lovers the full benefit of the mammoth cave that yawns across her face. There is more kiss to the square foot of Soldene's mouth than that of any other woman upon the stage. Alice Oates did some pretty kissing, especially just after her ninth marriage, when varied experience had made her a mistress of styles. She could kiss high tragedy or low comedy, and between the two extremes ring in every known variety from Modjeska's stately iciness to Pauline Markham's smack. With her twelfth and present husband, however, she has got to go slow on the kiss racket for he won't stand it.—Buffalo Telegraph.

HEADACHE, billious attacks, dizziness, and loss of appetite, are cured by Kidney-Wort.

Railway Dangerous.

Blindness to danger produced by living among it with impunity seems almost universal. We believe that the best authorities recommend that night watchmen in big buildings should be frequently changed, because when a man has made a certain round every night for years, or even months, and has never found a fire or a thief, he becomes quite blind to either of these should he chance to meet them later on. See how this blindness would tell in the case of a driver of an express train. He has, perhaps, to make a journey of one hundred miles, and stop, perhaps, three times, but has to pass thirty, forty, or more signals. If the traffic is well regulated he may travel this road for months together without ever finding one of these signals of "danger;" but were he to get in a condition of danger-blindness and not look out for these signals the result would probably be that there would be a terrible accident. He must go on assuming that every signal is at danger, though never in his experience has it been found to be so. He must also exercise patient and untiring vigilance in inspecting and testing his enemies; trust no one, but see that all is right for himself. At sea fire drill and "man overboard" drill are carried out, and in the military service false alarms of fire or attack are given to exercise the men in vigilance and promptness of action; but on a line of railway this is impossible. Punctuality in the running of the trains is of the first importance, so that when something goes wrong the staff must deal with it, as it were, by instinct, and how well they do it is obvious from the comparatively few accidents that happen. How danger is often warded off by courage and intelligence the general public seldom learn.—Saturday Review.

How to Make a Tramp.

Next to spending money that you meant to save there is nothing in the world so easy to do as to make a tramp. Select any personal acquaintance who loses his situation—and there are many such—and when he comes to you to tell you of his troubles, supposing you to be a friend, devote your time entirely to explaining to him the various steps by which he reached his present condition. Tell him you are sorry, if you like, but show him distinctly that you want to get away from him as soon as possible. When next he calls upon you, if in his desperation he forgets his last experience so far as to call, be careful to be very busy and unable to talk with him. Cut him severely if he wants to borrow money and discourage him if he unfolds any new business plan. If men in your own business circle chance to mention him in your presence speak condescendingly about him. Advise your wife not to call at his house, for fear she may lose caste by visiting a bankrupt, and if your children have been in the habit of visiting his family devise a method of dissuading them. If you see him coming along the sidewalk as if he would meet you, look the other way. Do not invite him to any little party such as he has often attended at your house. If the foregoing directions are faithfully followed and your friends act like you, as most of them may be depended upon to do, the chances are that the poor fellow, if he does not soon find employment in the city, will send his wife home to her mother, make some excuse to get out of town in search of a mythical business chance, and then slowly but surely degenerate into a tramp; for what else can he do?—New York Herald.

"NASTY" is the favorite English adjective before a pet name, and "you nasty pet," "you nasty old love," spoken in a caressing voice, sounds strangely to American ears. "Awfully jolly ghastly" is also a pet term with our transatlantic cousins.

Traveling in Russia.

Dr. Thomas, a dentist of Vienna, was summoned to Kirwin, in Russian Poland, to perform a dental operation upon the Countess Waleska. At the border station of Radjwilow he was stopped, required to show his passport and have his baggage searched. His name at once awakened suspicion from its resemblance to that of Thomassen, the infernal-machine man of Bremerhaven; and, when the officials found a mysterious apparatus in his baggage this suspicion became fixed and positive, and the unfortunate dentist narrowly escaped faring roughly. He tried to explain the working of the apparatus, but without much avail; and when he was finally allowed to go on his way a detective accompanied him until he met the servants and carriage of the Countess. The machine, however, had been previously confiscated. Such is traveling in Russia.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND., JUNE 30, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

SITUATION at Albany unchanged.

TOMBSTONE, Arizona, had a disastrous fire last week. Loss about $25,000.

The Wabash Courier is authority for the statement that a dry-goods firm from Butler, in this county, will soon locate at North Manchester.

Judge Robert Lowry will deliver the fourth of July oration at Angola this year, and Hon. A. P. Edgerton will speak an Antwerp on the same day.

In a store in Bourbon last week, a babe got hold of some kerosene oil and drank a quantity of it. The little thing got deathly sick for a while, but finally recovered.

Some one knocked the corner-stone out of a church near Wabash a few days ago. They wanted $4 00 in coin which had been deposited in the stone, and got it.

A young man near Seymour, Ind., was hunting squirrels one day recently. He saw one, as he thought, in a Mulberry tree, shot at it, and out tumbled a man. He was seriously, but it is thought, not dangerously hurt.

THE government is again announced as "just ready to begin the prosecution of the star route theives." Brady says he is ready, and Dorsey claims to be anxious to get his case into court, and now what are they waiting for?

Some young men went into the river at South Bend a week ago last Sunday to bathe. After enjoying themselves awhile, they started to swim down the river past the Singer shops, when one of the number, a young French Canadian, from some unknown cause, lost his presence of mind and was drowned. He was an employe of the Singer works, named Chaussi.

Lagrange Democrat: While in Pierceton Saturday we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. J. A. Barns, editor of the Auburn COURIER, and having a pleasant chat with him. Mr. B is proving himself to be as efficient in the newspaper business as in the office of county superintendent. Through a change in the complexion of the county board he was let out of the position, but at the late election was placed back in his old position. DeKalb county cannot afford to lose so excellent an educator as he.

We take the following very comforting item from the Churubusco Herald, and need only add that we agree with the concluding sentiment: There is less litigation in Whitley county than in any adjoining county. While the bar-docket runs up into hundreds each term in all the counties around us, ours scarcely ever reaches above a hundred, and a great portion of these are always settled before court convenes. Our attorneys are too honest, they talk compromise too much for their own good here below, but by so doing they may be laying up treasures in the world to come.

At Hoagland, on the Richmond road, south of Fort Wayne, Thomas and William DeVilbus and George Adair were working on a church, the frame of which they had recently raised. It was not properly braced, and a storm coming up suddenly caught the men before they could reach the ground. The frame was torn to pieces, and the men thrown to the ground. Thomas DeVilbus was crushed by the flying timbers before he could rise from the ground, a leg and one arm were broken and other severe injuries received. It is thought he will recover. The other two escaped without serious injury.

THE case of the state ex. rel. of G. B. Adams, prosecutor of the 35th judicial circuit, against H. C. Peterson was last week decided by the Supreme court in favor of Mr. Adams. The decision was made by Judge Woods, the entire bench concurring. The facts were as follows: In 1878 Mr. Adams was elected prosecutor for the circuit composed of Noble, Steuben and DeKalb counties, and was sworn in Oct. 28, 1879, the term of office being two years. The legislature had during the winter of 1879, created a new circuit, making the counties of Steuben and DeKalb the 40th. Mr. Adams being in this circuit, continued to serve as Prosecutor until some time last winter, when Mr. Peterson who had been elected to succeed Mr. Adams, claimed the place, on the ground that the 40th circuit was not now in existence, it having ceased to be a separate circuit according to the term of the law creating it, on the first day of October, 1880. At the spring term of court in DeKalb county, Judge Tousley recognized Mr. Peterson as the prosecuting attorney Mr. Adams then began proceedings against Peterson by a writ of quo warrants. Adams was beaten. Judge Carpenter who was then holding court, deciding that Peterson was entitled to hold the office. Adams then appealed the case to the Supreme court, with the result above stated. This will give him the office until Oct. 28, 1881.

CORRESPONDENCE

Waterloo.

Judge Best has returned from Indianapolis.

Maggie Jackman has closed her school.

Mrs. Fleming, the milliner, has moved away.

Mr. Espy has moved into the house owned by Dr. Kiblinger.

Most of the schools in this neighborhood will close this week.

Samuel Moody has followed the fashion and re-shingled his house.

The Waterloo Rifles expect to be in camp at Pleasant Lake the Fourth.

S. R. Rickel is around again, and his wrist is now much smaller than a St. Louis girl's foot.

Robert Patterson and L. A. Caro were at home over Sunday, and two households were happy.

The base-ball club will play the Pleasant Lake club at the latter place July 4, for a prize of $25.

Frank Blair was at home Friday. He returned to Wawaka next day, accompanied by his sister Ida.

Orson Edge is looking much better, and thinks his foot will soon be a great improvement on the old one.

A. Y. Rosenberry is busy with his feather renovater. He says his business is getting better every year.

The base-ball business is still uppermost in the estimation of our boys, and considering the amount of noise they manage to make while practicing, they do well.

Some of the younger boys are adopting a few of the pastimes of their forefathers. At least they indulged in a little game of snipe hunting one evening last week. The sack has not been heard from.

Our streets are still being improved and beautified. We still insist that Marshal Hoover missed his calling. He should have been a civil engineer. But then he is so set in his way that we can't get him to go back and live his life over again.

The Waterloo Junior base-ball club played the Butler boys at Butler last Saturday, making a score of 32 to 4 in favor of the Juniors. The Butler boys were whitewashed in seven straight innings, and for five innings did not make a first base. As a consequence the Juniors feel elevated; in fact have added a (mental) cubit to their stature, and the Butler boys have gone into second mourning.

They call themselves the stalwarts. That is what the professional men do. By professional men they mean lawyers, doctors, merchants, city officers, and professional jurors. Well, they challenged the base-ball club to a contest the other day. The stakes were to be ice-cream for the crowd, and the B. B. boys now hold the stakes, or did hold it at one time. As to its present whereabouts deponent saith not. The game was an exciting one. One of the professionals caught a fly, and didn't know it, but went groping around in the grass to find the ball. Then he fell a couple of times in catching one ball, but rallied in time to see his side beaten in a score of 32 to 20. The professionals had 54 men put out and the B. B. 27, and it was a poor day for putting out men too.

We copy the following article from the Lagrange Standard: Major Bingham arrived home last Monday from his trip to Fort Niobrara, after the effects and remains of Lieutenant Cherry. He brought with him the certificate of the surgeon of the post, to the effect that the remains should not be shipped at the present, and also a receipt from the quartermaster for the casket, and a pledge that the remains would be sent home as soon as practicable. The major has had a pretty extensive experience in soldiering in the Mexican war and the rebellion; has seen its roughest, and some of its most agreeable phases, but has seen nothing in that line that looked so pleasant as at Fort Niobrara. Though located in a wild country, surrounded by Indians, the officers and soldiers, with a large force of citizen employes, were sheltered in comfortable houses, with nearly all the comforts and refinements of cultivated homes. The officers' wives are all intelligent women, many of them from the most favored circles in the land. In the midst of the wilderness there, is this oasis of intelligence and refinement, and it is made by the American soldier. The major's ride from Omaha was on the railroad running northwest from there, reaching out for the Black Hills. He left the road at Neligh, and then proceeded by private conveyance to the post, about 120 miles. The whole country he describes as being beautiful and rich in soil, but best adapted to grazing. The whole route from here to Omaha shows a magnificent country in agricultural resources, but the sight of its extension four or five hundred miles farther, gives one greatly enlarged conceptions of the great possibilities of the northwest. The major acknowledges such an impression.

AN ORDINANCE

To compel the owners of lots and parts of lots in the incorporated town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, therein named, to plank and repair certain sidewalks.

Whereas, it is the opinion of the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, that public convenience requires the sidewalks along the streets and adjoining the lots and parts of lots hereinafter mentioned to be planked and repaired; therefore, be it ordained by the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana:

Section 1. That the owners and persons in possession of and claiming to own, as hereinafter named, the hereinafter described lots and parts of lots in said town, shall, within 30 days from the taking effect of this ordinance, build and construct along and adjoining the lots and parts of lots they may own or are in possession of and claiming to own, where the said lots and parts of lots front upon and adjoin the streets named, a sidewalk of good and sound pine or oak plank, not less than one and one-half (1½) inches thick, and not more than four (4) inches wide when of oak, and laid crosswise, and not more than twelve (12) inches wide when of pine, to be laid lengthwise and to be placed upon sleepers of sound oak timber, not less than three by five inches in width and thickness, and not more than three (3) feet apart when laid with pine plank and not more then two (2) feet apart when laid with oak plank. Said walks to be six to nine feet wide, as the marshal of said town shall direct, and built on a grade with the street and alley crossing. Said sidewalks to be built along the streets and in front of and adjoining the following-named lots and parts of lots, to-wit:

The west end of lot No. 58, in the western addition, on Jackson street, owned by Hariett Tess.

The south side of the east one-half (½) of lot No. 14, in the western addition on Seventh street, owned by Mary E. Spooner.

"Whoa, Blaze."

SOME ONE DRIVES SIM. TARNEY'S RIG OFF.

Sim. Tarney thought that the Saginaw train wasted too much time running from Auburn to Fort Wayne, and he hooked up his trotting horse to a piano-box buggy and drove down to that city last Saturday. After reaching his destination, he hitched the animal and went forth to transact some business. When he returned his rig was gone, and Sim. was in a terrible dilemma, until his nephew told him that he had the animal put in a livery barn, rubbed down and properly cared for.

A Kind Act.

THE CITIZENS "CHIP IN" AND BUY ISAAC ROTH A HORSE.

It will be remembered that we stated in last week's COURIER that our drayman, Isaac Roth, lost one of his horses. The animal stood upon the banks of the mystic river but a few hours, when the waves of death rolled up and wafted him across. Our generous-hearted citizens took pity upon the old man and raised enough money to purchase another steed, which is not a very handsome loooking animal, but he has the appearance of great endurance and strength, and we would judge from his movements upon our thoroughfares that he will be able to stand, at least, the storms of another winter.

A Bad Strike.

ONE MULE AND TWO HORSES KILLED BY A WABASH TRAIN.

A short time ago, Fred. Kruger, living east of town, lost one of his fine mules by death, and last Saturday had the misfortune to lose the other, together with one eight-year-old mare and a colt two years of age. The railroad fence separated his pasture field from the Wabash track. At one place, there was only a single board, and the horses stepping over this easily went into the railroad grounds where there was plenty of grass. The passenger train going west was under good headway, and the horses ran in front of it until they came to a culvert, when they stopped, and were struck by the engine. The mule and mare were instaintly killed, and the colt, having its leg broken, was put out of misery by the stroke of an ax.

A Strange Incident.

A HORSE THAT BAFFLED THE WITS OF OUR HORSEMEN.

Last Saturday, Johnny Hartman who lives near Feagler's Corners, drove his team to town, and they were apparently as well and hearty as they ever were. He came down Main street pretty rapidly, and turned east on the side street leading to the Central hotel, when in an instant one of the horses, known as the "Hopenix mare," stopped, and all efforts to have her move were in vain. A number of horsemen examined her, but none of them could tell the nature of her ailment. Along in the evening she managed to move enough to get her home, and Jake Nye, of Sedan, the popular veterinary surgeon of these "diggins," was sent for, and said she was struck with paralysis. The horse died Saturday evening, and, upon examination, it was found that the above disease caused her death.

—If you want to see a buggy that will make you Sthair, go 'round to Bill's shop.

—Miss Rosa Shaffer's Sunday-school class will enjoy the pleasures of a pic-nic soon.

—A woman's work is never done, for when she has nothing else to do, she has her hair to fix.

—According to the Hot Springs Star, the people down there are suffering terribly with the heat.

—Two colored "gemmen," with fiddle and de bow, were making music at Uncle Tom's Cabin Monday.

—The north end citizens complain of the cattle breaking into their gardens. "Let them have peas."

—Billy Ryan is building a "bridge" in front of his father's residence. He learned the trade at Ft. Wayne.

—Who says that Hank Shull's horse can't trot fast enough to peddle milk on a warm day. Eh?

—Simon Ochs says: "We are going to have a fort of July celebration, if that store has to give five dollars."

—Lafe Miller took in the boy with the paper horn, and kept him from Saturday night until Monday morn.

—Canon & Murphy have a tasty new wagon for their convenience when having work to do out of town.

—Herman Lohmiller is the proudest shoemaker in the county, since Tony Palmer was struck by lightning

—Frank Strebe has a new team. Nature intended one of them to be used on an egg wagon—he treads so softly.

—Mr. Slaybaugh has purchased the trotting horse, owned by Geo. Wernts, and will fit him for the Philadelphia races.

—Jim. has quit working for Buck Allen, and Mose Dills takes up the curry-comb and brush and rubs 'em down.

—A little fellow with a paper horn made more music upon the streets Saturday, than the Auburn band can make with brass horns.

—They must be a hungry set at the hub and spoke factory. They let that whistle loose just a half hour before time noon and night.

—Some of our subscribers inform us that they did'nt get last week's COURIER until Monday this week, at this office. Won't do.

—The foolish boy hangs on the alley fence, while the wise fellow is hanging over the front gate flirting with his girl in a pink dress.

On a Fly.

THE CENTER-FIELDMAN MAKES A BAD MOVE.

The Auburn base-ball nine, who have their grounds on Main street had a practice game Friday evening, and Tarney's "pelt-jerker" missed an easy fly ball and made a "short stop" of one of Miller & Getrost's store windows. He put up for his half, but "Wallager," the clay man over the Rhine, has not "lingered near" for several days, and his half is yet on interest. If the boys would go on the east side of the square, they could have the whole street and not be molested by teams or break any dollar and a half windows, and they could have just as much fun as they have on Main street, but the girls couldn't see them so plainly. There may be an object in this—we don't know.

—We have been asked a number of times, by Charley Jackson, clerk at Davenport's drug store, "if there were any empty houses in town for rent?" We would run our mind's eye up and down the different streets of the town and answer in the negative. Our idea was that Charley had a widowed mother or an orphan sister who depended upon his support and our tender sympathies were with him. But we're left—did'nt tumble soon enough. Last Tuesday Charley went to Bryan, Ohio, after his girl, and if there have not been any railroad accidents, earth-quakes or standing armies to demolish, he has thrown off the cloak of single blessedness and taken unto himself a wife. Charley, we wish you both a happy, pleasant future and hope that while you slowly glide down the stream of life there will be no hardships to endure, but that your journey may be as bright as the evening star. Shake!

—The newspaper is the great instructor of the age, and deserves the fullest encouragement from every individual. No family should be without two or three newspapers, and every subscriber should take the precaution to subscribe for only such papers as represent his interest. The COURIER is an eight-page, forty-eight column paper, with all kinds of literature, including the local and county news. The subscription has been reduced to $1.50 a year in advance, and every family within the boundaries of the county can afford to invest so small a sum yearly for their home paper.

—A phrenologist, on the outside of enough fire-water to make him quite talkative, was feeling heads Tuesday evening for the amusement of the boys. He said, Coop Ralston was somewhat of a lady's man (laughter) and had order about his every-day duties. That Bill Sthair was the most industrious man on Seventh street and never had anything to say. And Charley Pomert was "mashed" on a wealthy country lassie—and from here this great man went to the Cabin, on Seventh street, for a fresh invoice of "fuel."

—Strange things will continue to happen, and it is a general wonder what next will "be all the rage." First, we had spelling schools, then the Beecher business, base ball, Dr. Tanner's starving performance, the go-as-you-please walking mania, Pinafore, Sarah Bernhardt and now the people have settled down to reading the Bible before it undergoes a complete overlooking and revision. This is a curious age in which we live.

—Moses Ashelman has purchased property in Newville, moving from the county seat to occupy it.—[Waterloo Press.

Brother Baxter, our love for truth compels us to inform you that you are "off your chunk." Mr. Ashelman has lived right south and almost in sight of Newville for a number of years, and now he has simply rented his farm and moved into the village.

—Many have taken advantage of the opportunity now given to take a look at the comet that is now on exhibition for "a few nights only; positively the last appearance." No tickets, no reserved seats, no dead-heads, no editors; nothing indeed but to call out your neighbors, turn your face to the north, and there it is in all its glory and beauty. Don't fail to see it.

—They say you can tell by the taste of beer what the weather is going to be. How nice. When your wife is uncertain about going out with her new hat on, and says: "Dear, do you think it's going to rain?" you can say, "I'll see, my love," and go up town and take a drink of beer, and she can't find a word of fault.

—Where "Solomon Isaac was when Pat Murphy stole the geese," is not generally known.—Col. City Com.

Pat Murphy never stole any geese nor gooses, either. Pat is one of our most industrious and worthy young men. He is a painter by trade, and the firm of Canon & Murphy are doing a large business, working eight hands daily.

—Mrs. W. P. Myers is having a very interesting school at her rooms south of the jail. Those who do not understand the kindergarten work ought to call and see her class during school hours.

Pleasant Lake.

A NUMBER OF OUR CITIZENS "TAKE IT IN."

The excursion to Pleasant Lake last Saturday was largely attended by the citizens along the line of the Saginaw road, between Fort Wayne and the lake. It was a grand treat to many, and especially those who have never visited this place of pleasure. We are sorry, however, to mention one disgusting feature, wherein one our young men (a la peacock) took a prominent part: While several of our most accomplished and best society young ladies were waiting at the depot for the arrival of the train which was to convey them home, we are reliably informed that they were compelled to leave the house on account of the vulgarity and the clapping of beer tumblers which came from the lips of several men who were filled to their collar-buttons with brine. We withhold the name of our young man only because we can not obtain the names of his "pards." There may be a big, warm heart wrapped up within those breasts, and many an aching pang and contrite thought has come from these men when in a sober condition. "It was whisky that did the bad deed."

A Big Storm.

CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE DONE BY THE WIND.

A terrific rain and wind storm passed through this place about four o'clock yesterday morning, doing considerable damage to property. The roof on Stutz Bros. saloon building, in rear of the COURIER office, was badly damaged and other buildings in and about the town sustained more or less injury. Trees were up-rooted and fences torn down, small building moved from their foundations and in fact there was a general tearing up of things for a few hours. About eight o'clock the wind went down and the rain subsided; the bright rays of the morning sun appeared and made the day beautiful and pleasant.

—One of the most enterprising farmers of this township is Daniel Kosht. He is now coming to the front in the matter of blooded stock. He has a short-horn cow that weighs 1180 lbs. and her calf, when but five days old, weighed 101 lbs. The cow is from the herd of A. D. Moore, of Wilmington township, and was bred from the well know Comstock herd in Wabash county.

—Superintendent Rummell, of the County Farm, says his mule was not strained, as stated in last week's COURIER. We have no doubt but that Mr. Rummell knows better than we do. Our information, however, came from one of the hands working at this home of the poor, blind and lame.

—Another dead-beat left town between two days Monday. This time it was Pete Brandon, jr. We are familiarly acquainted with several contracts that he faithfully promised to fulfill before starting for Michigan, to sponge a livelihood off of his father-in-law.

—Every lady we see, carries either an umbrella or a parasol, for the purpose, we suppose, of keeping the bright rays of old Sol from tanning their fair faces. However we can see no necessity of lugging a big umbrella around all day, when they put a fresh coat of paint on every morning.

—If our beer merchants along Seventh street would put their empty kegs in rear of the saloons, there would not be so many loafers sitting along this street and gawking into the faces of ladies, while they are passing by.

—Our popular attorney, W. L. Penfield, esq., assisted in the defense of the two McDowell boys at Fort Wayne last week. Billy makes things lively about the "bar of justice" when he lets himself loose.

—A banner was carried around town Monday, reading: "Fourth of Jully at Auburn. Everybody come. Commit." A printing office is the place to get banners and pla-cards lettered. We know how to spell, we do.

—Obe Cool, of this place, and General Blair, of Waterloo, made a trade last week. The Gen'l. got a buggy and, of course, it don't eat. Obe got a horse and she can't eat. This seems like an honorable swap.

—Sunday last was a beautiful day, and every one was riding or walking. The churches were largely attended in the evening, and it was surely a day of peace and rest.

—Doc. Cowan has a hammock swing large enough for the average attendance of a Sunday-school picnic. It is not only necessary to have them big enough for two—that's all.

—Mich. Houston is in the wagon business too. Kib. has the wagon that takes the cake. He sells one every "sixty seconds." Mich. hasn't got fairly started yet.

—The Jackson road will run trains July 4th and 5th passing Auburn as follows: Going north 6:18 and 7:50 p. m., and 7:50 and 1:35 a. m. Going south: 11:20 and 3:03 p. m. and 10:12 a. m.

—When a woman loves us they forgive us everything, even our crimes. When they don't love us, they give us credit for nothing, not even our virtues.

Busy People.

WHAT THEY ARE DOING AND WHERE THEY ARE GOING.

—Bruce Kiamont is home again.

—Mrs. Chris. Baldock is quite sick.

—Miss Frankie Ford has returned home.

—J. C. Brand, of Waterloo, came over Tuesday.

—Fred Davis made a trip to Garrett Tuesday.

—Ida Stahl is visiting at Columbia City this week.

—Mrs. Geo. Paterson, of Warsaw, Ind., is in town.

—Frank Strebe has the rheumatism in his left flank.

—Mrs. F. Picker has been quite sick for several days.

—W. D. Johnson, of Concord, was in town this week.

—Johnny Schaab leaves us for Fulton county next week.

—M. L. Duck and wife, of Garrett, were in town Tuesday.

—Ed. Long and wife, of Waterloo, were in town Tuesday.

—Mr. C. Sheets is suffering with rheumatism in his limb.

—Jack Little is congratulating his friends in town this week.

—Dan. Littlefield has returned from a trip to Columbia City.

—Dr. Allyn, of the firm of Cowan & Allyn, is in Chicago to-day

—John Anderon, Esq., of Jackson township, called on us Tuesday.

—Joe. Ruffner is at his country home gathering the golden grain.

—Geo. Grund and family made a visit to Fort Wayne, last week.

—Miss Mollie McKay is visiting her sister at Spencerville this week.

—J. A. McKay is wrapping up articles at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's.

—Mrs. Shryock, of Huntertown, came up after Willie last Saturday.

—B. F. Cornelius, of Troy township, was in town on business Tuesday.

—We noticed Miss Mary Spake, formerly a resident here, upon the streets Tuesday.

—Geo. Staley has gone to his home at Angola, and will remain until after the Fourth.

—We are glad to state that F. D. Ryan, esq., has recovered from a light spell of sickness.

—Mrs. Biglow, making her home with C. A. Picker, has been quite low for several days.

—Dr. Matheny and Clint Headly took their girls to Pleasant Lake in a carriage Saturday.

—We are pained to inform our readers again this week that Mr. Husselman is still poorly.

—Johnny McIntyre is at Crestline, Ohio, playing music upon the wires. Keepawake, Johnny.

—Prosecutor Adams was in town Monday, distributing posters for the celebration at Angola.

—Mrs. Ed. Orr, of Corunna, and her daughter Mrs. T. B. Hall, of Pioneer, Ohio, were in town Tuesday.

—Mrs. Scott, of Bryan, Ohio, accompanied by T. P. Scott and his little daughter, left for home last Saturday.

—Miss Ida Blair made us a pleasant call Monday on her way home from a visit to her brother at Wawaka.

—Tom. C. Mays is expected home next Monday. He will shoot fire-crackers and shake with his old friends.

—Erve Hoffman left for San Francisco Monday. This is a big jump for Erve but we hope he'll get through all right.

—We are glad to learn that our young friend Brown Matheny, who was sick at Fort Wayne, last week, is able to be around again.

—Doc Forshey, of Junction fame, made a trip to Kendallville last week. We are at loss to state in which part of the city she resides.

—Mrs. Williams, who fell from a buggy recently, was able to go out riding again last Saturday. We are glad to note her speedy recovery.

—Mrs. Mary Rohm, together with her son and daughter Ezra, and Lydia Rohm returned last week from their visit to relatives at Plymouth.

—Clyde More left Tuesday to attend the Chicago races. It would benefit him more to attend a race with his grandfather in a potato patch.

—Charley Dugan, who has been attending the Fort Wayne College this summer, has returned home, having graduated to the extent of that institution.

—Charley Beugnot, accompanied by his family, attended the exercises of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, between here and Fort Wayne, this week.

—Josiah Shull and Frank McDowell, who have been attending school at Ann Arbor, returned home Saturday. The boys are bound to have an "edercation."

—L. P. Welling writes us a hasty note to say he is having a good time on the northern lakes. He goes to Mackinaw, St. Ignace, etc., but will be home next week.

—Billy Latson came home Monday. He is as happy as a big "sun flower" and looks as looks fresh as a blooming rose. He will make his home at Hudson for the present.

—Hod Kircher, the Main street "lather and shave" artist has been having a wrestle with a subject known to Indiana residents as Mr. Ague. Hod has been terribly shaken up.

—While Jacob Showalter, living in the south end of town, was plowing, he struck a stone and the handle came in contact with his hip, causing him to delay work for several days.

—Toby Rush came up from Wayne last Saturday to join with his old boys in their Sunday school class once more. Toby has been away several weeks but we don't see that he has grown much.

—Mrs. C. Hare and her daughter Sadie, who have been visiting at Grand Haven, Michigan, for several months passed returned home yesterday. Their visit has been a very pleasant and enjoyable one.

—Elza Shaffer has made another week's stay at Albion, and upon Saturday evening we were immensely glad to have the pleasure of shaking his hand and bidding him welcome home. The attractions of our beautiful town and the recollections of that parting kiss as she hung upon the gate and said: "Good bye, dear one, goo—, good bye," was too much for Elza. He was uneasy while away from here and sighed for the old home again.

—We are sorry to state that Charley Picker has been unable to speak above a whisper for the past week or more, and the cause is unknown. The best remedy we know of for this ailment is to do as Reub. Stevens did: Buy a lot of sewing machines on time and take them out west, dispose of them at any price and return with the money, have a law suit and take medicine from the sheriff six months. This receipt permantly cured Reub.

Farewell Send Off.

JACK LITTLE HOMEWARD BOUND.

We copy the following "farewell address" from the Hot Springs Evening Star. The "fine Italian hand" of T. C. Mays is easily recognized by his many friends in this place:

"Last night was dark, and the firmament looked down upon us in mournful sadness as lonely we sat at the old and accustomed trysting place and mourned the departure of a friend, who had, during the past three months, contributed much toward the making of this local heart beat happy in unison with his own now and occasionally. Jack Little has gone. The train of yesterday bore him from our view, and the valley which knew him once will know him no more forever, unless, perchance a stray shot from the enemy of happiness should reach him in his 'Hoosier' home, and he be compelled to return to the city of curative waters and potash. As we thought of the happy recollections of the past, our sadness was doubly intensified when she, the object of his affections, who is not so fair but good, came, and in mellifluous accents murmured, 'what is he?' We could not say an untruth, and narrated the particulars that her Jack had gone, and then the poor coon lifted up her cooney tear-bejeweled eyes to ours, and wept in the magnitude of her great sorrow. There were other dusky ones who joined in the general free lunch weep, but not one who was so inconsolable as 'Annie of the vale.' Mr. Little has been foreman of the Star job and composing rooms, and 'twas with regret that we shook his hand and said 'good bye.' He went to his home in Auburn, Indiana, and it affords us pleasure to say that he took with him the kindest wishes of every attache of the Evening Star. He is a faithful friend, good printer and capable as to the management of an office. We trust that success may attend him wherever he goes."

—We congratulate Mr. & Mrs. A. Umber upon their good fortune in having a 11 lb "gal" arrive at their home last night. The COURIER boys enjoyed a pleasant smoke on the strength of this little one.

—Frank Davenport lost a watch-charm in the form of a skeleton, and the finder will cause him to grin as wide as the public square by leaving it at his drug store.

—A hack load of our young German friends went to the residence of Mr. Groscop, last Friday evening, and amused themselves by having a pleasant dance.

—Dr. Myers, our accommodating dentist, will visit Spencerville and St. Joe, about the middle of each month. The Dr. is certainly master of his trade.

—Shaffer & Co., the boss wagon builders, located on south Main street are erecting a new platform in front of their shop.

—The junior editor of the COURIER has moved "from this side of Garrett" into the Wartensleben property, corner of Cedar and Seventeenth streets.

—We understand that Garrett will celebrate the Fourth. They always have a good time at that place.

Feathers Renovated.

A. Y. Rosenberry, Waterloo, calls attention to his increased facilities for renovating and cleansing feathers. Those who have patronized him know the benefits derived from having feathers cleansed and renewed. It makes old feathers good as new, kills and removes the vermin with which so many long used beds are infested, and renders them sweet and healthful. His facilities are now such that those bringing in feathers can have them cleaned and take them home with them. When they are brought to him he charges only 7c a pound. 26-3t.

Hats Re-shaped.

Mrs. Clock is now prepared to reshape, color, bleach and press straw hats and bonnets in the latest style, for only thirty cents. Old hats made to look as good as new. Ladies wishing a nice, stylish hat at very little cost should bring their old hats to be reshaped. Will also keep constantly on hand a variety of trimmings at the lowest prices. Third house east of Saginaw R. R. 7th street.

Buggies For Sle.

J. H. and H. K. Leas, of Waterloo, Indiana, are now offering their stock of Jackson buggies to the general public. These Buggies are made from selected material, and are warranted for one year. Their goods are all new, and will be sold cheap. Give them a call. On sale at Waterloo and Hudson. 16 tf

July 4th, via B &O.

The B. & O. will sell round-trip tickets at excursion rates, good until July 5th, for the celebrations, races and other attractions, at the following places: Chicago, Sandusky, Shelby, Newark, etc.

House for Rent.

A good house, in good repair and in a desirable location, with a nice lot and garden attached, may be had at a reasonable rate, by applying to the undersigned at Auburn Junction.

26-tf. CHRISTOPHER BAKER.

—Remarks of the Toledo Blade: Good digestion will do more to keep a man straight than good resolutions, and Dr. Marshall's Bromoline is just the thing to give you a good digestion. Fifty cents buys a bottle.

—Women that have been bedridden for years, have been entirely cured of female weakness by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlets. 25 2w.

—For biliousness, constipation, liver complaint and all blood diseases, the Big Blood and Liver Cure, Dr. Marshall's Bromoline, is the best. Druggists sell it.

C., causing a loss of $200,000....The recent drowning of her five children by an insane woman in Calhoun county, Ark., has caused two suicides in that locality. A worthy old farmer, unable to throw off the cloud from his mind, read a chapter in the Bible and hanged himself in his smoke-house.

A SOUTHERN physician was interviewed at St. Louis in regard to yellow-fever prospects. The former states that there are cases at Galveston and Vera Cruz, and that Memphis has been only partially sewered, the alleys being as filthy as ever. A new disease, called hæmaturia, has swept away many people in Mississippi this year.

ISAAC VENCE and Robert Dill had an altercation at Marshall, Texas, which resulted in the former being shot dead by the latter. The murderer fled, but was pursued by the Sheriff's posse, who overtook him. He was called upon to surrender, but refused. Fire was opened on him, and he fell literally riddled with bullets.... A correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal is authority for the statement that a woman residing in Jackson county, Ky., was recently delivered of seven children. They are all living and healthy. They weigh about four pounds each, and resemble each other very closely....A single highwayman stopped the stage twenty-five miles from Galveston, Texas, the other night, and compelled the two passengers to alight and assist him in rifling the mail, which lasted a couple of hours.

ST. LOUIS has tried the experiment of sending four large barges of corn to New Orleans in June, and the inspectors at the latter city report it hot and out of condition. The result is considered of such importance that the chief grain inspector at St. Louis has been sent down to make a thorough examination of the damaged grain.

COL. CASH, of South Carolina, who killed Shannon in a duel, has been acquitted. ....The Baltimore and Ohio road will furnish $1,000,000 to extend the Valley road of Virginia into the heart of the mineral region.... A New Orleans correspondent has investigated the question of grain transportation by barges, and declares that, while within two months 100,000 bushels have been condemned as unfit for shipment, none that left St. Louis in good condition has arrived in bad order. The grain merchants of New Orleans agree that the barge system is a success.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY WINDOM has abolished the office of Custodian of the Treasury, the position disgraced by O. L. Pitney, and the duties of the office will be performed under the direction of the Chief Clerk of the Treasury.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD and family went to Long Branch last week. Mrs. Garfield will remain there several weeks if the location is found to agree with her. The President will return to Washington soon....Leading Democrats who have been heard from say it will be the policy of the party next winter to pass a 3-per-cent. Funding bill, and not to accept the Windom continuance policy.

COMMISSIONER FRENCH has returned to Washington from his annual tour of inspection to the Pacific slope. He takes back all he said about the Central Pacific not paying the United States Government the money loaned them. On the contrary, he says he is satisfied of the will and the ability of the company to pay up.

JOHN A. WALSH, formerly a banker in Washington, has brought suit for $28,058 against Gen. Brady for money loaned. It is thought the true inwardness of the star-route job may be brought out at this trial....Upton, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, has been ordered to London, to take charge of the work of extending bonds held abroad.

THE Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department reports that during the five months ending May 31 there were exported from the several ports of this country 50,404,966 pounds fresh beef, valued at $4,715,231; 15,976,449 pounds salt beef, valued at $1,091,278; 296,305,632 pounds bacon, valued at $24,526,992; 32,635,659 pounds hams, valued at $3,349,711; 160,839,515 pounds lard, valued at $16,312,464; 48,794,967 pounds pork, valued at $3,838,100; 37,299,014 pounds tallow, valued at $2,524,119; 7,452,567 pounds butter, valued at $1,493,059; 32,023,771 pounds cheese, valued at $3,714,261. There has been some falling off in salted beef, bacon, lard and butter; the others show an increase as compared with the same period last year. The value of the aggregate exports of provisions and tallow for the seven months ending May 31 was $51,378,409, being a gain of nearly $12,000,000 as compared with the corresponding seven months of 1880.

GEN. BRADY, late Assistant Postmaster General, has petitioned the Criminal Court at Washington for an immediate investigation of the charge of star-route frauds. Col. Cook, the special counsel for the Government, stated to the court that not a single case is yet ready for submission to the Grand Jury, and that complete failure would result from using the testimony in its present condition. The court, therefore, ordered that the cases go over until September, to which date the Grand Jury has a recess.

POLITICAL.

THE ballot in the New York Legislature, June 17, for Senator for the short term gave Conkling 27 votes, Wheeler 36, and Jacobs 47. Platt had 23 supporters for the long term, Depew 53, and Kernan 49. In the bribery investigation, Senator Strahan testified that John I. Davenport offered him the New York Marshalship if he would vote against Conkling, which trade was declined with thanks.... A Virginia Republican delegation, headed by Gen. Wickham, was told by President Garfield that he was emphatically opposed to a violation of public faith and credit; that no one was authorized to promise appointments or threaten removals, and he would not give the patronage of any State to one man.

THE balloting at Albany for Senators, on the 18th inst., resulted as follows: For the short term: Wheeler, 29; Conkling, 20; Jacobs, 34; Cornell, 5; Lapham, 13; scattering, 4. For a successor to Platt: Depew, 44; Platt, 17; Kernan, 34; Cornell, 5; scattering, 5. In the Assembly, a concurrent resolution for final adjournment on June 20 was tabled, the Democrats only voting in its favor. Ex-Vice President Wheeler's arrival there is regarded by the half-breeds as significant. He says, in an interview, that he is not in any sense a candidate for Senator; that he is in favor of Depew, and will use his best efforts to elect him. Senators Conkling and Platt had a conference with Gen. Grant, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, which was attended also by Vice President Arthur, Senator Jones, of Nevada, and New York politicians of local note. The advisability of the ex-President's going to Albany was discussed, but it was deemed best that he should not. It is averred that Conkling declared that he would not go back to Washington except with Platt, and, though pressed by his friends to change his decision in this matter, he declared it final.

IN the monotonous balloting at Albany, on the 20th inst., Wheeler and Jacobs had 24 votes each for the short term, and Conkling 23. Depew got 37, Kernan 25 and Platt 21 for the long term. Ex-Vice President Wheeler said the only way out of the deadlock was the election of any man Conkling might select as his successor. Grant, Platt and Conkling conferred together in New York, and in the evening the candidates left for Albany....President Garfield repudiates the tender of the Marshalship of New York made by John I. Davenport to Senator Strahan.

IN the twentieth ballot at Albany for Senator, for the short term Elbridge G. Lapham, of Canandaigua, received 25 votes, Wheeler getting 38 and Conkling 33. In the twenty-first ballot, Depew had 50, Kernan 51 and Platt 27, for the long term. Both factions remain firm, and promise to hold on, if necessary, all summer. Robertson continues at Albany, instead of taking his new office, which Merritt retains until the Senatorship business is settled. It is proposed to continue the nominations at Saratoga.... Eighteen out of twenty-seven members of the Virginia Republican State Central Committee met at Richmond pursuant to call. In accordance with a resolution passed by the committee last February, that no member of the committee who acted with any other organization could continue as a member, John N. Lewis, the Chairman, and candidate of the Mahone Republican coalition for Lieutenant Governor, was expelled, and Gen. A. C. Wickham was appointed Chairman in his stead. The committee then decided to call a convention for the 24th of August at Staunton, to nominate State officers.

THERE was a flurry of excitement in the New York Legislative Convention on the 22d, caused by rumors that the administration men intended attempting to secure one of the vacancies by declaring the votes for Jacobs unconstitutional and void, he being a member of the Legislature and ineligible under the State law, whenever any Republican should receive a majority of the remaining votes. On the second ballot, Mr. Wheeler's vote reaching 50, before the vote was declared, a Democratic member mentioned the prevalence of the rumor, and changed his vote from Jacobs to Clarkson N. Potter, and this was followed by a general change of Democratic votes, which were scattered upon sixteen or seventeen different candidates. After adjournment a Democratic caucus withdrew Jacobs and put up Clarkson N. Potter in his place. At a conference of the stalwarts Mr. Conkling made a long speech, warning his followers to "beware of the corrupt group of politicians who are striving to destroy the true Republican party and its prestige," and pleading with them to be steadfast in the faith of that party. He said a great deal concerning the immense power of railroad corporations, that are unscrupulously using millions to "debauch sworn legislators," and hoped that his words would produce "the most profound impression of which they were capable." Mr. Conkling's opinion in the matter of "Senatorial courtesy" was not forgotten, and he insisted that "if two Republican Senators are elected, they must be pure stalwarts and men whose characters are above suspicion." Two ballots were taken that day, with the following result: First—Depew, 52; Platt, 26; Wheeler, 40; Conkling, 32. Second—Depew, 50; Platt, 25; Wheeler, 60; Conkling, 32....Congressman Emory Speer, of the Ninth Georgia district, has publicly expressed his purpose to vote with the Republicans in the organization of the next House.

IN the first ballot for Senator at Albany, on the 23d inst., Clarkson N. Potter had 53 votes for the short term, Wheeler 50, and Conkling 32. The vote for the long term gave Depew and Kernan each 53, and Platt 27. In the bribery investigation, James Tillinghast, of the New York Central road, explained what use he made of $20,000 in currency in his private business. John I. Davenport testified that he was authorized by Henry E. Knox, of Washington, to tender a Marshalship to Senator Strahan.... After a long discussion over the admission of delegates, the Democratic State Convention of Maryland nominated Hon. Thomas J. Keating for Comptroller....Nelson Dingley, Jr., ex-Governor of Maine, has been nominated by the Republicans to occupy Frye's vacant seat in the House of Representatives at Washington.... Fifty white Republicans of Virginia gathered at Washington to express to the members of the Cabinet their desire for a coalition with Mahone and to protest against the removal of John F. Lewis from the Chairmanship of the Republican State Central Committee.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

THE skin of a boiled egg is the most efficacious remedy that can be applied to a boil. Peel it carefully, wet and apply it to the part affected. It will draw off the matter and relieve the soreness in a few hours.

TO TAKE out tea stains, put the linen in a kettle of cold water; rub the stains well with common castile soap; put the kettle on the side of the stove and let the water get gradually warm; wash it thoroughly in warm soap suds, then rub the stain again with soap; then rinse.

CHICKEN CHEESE.—Boil two chickens till tender; take out all the bones, and chop the meat fine; season to taste with salt, pepper and butter; pour in enough of the liquor they are boiled in to make moist. Mould it in any shape you choose, and when cold turn out and cut into slices. It is an excellent traveling lunch.

HOME-MADE YEAST.—One pint of mashed potatoes, with the water they were boiled in, one cupful of salt, one cupful of flour, one cupful of strong hop tea; add four quarts of boiling water; when cool add one pint of baker's or other yeast; let it stand and work twenty-four hours; then skim, strain and put in a jug.

PAN DODDLINGS.—This is a New England dish, and is nice at the places where appetites are expansive. Take three cups of fine rye meal, three cups Indian meal, one egg, and three tablespoonfuls of molasses; add a little salt and allspice and enough rich sweet milk to make a batter stiff enough to drop from a spoon. Fry to a good brown in hot lard.

THE bridges across the Missouri River at Council Bluffs and Omaha comprise eleven spans, each span is 250 feet in length, or in all 2,750 feet. There are three spans to the St. Louis bridge, the center being 520 feet, and the other two each 502 feet in length. The bridge cost about $9,000,000.

ORANGE SALAD.—Peel eight oranges with a sharp knife, so as to remove every vestige of skin from them; core them as you would apples, and lay them either whole or cut in slices, in a deep dish; strew over plenty of powdered sugar, then add four red bananas cut in small round slices, the juice of a lemon, and a little more sugar. Keep the dish covered close till the time of serving.

EXCELLENT COFFEE CAKE.—This is one of the best of plain cakes, and is very easily made. Take one cup of strong coffee infusion, one cup molasses, one cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one egg and one teaspoonful saleratus. Add spice and raisins to suit the taste, and enough flour to make a reasonably thick batter. Bake rather slowly in tin pans lined with buttered paper.

FOR CHAPPED HANDS.—The nicest preparation for chapped hands is composed of quince seed and whisky. There is no rule as to proportion. Put the seeds in a bottle, and pour in enough whisky to cover them. As this thickens add more whisky until it is of the right consistency. This healing preparation is far superior to glycerine, as it dries off quickly and leaves a most agreeable odor.

CORNED beef left over for the next day should be put back in the liquor it was boiled in. Instead of the hard, brown woody substance that is sometimes, served as cold corned beef, kept in this way, it will always be juicy, as it reabsorbs much of the richness from the liquor itself. Skim the liquor, of course, before setting it away, and it will keep as well in the pot it was boiled in as anything else.

A Novel or a Play—Ready Made.

The fast son of a Hungarian merchant, having found himself in a hospital during the Italian war in 1859, just as the enemy was coming up, put on the clothes of a Spanish count, who had died in the next bed, and thereby put himself in possession of the dead man's cash, papers and name. He set up as a man of fashion, in St. Petersburg, and after several years, married the daughter of a Russian Admiral. Some months afterwards he took her on a visit to "his castles in Spain," but necessarily went no further than Hamburg, whence he wrote to his father-in-law that he was a humbug and was out of funds. The admiral at once set out for Hamburg, but on his arrival, found his son-in-law dead from small-pox. He, however, discoverered his identity just in time to learn, from an advertisement, that his deceased son-in-law must appear and claim a large inheritance left him by his uncle, otherwise it would be distributed among other relatives. The Russian Admiral, at first disposed to denounce and renounce his son-in-law as in imposter, is now trying to get possession of the estate for his daughter and her son, who was born about the time of the death of the "Spanish count."

Taste.

An expensively furnished room is not always attractive. A lady of refined instinct and training, by means of a few cheap but of their kind good pictures, book engravings, cartoons, and such like, a bundle of strips and straws, some pretty Japanese or Chinese decorations, the judicious appliance and arrangement of such pretty things as artistic taste will suggest—will do more toward making a little parlor charming, homelike and artistic than thousands of dollars spent on vulgar and inartistic arrangement.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

The Number of Schools and Teachers in Each State and Territory.

The following statistics are taken from the last report of the Commissioner of Education. There are several points to be noted in the tables. In Oregon, Missouri, Texas and Wisconsin the number of teachers is given without distinction as to sex; in all the others the sex is indicated except Indian Territory, mentioned in the second table. In the case of New York it should be understood that the figures given are for the number of public school houses, log, frame, brick and stone. In the report of the State of Mississippi no statement is made in regard to the number of schools, hence that column in the table is blank—the only blank in the list of States—while Idaho is omitted for the reason that no recent dates are given. The total number of teachers in the States is 269,182, and in the Territories 2,012. The table of States and Territories is as follows:

Anecdotes of Dueling.

Frederick the Great was so heartily opposed to duelling that he resolved to put a stop to it, at least in his army. He issued an order that the first party engaging in a duel without his consent should be summarily punished. On the very next day after the promulgation of this order, an officer appeared before him, and asked his permission to challenge a comrade to mortal combat. He gave his consent, but stipulated that he should be notified beforehand of the time when, the place where, the duel was to be fought.

The hour appointed for the conflict arrived; and when the beligerent parties appeared upon the ground they found the King there; and, to their great surprise, saw a gibbet erected on the spot! The challenger appealed to Frederick to know what that meant.

"It means this," answered the King, sternly: "I intend to witness your battle until one of you has killed the other; and then I will hang the survivor!"

It may be readily believed that the duel was not fought. And, thenceforth, dueling was a rare event in the Prussian army.

It is related of the late Judge Thatcher, of Maine, that, while a member of Congress, he was challenged by a brother member to fight a duel. The Judge, as all who knew him could knowingly avow, was not deficient in animal courage; but he was opposed to dueling. To his challenger he made answer, in his bluff, off-hand way:

"I will go and consult my wife; and, if she consents, be sure I will accommodate you."

"Ho! You are a coward!" cried the other.

Whereupon responded Thatcher, with a nod, and a most significant smile of contempt:

"Aye, you thought I was, or you never would have challenged me!"

In the memoirs of the Marquis de Donnisan, who was most earnest in his opposition to the duello, we find the following: One day he overheard two brave soldiers, belonging to his cavalry, just winding up a heated and angry dispute by drawing their swords for mortal combat. The challenge had been given, and instantly accepted.

"Hold!—One moment!" the Marquis exclaimed, as he came upon the scene. "Which of you two, think ye, will have the pleasure of robbing himself of a friend and a brother, and, at the same time, robbing me of one of my best and bravest soldiers? Have we no enemies, that you must turn your swords against one another?"

For a brief space the two men looked down, evidently feeling foolish and conscience-stricken. Then they sheathed their weapons, and joined hands; and together thanked their lord for the good he had done them.

On the Blue Danube.

A correspondent, describing a trip down the Danube, in Austria, says: "The floating grain mills on the Danube are its most curious feature. Fancy two canal boats moored parallel to each other in mid-river, about fifteen or twenty feet apart, and supporting between them the crank of a gigantic mill-wheel, turned by the current of the stream. Fancy, moreover, the sides of one of these boats carried up one story higher than the other, then roofed over a la Noah's ark, with windows and doors as needed, and you will have a fair idea of these Danube grain mills, some four or five thousand of which, in groups of ten or twelve together, are scattered along this watery highway all the way from Vienna to Belgrave. Each mill is inscribed with its owner's name."

Popular Hobbies.

The hobby may be chemistry, music, lace, science, china, algebra, languages, history, politics, volunteers, farming, gardening, athletics, painting, architecture, horse-racing, or what not. Be it what it may, and however little choice you may have had in the matter, you are, nevertheless, completely enchanted with it, and quite prepared to maintain that that particular pursuit, and no other, is the most worthy and elevated of all that can possibly engage the attention of the human race. And what rapture do you not then experience if you chance to encounter another person with the same craze upon him as yourself? With what unwearying relish is the common point of interest talked over, and how exalted is the opinion you mutually entertain for one another's good sense and good taste! The discussion that goes on between you and the kindred spirit whom you have met is apt to recall to the mind of a listener the negro's idea of an argument: "Golly, massa, how me lub argeyment! Pompey, him say—paint dat wall white; me say—paint him white, too; and den we argey 'pon de point for half a day—oh, lubly!"—The Spectator.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

SNAKES generally turn on their sides to eat.

IN animals the arms and legs are of the same length.

NO CREATURE below the back-boned animals ever breathes through its mouth.

SILK waste, which a few years ago was sold for old rags, is now manufactured in New York into a variety of fine cloths.

SUGAR is pretty well up now. We are afraid it will become as dear as it was in the days of Henry IV., of France, when it was sold by the ounce by apothecaries nearly as Peruvian bark is now sold.

AMONG the peasantry in a certain portion of Germany it is considered a sign of good luck to meet a pig. Some shrewd goldsmith utilized the idea by manufacturing charms, or pig emblems, which became all the rage in Germany, and which have lately been the fashion in this country.

THERE is a plant in Chili, and a similar one in Japan, called the "flower of the air." This appellation is given to it because it has no root, and is never fixed to the earth. It twines round a dry tree or sterile rock. Each shoot produces two or three flowers like a lily, white, transparent and odoriferous. It is capable of being transported 200 or 300 leagues; and it vegetates as it travels, suspended to a twig.

BUT one mechanical workingman has ever been honored with a burial in Westminster Abbey, and that was Graham, the clockmaker. Graham made exact astronomy possible by his great improvements in time pieces. He invented the dead-beat escapement and the gridiron compensating pendulum, and he was the first to make clocks that would run for many days without winding. Graham was also a maker of great quadrants, and instruments of that sort. His funeral was attended by all the members of the Royal Society.

FRANCE, viewed from a sanitary point, is one of the most favored countries in the world, yet nearly 1,000,000 persons die there every year. From this it is statistically proved that the daily number of deaths in the world averages nearly 98,790, while the number of births is over 104,000 in every twenty-four hours. The timid, who think the earth is going to fill up with people in a very few years and crowd them off, can take courage, as from the latest showing there is an annual increase in population of less than 3,000,000 at the present time.

THE lion has often been seen to despise contemptible enemies and pardon their insults when it was in his power to punish them. He has been seen to spare the lives of such as were thrown to be devoured by him, to live peaceably with them, to afford them part of his subsistence, and sometimes to want food himself rather than deprive them of that life which his generosity had spared. The lion is not usually cruel; he is only so from necessity, and never kills more than he consumes. When satiated, he is perfectly gentle.

GARFIELD.

Digging His Own Pitfalls—The Stalwart Split—The Rejection of the Caucus—MacVeagh Versus Blaine.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

There is at least one Ohio Republican remaining in Washington who did not feel interest enough to go home to help renominate Foster, and who is not likely to do much toward his election. "I'm not particularly a stalwart," said he, "but I am of the opinion Garfield is behaving very much like a crazy man. If ever he possessed wisdom, he certainly does not show it. Just see how he's cut his own throat in half a dozen ways. Take the anti-caucus, the go-as-you-please rule his supporters have invented that he is backing up at Albany. Why it's just what the Taft men and other stalwarts in Ohio want, and what they will smash Garfield's and Foster's heads with next October. Thousands of Republicans then who wish to rank as party men will hide behind this precedent to lay out Foster. If Garfield at Albany may refuse caucus and set up the go-as-you-please rule, Ohio Republicans may do so at home, and they will do it, as the game now stands. Garfield has just begun to see this, and wants to escape from the consequences of his own folly. You ask me if I credit the report from Albany that Garfield has written a letter crawfishing about Conkling and Platt. I can say that it accords perfectly with much I have heard of him lately; in fact, he said nearly the same thing to me and another, and I am prepared to believe he has written it according to the report. I really believe he would embrace Conkling in genuine earnest were he to present himself at the White House and if that would heal the breach. There is no fight in Garfield except as Blaine spurs him to it. He has fairly wilted of late. There seems to be something more the matter with him than who shall be Senator. He acts like a man that somebody has got a twist on in a secret way like."

We were here joined by an Indiana Republican of some repute as a politician. At first he was not disposed to talk, save about the weather and the like. When railed about it, he said: "I don't feel much like talking; it's too much like a funeral. It seemed so for a good while to me. You ask who's the corpse? Why, Garfield, of course. And he's so changed, too. But that's making light of what may be a serious fact, as it appears to me. I only meant it was a political funeral. He's going to catch it badly in Ohio, where he might have had a good thing. There's just one chance, and that's fast running out. Were he to stand from under in the fight Blaine has got him into, and call the dogs off in all quarters, he might save himself. I suppose you will think me almost as crazy as Garfield when I tell you it is yet possible to get Conkling and Grant to put their shoulders under to save Foster, even to the extent of making speeches, but I tell you I'm not crazy at all. If Garfield wasn't worse than crazy, this, or something like it, would go into history before the Ohio election. Somebody or something seems to be killing Garfield by inches." And here the Indianian stroked his beard solemnly and thoughtfully.

"I like Garfield, and worked hard for him," he continued, "and I'm distressed to see him go down hill so. He's no longer the buoyant, jolly good fellow he used to be when he went behind the Speaker's chair up in the House to smoke and crack jokes. You would not know him, he's so altered. He tries to be joyous, but it's a distressing exhibition he makes of himself, it's so unnatural. He may come out all right. He would, perhaps, if his way could be made easy for him. By the way, what sort of a fellow is Arthur?" I answered that he was very much of a man, a clever gentleman in the estimation of his friends, with more than average of general ability. "Why do you ask?" said I. "Oh, nothing special," said the Indianian, with a serious air; "only I was thinking when I left Garfield yesterday how it would be if anything should happen. The warm weather is coming on, things are crowding worse and worse every day, and sometimes, you know, men not used to such things give out rather sudden, and I was just thinking how it would be if Arthur should be President in less than a year."

Turning the conversation, I inquired what was the feeling in the West and Northwest, where he had recently been. "Well," he answered, "I was in Wisconsin the other day, where I found the feeling among Republicans setting in favor of Conkling, rather because they couldn't see why there should be any quarrel at all. What in Tophet did Garfield get into a fight for? It was his business to have no fight.

"This an average Wisconsin Republican put to me, and it appears to reflect the general idea wherever I have been. I told Garfield so only yesterday, and he laughed at it, but the laugh was more like a maniac's than a sane man's."

At this point a Pennsylvanian joined the circle. After observing that his was Monongahela clear, he said: "Blaine's not the only man that's giving Garfield trouble. MacVeagh's as full of mischief as Blaine, and he's got a contract on his hands to protect Don Cameron's interest from all harm. He won't hold out long, though; but for the present Don's safe for all that Blaine can influence Garfield against him, for the wily Attorney General is as nigh as anybody to the President when he wants to be. Don's helping Conkling, and there's something going on with MacVeagh for a medium. I think it's the reason Garfield is said to have weakened in the Conkling fight. Just you listen a minute," said the Pennsylvanian; "just you look at it; there's something going on, and MacVeagh's yet standing square for Don, and Don's standing square for Conkling—I might say for Grant, for with Don Grant's everybody and everything. You should know Don—everybody should know him—for I tell you, gentlemen, there's nothing in the new version truer than Don is to his word and a friend. He couldn't be otherwise, being Scotch, and I'm Scotch. Well, I was saying, Don at Albany, and MacVeagh here, why, Garfield couldn't do otherwise than weaken, except when Blaine was around. I spoke of MacVeagh's giving Garfield trouble; this is the way he's doing it—making trouble with Blaine. Don't you forget it, gentlemen. MacVeagh's going to be top of the heap here pretty soon, if he ain't already. Going to try the star cases? you ask. He never tried anything he could settle. You don't know him, let me tell you. Don and he haven't hitched for some time before the late alliance, on account of Bill Chandler, but they are together now and will be till MacVeagh can set up for himself. He never stops long with any one. You may discount clear down the stories about Garfield's getting after Don Cameron, unless Blaine gets a new hold of him, when there will be a row." Said he, suddenly: "Who's going to be Speaker of the next House of Congress? 'Don't know,' you say. I can tell you. Wm. D. Kelley is his name—the father of the House, they call him, because he's been there longest. Nobody's got the majority, and let me just inform you that the little band Kelley belongs to—call them Independents, Greenbackers, or what not—they are going to have the Speaker. He's my sort of Republican, and isn't mixed to hurt anybody. Neither administration nor anti-administration is going to win in that fight. The Independents are going to decide it. I'm not going to let out the particulars now, but don't you forget his name is Bill Kelley." Here the Pennsylvanian said he had a little office matter to look after down at the department.

EX-GOV. SEYMOUR'S VIEWS.

Decadence of the Republican Party.

Ex-Gov. Seymour was interviewed on the political situation. He looks upon the Albany contest as affording evidence of the disintegration of the Republican party. "I see in it," he said, "a conflict between elements whose struggles foretell the early dismemberment of the party. Recent exposures of corrupt practices at Albany prove what the people have long suspected, and I would not be surprised to hear of still further and more damaging disclosures before the investigation is concluded.

"The Republicans are tearing themselves to pieces, and, as you may imagine, we Democrats do not feel like interfering. The result of the wrangle that is now going on will, in my opinion, be the redemption of the State from the control of the Republicans. New York is naturally Democratic; it is traditionally Democratic. Its greatest and most distinguished men have been Democrats, and the best part of its history is that part which was made while it was under Democratic rule. Last fall the State was taken from the Democrats by false pretenses. The tariff issue was raised to frighten short-sighted men, and the Democratic party was considerably divided. Prospects are brighter now."

The venerable ex-Governor was quite free in the expression of opinions about President Garfield. He thinks that the President has made a great failure thus far. "I have very little faith in men who quit preaching for politics," he said, "and Gen. Garfield is no exception to the rule. He has carried with him much that is impracticable. It was a great mistake for him to have left the Senate. There he would have made a better impression than he can hope to as President. He is a man of very fair general information and education, and a ready and forcible talker; yet he is a very yielding man by nature, and since he entered upon the discharge of his duties as President that side of his character has been turned to the public oftenest. It is best for a man in public life to be himself at all times, and not try to be like somebody else. Some men are firm and self-willed and accustomed to having their own way. Gen. Jackson was that kind of a man. Garfield is entirely different. He is weak and anxious to please everybody, and, when he sets out to be a second Gen. Jackson, the effort is unnatural and must end in failure. It was natural for Jackson to command obedience; it is not so with Garfield. More men have been ruined trying to be like Gen. Jackson than from all other causes combined.

"Since Gen. Garfield has been prominent in public life, and more especially of late years, his constant and unceasing prayer has been that he might be led into temptation. He is the first man I ever knew who is praying all the time that he might be tempted. Every speech he has made is full of that prayer. He is oppressed with a great fear of centralization; yet he invites the growth and development of the idea by his every act.

"After the war there was a strong reaction against State rights; nevertheless States have rights independent of the General Government, and it is in the recognition and preservation of these rights that the safety of the people lies. While recognizing the danger of an increase of centralized power, Gen. Garfield has been and is doing all in his power to centralize the governing power in Washington city. One of these days the people will take the Republican statesmen who are struggling to obliterate State rights at their word. To-day one-half of the population of the United States is embraced within the boundaries of nine States. These nine States have eighteen Representatives in the Senate, or less than one-fourth of the whole. New England, with a population of 4,000,000, has twelve Senators, and New York, with a population of 5,000,000 of people, only two Senators. The great States of Illinois and Ohio, with a population as large as New England, have one-third the Representatives. Some time the people will become so infatuated with the idea that the Republican leaders are preaching but not practising that they will take into their heads to change existing forms and have a uniform representation in the Senate. Then where will Maine and the other little States be? They will be swallowed up. This is just what the Republicans are inviting, if they could see it. The constitution protects the States; but the constitution has been changed, and it may undergo additional modification when the people want it. The Senate is the controlling body, and the Senate, influenced largely by the New England representatives, has put a heavy burden on the West, and, for that matter, upon the whole country, by subsidizing monopolies and giving them growth. The great producing regions may become tired of this and make a change."

IOWA DEMOCRATS IN COUNCIL.

The State Convention at Des Moines.

The Democratic State Convention of Iowa assembled at Des Moines on Thursday, June 16.

Col. R. D. Fenn, of Story county, was chosen temporary Chairman, and T. O. Walker, of Davis, temporary Secretary, with assistant secretaries.

In taking the chair Mr. Fenn returned thanks for the honor conferred, and made a speech which was well received.

Committees on Credentials, Permanent Organization and Resolutions were appointed.

The following were appointed members of the State Central Committee: First district, Edward Campbell, Jr., of Jefferson; Second, A. W. Richardson, of Jackson; Fourth, G. R. Miller, of Grundy; Fifth, J. J. Snouffer, of Linn; Sixth, P. G. Ballingall, of Wapello; Seventh, J. P. Hall, of Decatur; Eighth, Hoyt Sherman, Jr., of Shelby; Ninth, John Dowd, Jr., of Webster.

The Committee on Credentials reported seventy-five counties represented.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported W. A. Stow, of Fremont county, as President, with Vice Presidents and Secretaries from each Congressional district.

On taking the chair Mr. Stow made a strong speech, which was enthusiastically applauded.

A letter from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Iowa, asking action favorable to the prohibitory amendment, was referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

The Committee on Resolutions reported as follows:

The Democratic party of Iowa, assembled in convention, reaffirms the national platform of 1876 and 1880; demands strict economy in all public expenditures, the strict accountability of all public servants, and declares:

1. For tariff reform, ultimating in a simple revenue system, with commercial freedom as its issue.

2. That we oppose all sumptuary laws, and the proposed prohibitory amendment to the constitution, in all its steps and stages, as the most offensive form of sumptuary legislation.

3. That the great agricultural and producing interests of the country should be emancipated from the burdens of monopoly put upon them by Republican rule, and as a feature of such relief for the cheapening of transportation by Government appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi river, with its navigable tributaries and other water-ways.

4. That we execrate the constant official corruption grown into an invariable Republican practice, and that the demand of our national platform for civil-service reform is fully emphasized by the immense spectacle of Republican factions, disturbing the public peace, not by agitation of great measures of statesmanship, but by a vulgar quarrel over a partition of public spoils, and a squabble for the opportunities of official theft.

THE NOMINATIONS.

Nominations for Governor being declared in order, the Hon. John P. Irish presented the name of Judge L. G. Kinne, of Tama county, as a candidate for Governor, and his nomination was made by acclamation by a rising vote of the convention.

Justice Clark, of Montgomery county, was nominated for Lieutenant Governor by James Hageman, of Lee county, and G. M. Walker, of Polk county, was nominated by Mr. Yeoman, of Webster county. The first ballot resulted: Clark, 199; Walker, 212. Mr. Walker's nomination was then made unanimous.

H. B. Hendershot, of Wapello county, was nominated by acclamation for Judge of the Supreme Court.

Walter H. Butler, of Delaware county, was nominated for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The convention then adjourned.

INDIANA NEWS.

THERE are 523 convicts in the State Prison South. The number is decreasing.

THE new Road law of Indiana is presenting many knotty points to the Auditor of State.

EX-SENATOR HENRY S. LANE, of Indiana, died at his home in Crawfordsville, last week, at the ripe age of 80 years.

CHARLES HUBBARD, ex-Mayor of Columbus, and once Republican candidate for Treasurer of State, died there lately.

THE annual meeting of the old settlers of Tipton county will be held Saturday, Aug. 1. N. R. Overman will deliver the address.

THE New Albany forge-works has received a 36,000-pound pair of shears, capable of cutting a four-inch square cold bar of iron.

A MR. DRAKE, living near Shelbyville, fired at a cat and lodged a charge of shot in a small boy, who loses one eye in consequence.

OVER 100 new buildings are under contract in Seymour, and more are talked of. Seymour has doubled in size and population in ten years.

WILLIAM RAMSEY was instantly killed at Marion, while coupling cars on the Toledo, Delphos and Burlington railway there. He leaves a wife and one child.

JESSE ELMWOOD bought forty acres of land in Harrison county, about one year ago, paying $400 for it. Last week he sold the white oak timber alone, on the land, for $700 cash.

THE wheat crop around Bedford is in a much better condition than it has been reported to be in. Intelligent farmers say that the crop will be a full average, and perhaps more.

JESSE RANDALL, a very small boy, was attacked by a vicious horse, at Butlerville, and when rescued it was found that, aside from internal injuries, one ear had been bitten entirely off.

DANIEL EVERHART, aged 28 and married, living two miles east of Elwood, Madison county, was instantly killed while hauling logs. He was hit on the head by a rail which was being used as a pry.

ST. JOHN'S Lutheran congregation, at Fort Wayne, have decided to speedily erect a church to cost $40,000, on the site of the old edifice. Emanuel Church will also tear down the old parsonage and build a new one.

WHILE climbing out on the end of a limb to rob a bird's nest, Willie Snyder, of Fort Wayne, fell to the ground, twenty feet, so badly injuring and paralyzing his spinal column that the physicians pronounce his recovery very doubtful.

THE Abbey of St. Meinrad, in Spencer county, with its colleges, is the most extensive educational and religious establishment in Indiana. The recent commencement exercises were very grand. The minor orders were conferred on fourteen young men.

AN election has been ordered by the Commissioners of Henry county, to be held July 16, to vote a subsidy of $39,000 for the Evansville, Knightstown and Toledo railroad; also, an election in Ripley township, Rush county, has been ordered for the same road.

AS THE midnight freight on the Fort Wayne road, west, was passing through Bourbon, at night, Daniel Staley fell between the cars. Both legs were cut off. He was also injured internally, and cannot recover. He has a wife and two children. He was stealing a ride.

MR. KENNETT, of Osgood, went coon hunting, taking with him his 6-year-old son. While crossing an open field the child was set upon by a large and ferocious dog, biting it about the face and body so terribly that the little fellow's life is despaired of. Mr. Kennett shot the dog.

AT a dance at New Amsterdam, Halleck Mathers and Clay Cunningham quarreled and fought about a woman, and Mathers cut Cunningham's hand nearly off at the wrist with a knife. A free fight followed among the crowd, in which Charles France was stabbed in the shoulder by an unknown party, and it is thought fatally hurt.

THE discovery of what really appears to be gold-bearing quartz near the little village of Harrodsburg has created a great excitement in that neighborhood, and every land owner imagines he is in possession of a "bonanza." The discoverer, a Mr. Wright, found several specimens, which a number of old California miners examined, and united in the opinion that they contained gold. Some of the quartz has been sent to an assayer, for the purpose of ascertaining its value. Wright says he first discovered the quartz in isolated and detached pieces that had been broken off the main ledge. He will not reveal the locality of the discovery.

THE city of Logansport is agitated over the late decision of the Indana Supreme Court in its ruling that the territory known as the South Side was never legally annexed to the city of Logansport. The annexing process, so called, occurred in 1871, and up to 1877 the taxpayers of the South Side paid their share of the public burden without grumbling. In the latter year, however, they began kicking, and, after much delay, brought suit in the Circuit Court to enjoin the Treasurer from collecting taxes from them. This case came to trial in 1879, and resulted in a verdict against the city. It was then appealed, and a few days ago was affirmed by the Supreme Court. The territory embraces all that portion of the city lying south of the Wabash river, and contains 500 inhabitants and $50,000 worth of property. The move to get out of the city was made because the inhabitants thought they were not properly treated as to police and fire protection and street work.

WM. BRANUM, of Martin county, who was reported as being the victim of an assassin, it is now reported was killed in an affray with his son-in-law, John Huff. Ever since Huff married Branum's daughter ill-feeling has existed between the two, and frequent quarrels had taken place. Branum even went so far as to visit Huff's residence during his absence and force his daughter to return to her old home. This made matters worse, and a few days ago they agreed, after a bitter quarrel, to meet at Ward's Chapel, a secluded country church, and fight the matter out. At the hour named both of them were on hand, Branum armed with a revolver and a pair of brass knuckles and Huff having a double-barreled shot-gun. Business commenced at once and Huff got in his work first, literally riddling Branum's body with buckshot and killing him almost instantly. Huff made his escape.

THE last rays of the fast-sinking moon were falling upon his pale, intellectual features, when he suddenly withdrew his arm, and, leaping into the air, exclaimed, "Confound it, Sally, I wish you wouldn't use pins in your waist belt."

A TRAVELER in Germany speaks of a certain kind of sausage the like of which never was seen in the earth Belogna in the heavens above.

An American from Cork.

Patrick responded to an advertisement of "An American wanted as coachman."

"Are you an American?" asked the gentleman.

"Oi am, sur," answered Patrick.

"Where were you born?"

"In Oireland, sur, County Cork."

"County Cork, eh?" mused the gentleman. "How is it that you are an American when you were born in Ireland?"

"Faix, sur," said Patrick, "I'm bothered about that same mesilf, sur."

NEEDY person—"Would yer honor give a poor man a little help? I have a wife and family, and I'm out of work, and coal and flour are dear, and we're just about starved, sir." Finance Minister—"Starved? Nonsense! Why, I've just reduced the duty on cocoanuts by fifty per centum!"—Toronto Grip.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
TradeMark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Market and 8th Sts. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 9 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 23, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

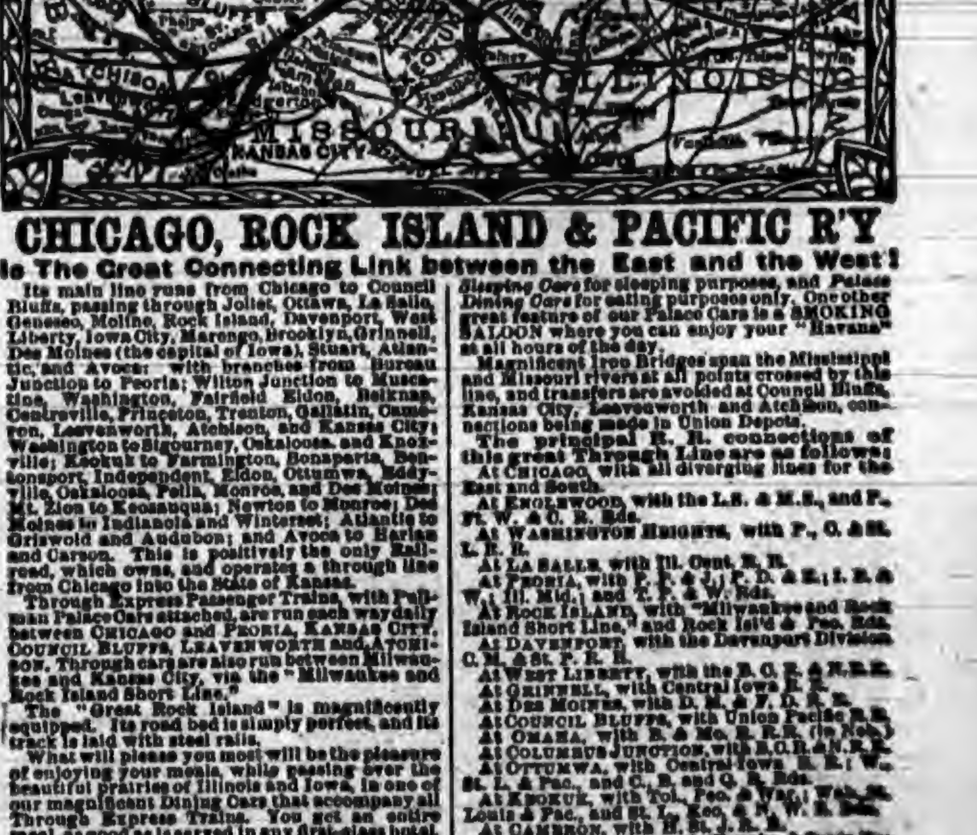
From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 28.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

A MAN
WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE



CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.
At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.
At WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.
At LA SALLE, with Ill. Cent. R. R.
At PEORIA, with P. P. & J.; P. D. & E.; I. B. & W.; Ill. Mid.; and T. P. & W. Rds.
At ROCK ISLAND, with "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line," and Rock Isl'd & Peo. Rds.
At DAVENPORT, with the Davenport Division C. M. & St. P. R. R.
At WEST LIBERTY, with the B. C. R. & N. R. R.
At GRINNELL, with Central Iowa R. R.
At DES MOINES, with D. M. & F. D. R. R.
At COUNCIL BLUFFS, with Union Pacific R. R.
At OMAHA, with B. & Mo. R. R. R. (in Neb.)
At COLUMBUS JUNCTION, with B. C. R. & N. R. R.
At OTTUMWA, with Central Iowa R. R.; W., St. L. & Pac., and C. B. and Q. R. Rds.
At KEOKUK, with Tol., Peo. & War.; Wab., St. Louis & Pac., and St. L., Keo. & N. W. R. Rds.
At CAMERON, with H. St. J. R. R.
At ATCHISON, with Atch., Topeka & Santa Fe; Atch. & Neb. and Cen. Br. U. P. R. Rds.
At LEAVENWORTH, with Union Pac. and Kan. Cent. R. Rds.
At KANSAS CITY, with all lines for the West and Southwest.

PULLMAN PALACE CARS are run through to PEORIA, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, KANSAS CITY, ATCHISON, and LEAVENWORTH.

Tickets via this Line, known as the "Great Rock Island Route," are sold by all Ticket Agents in the United States and Canada.

Commodore Nutt.

Col. Goshen, the giant, tells the following story concerning his former traveling partner, the late Commodore Nutt, the dwarf: "He has killed me many a time," he said. "You know I used to be the giant, and he Jack, the Giant Killer. Sometimes we would change the parts, and he would play the giant and I would kill him. Most giants and dwarfs are alike in one thing. The dwarfs don't seem to have room for furniture, and the giants are like the six and seven story houses—nothing much in the top. But the commodore was quick and sharp. Poor little fellow, he did himself harm by getting to be a sort of sporting man. I will never forget the trick he played me out in Terre Haute some four years ago. We were traveling together in an opera company, and a big house had been sold. The commodore started on a little racket, and the manager got scared. 'Colonel,' says he to me, I'm afraid the commodore won't come to time for the performance to-night.' 'I'll see to that,' says I, and I just picked him up, carried him upstairs, and locked him in a room. When I went up after him in the evening, there he was, as drunk as a lord, and I had the key of the room in my pocket all the time. When he saw me he put on a comic look and began to sing:

I am Timothy Tottle,
I'm fond of my bottle,

That's a song he used to sing, and I couldn't help but laugh for the life of me. You see he had slipped some money under the door to the hall-boy, and got him to bring him up some liquor and a clay pipe. The boy put the pipe-stem through the key-hole, and the commodore stood on his toes and got all the whisky he wanted without having the door opened. Finally he quit the business, and started a concert saloon in Salem, Oregon, but got into trouble with the authorities. He tried it again in San Francisco, and again in Deadwood City. But he was too little a man to keep things orderly, and at each place there was so much trouble the police broke him up. He had a similar saloon up town on Sixth avenue for awhile, but had no better success. Last summer he was a deputy superintendent at the Rockaway pier, rigged out in a commodore's suit. The commodore was fond of a bluff occasionally. Says he to me once: 'Colonel, I slugged a fellow the other day and knocked him into the water.' 'How high was he, commodore?' said I. 'Well, about six feet,' said he, and he three feet and seven inches high."

The commodore has commanded as much as $150 a week salary, and made a good deal of money, but his unsuccessful business ventures are believed to have cost him a good deal. About two and a half years ago he married Miss Lillian Elstar, at Redwood, Cal. Mrs. Nutt is a small woman, but is a great deal taller than her husband was.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

VALUABLE AND DESIRABLE OUT-LOTS.

BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER OF THE DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of Charles F. Mader, deceased, I will, on the premises herein described, on SATURDAY, THE 30TH DAY OF JULY, 1881,

at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale at public auction, a part of the Mader farm, now platted into desirable out-lots, containing from two to five acres each, and designated as "Mader's addition" to the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, as follows:

Out lots numbered one (1), two (2) and three (3), each containing five (5) acres.

No. four (4) contains 2 31 acres.

No. five (5) contains 2 28 acres.

No. six (6) contains 2 20 acres.

No. seven (7) contains 2 10 acres.

No. eight (8) contains 4 acres.

Each will be offered and sold separately. It is appraised at about one hundred dollars per acre, and will be sold for not less than two-thirds the appraised value thereof.

TERMS: One-third of the purchase price, to be paid on day of sale, one-third in twelve months, and the other third in eighteen months from day of sale, the purchaser giving notes bearing interest, waiving valuation laws and for attorney's fees, for the deferred payments, and the notes to be secured by mortgages on the premises sold.

The above lots, except No. 8, front on the Auburn and Waterloo highway. Number 8 lies on the north end of Van Buren street. There cannot be found a more desirable locality around for an out-lot than is now offered, and it may be years before another equally good opportunity will be presented to purchase such property. Original plat can be seen at W. L. Penfield's office.

A Visit to Calcutta.

On our way, we crossed the Grand Maiden, a public place, in which we precelved at least three thousand Mohammedans kneeling in regular lines, shoes off, arranged in rows behind them, foreheads bare and touching the earth, in adoration of the prophet Mohammed. Next we met in a narrow street, Bengolee Baboas, gentlemen of Bengal, without hats and arrayed in loose flowing durzas, shirts with skirts. Some of these Baboas were perfect Apollos in appearance; others bore great resemblance to ideal pictures of Julius Cæsar, Antony, and other noble Romans. We passed a crowd of painted Hindoos, each very scantily arrayed, and ornamented with a daub of paint on the bridge of his nose, the inseparable emblem of the idolator. The Bheasti Wallah was everywhere; he had tied to his back the skin of a goat filled with water, with which he supplied the thirsty multitude and sprinkled the parched thoroughfares. Marching by us with regular military tread was a squad of native Sepoy police, who looked quite commanding in their white shirts and scarlet turbans. We were riding in ghamy, a sort of closed carriage, but learned afterward that the popular mode of city travel was by palanquins, which are always available on the street of any East Indian city at a trifling expense. These palanquins are carried by four naked Hindoos or painted heathens called "palkee mallahs," a wallah or bearer, who importune every Englishman in the following terms: "Palkee, Sahib! Juldajow-master palkee," which interpreted means, "Palanquin, sir, I'll go quick; will you have the palanquin?" and you often hear them chat, as they bear you at a rapid pace, the Hindoostaned words, with now and then an uninterpretable English term thrown in, of a popular song, the literal meaning of which is that the English Sahib is full of champagne and wants to be taken home as quickly as possible, and that he is willing to give extra backsheesh (money) for it.

Turning the corner of a street which lead from Dhurumtolla street to Jahn Bazar, we met a yellow mob of idol-worshipers, carrying on their shoulders dozens of enormous and hideous-looking wooden idols, and amid the din and noise of crazy horns, the brassy banging of gongs and the dull thud-thud of numerous tomtoms, they drew near to the holy Ganges, where, as we are told, they were to cast these distorted shapes into the holy stream, and then plunge in themselves, under the protection of these inane gods. If a crocodile seizes one of them, or he turns sick and lies down and dies on the sands, or the tide rises and sweeps him away, then he is happy; he is accepted of the gods. But if the tide refuses him, and the crocodiles reject him, he is kicked out as vile, and unworthy the privileges of his caste.

A first night in India is always full of prospective horrors for the newcommer. At midnight, in the principal streets, the festive jackal holds high carnival and emits squalls and runs the discordant gamut, giving forth sounds as of an amateur opera company at rehearsal, or the first attempt of a juvenine trombone player. I have actually seen the effect of a whole scene of native opera ruined by these screeching scavengers, which in droves of 50 and 100 assemble on the public streets and in front of churches and theaters, and howl as if in opposition.

As the Mohammedan can never be Hadggis until after performing his pilgrimage to Mecca, neither can our modern magicians become perfect in their art until they have visited the Indies to see the clever manipulation of the native conjurer. They perform the most marvelous things in the streets, corridors and on the decks of vessels, without the ain of aparatus—the "basket trick" and "the growth of the mango tree" being among their easiest performances. The growth of the mango tree is illustrated by placing a seed beneath a little heap of earth, which is covered for a few brief moments; the cover is removed and behold! we see a green shoot just peeping from the top of the earth. It is again covered and removed at intervals of three minutes, until we have qute a pretentious tree of about three feet in height. The mystery of the basket trick, as performed in India, lies in the unaccountable disappearance of the girl who is placed beneath an oval cover of reticulated straws; swords are run through this covering hilt deep, and in every direction—it is even trodden flat, and when raised the girl is gone. A laugh is then heard, we turn in that direction and we behold, with open-mouthed astonishment, the girl running toward us.—Cor. San Francisco Chronical.

Santa Anna's Cork Leg.

(Cor. Chicago Tribune.)

PENKIN, Ill., June 10.—This city has a curiosity—a relic of the Mexican war. The leg that Santa Anna left behind in his hasty flight from the battle-field of Cerro Gordo, and which was captured by Sergeant J. M. Gill and Privates Samuel Rhodes and Samuel Waldron, of company G. fourth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, has just been returned to Sergeant Gill by Miss Mary McCook Baldwin, of Paris, France. Her father, Gen. Daniel McCook, having with Mr. Gill's consent taken the leg to Washington, D. C., for the purpose of depositing it in the patent office or Smithsonian institute, as Mr. Gill thinks about 1862, as Mrs. Baldwin thinks about 1867 or 1868. But for some unknown cause the leg never reached the National depository of such relics, and on the death of Gen. McCook and the subsequent death of his wife, the leg, with other articles of virtue, were sent to Mrs. Baldwin in Paris. Sergeant Gill has been working for a year to find the exact whereabouts of this trophy, thinking, and justly too, that a soldier who had carried it 200 miles, and did a soldier's duty in an enemy's country, was entitled to its care and custody. Mrs. Baldwin knew Sergeant Gill's title to be perfect, and forwarded the leg from Paris as soon as she learned that he desired it. It arrived in a neat box, locked, that the officers in the New York Custom House could inspect it. The leg is in good preservation, has been well cared for, the leather of the boot shows fine quality finish. In fact, a well-made boot. There is a small break at the ankle joint, but this had been made and mended before his capture. Mr. Gill will not be very likely to allow another to take the relic away from Pekin during his lifetime, but, as he has no children, probably at his death it may reach the patent office.

A Lover of the Period.

It was night in a Walnut street parlor. Out of doors the wind moaned and the sleet rattled, but within all was warmth and cozy comfort. The crimson upholstery glowed tranquilly under the soft light of the argand, and the flickering rays from the ruddy grate shaped many an elfin shadow on the carpet and in the corners.

Two parties, male and female, were sitting on the sofa.

This sofa was designed for that number, but to-night there were, accidentally, on one end of it, nine volumes of an encyclopedia.

Consequently the volumes were somewhat pressed for sitting room.

The occupants of the other end of the sofa were Paul Flump and Miss More McMinnywink.

Paul was saying: "Miss More, pardon my boldness, but I must speak. Long ago you must have guessed the great feelings which—which I feel for you. Oh, cannot you return them—some of them at least? I—I love you, I do."

"Paul," she answered softly, but firmly: "You must not talk so! Forget it, I pray you. We are both poor, and should have no fine house nor pretty furniture, nor sweet carriage, nor lovely dresses, and—and all that. Forgive me, Paul, but I must have all these when I marry, and you cannot furnish them."

"Yes, I forgive you, I do! Fact was, I—I was under a false impression; I—er—thought you could supply us all them ere things. I forgive you."

A Queer Chinese Trade.

The more we know about the Chinese, the more curious do their manners and customs seem to us. They have such an odd conceit of things, such an original mode of living and supplying the necessaries of life. An instance in hand is their mode of hatching the spawn of fish, thus protecting it from accidents which destroy so large a portion. The fishermen collect with care on the margin and surface of waters, all these gelatinous masses which contain the spawn.

After they have found a sufficient quantity, they fill with it the shell of a fresh hen's egg, which they have previously emptied, stop up the hole, and put it under a sitting fowl. At the expiration of a certain number of days, they break the shell in water warmed by the sun. The young fry are presently hatched, and are kept in pure fresh water until they are large enough to be thrown into the pond with the old fish. The sale of spawn for this purpose is an important trade.

Wonders of the Ocean.

THE FROZEN SEA.

Whatever opinions may be entertained as to the existence of an open sea around the north pole, it is agreed on all hands that there is a polar frozen sea. In both the northern and southern high latitudes, it has been found that there is a certain limit beyond which the progress of ships is barred by an impenetrable fence of ice. What is beyond it is more or less a matter of speculation. Concerning the frozen sea of the Artic regions, much more is known than has been ascertained about the frozen sea in the Antartic circle; many more expeditions have been sent out to examine the nature of the sea around the north pole than have ventured to the south; but it would appear that the latter is, of the two, the more impervious. Ocean surveys, from the time of Cook to the time of Ross and Penny, have been unanimous in reporting that there is no indication of a break anywhere along the southern barrier. Their ships sailed for many degrees along the outer fence of an icy wall, of which the first shelf was as high as their mainyard. Above and beyond that shelf, as far as the assisted sight could reach, there was nothing but solid ice, save in some few places, where what looked like land was joined on to and backed the frozen fringe. Mile after mile, day after day, the ships sailed on coastwise, keeping a pretty straight line of latitude, watching narrowly for an opening in the hard ice cliff. Not an opening ever presented itself, and the results of discovery in the Antartic regions have been to show that land, probably in continental proportions, does exist beyond the ice in some parts.

The frozen condition of the Artic ocean is a fact within the experience of every whaler, though the question of the extent to which the sea is frozen remains unsettled. At a degree of latitude which varies with the season of the year, the progress of ships northward is barred by a barrier of frozen water. During the summer months, when occasionally the thermometer will register a heat equal to the mean temperature of the tropics, and such life as there is in the Artic circle wakes up and renews its lease, the zone of the north is loosened, the outer edge of the belt cracks and splits into vast mountains of ice, which, becoming detached, get under way and start for the south. From the end of May they are to be met within the north Atlantic, sailing majestically and dangerously towards the warmer regions of which the temperature is reduced and invigorated by their icy presence. The question is whether there is any general break-up of the frozen sea, whether in the more northerly parts the pack ice ever become loose, and again whether, supposing it does not come loose, the pack ice drifts bodily southward as it has been suggested it does. Ships that have been nipped by the ice, and have been surprised by winter in the north, report that during their captivity they have been carried many degrees to the southward by the drift of the pack in which they were inclosed. Lieut. De Haven, of the American navy, when in command of the United States expedition after Sir John Franklin, was frozen up for nine months, at the beginning of which time he was in mid-channel in Wellington Straigts, and at the end he found himself 1,000 miles to the southward. H. M. S. Resolute, which was abandoned by Capt. Kellet in the ice, remained in the cold embrace of the ice nip for several years, but in the end was borne south till the temperature burst her bonds and she was recaptured and sent home unharmed. These instances only prove that the particular portion of the frozen sea in which the ships were bound became loose, though there is good reason to think that the entire belt of ice about the north pole does in ordinary warm summers become detached, new ice being found on the extreme northerly limit of the sea as soon as winter returns, in order to replace what has been, during the summer, pushed away to the southward.

If we may credit the great amount of evidence which has been adduced, we should adopt the general belief of Artic exployers, that beyond the frozen sea there is a large open sea, free from ice, which extends for several degrees all around the pole. Dr. Kane, in one of his search expeditions, crossed a barrier of ice a hundred miles broad, of which the northern boundary was reached in the eighty-third degree of north latitude. There he found an open sea extending in an unbroken sheet of water as far as the eye could reach towards the pole, the waves broke upon the shore, and there was a tidal variation in the height of the water, the temperature of which was four degrees above freezing. Whether this sea was only temporarily free from ice or whether it is always open is a question yet to be solved. Explorers who have penetrated far to the northward of Dr. Kane's position have reported the whole place ice-bound, with apparently an unmoving, fast-anchored ice-pack stretching away to the north.

First Steam-Whistle on the Missouri

The story of the first steam-whistle on the Missouri river is amusing. Its introduction dates back to 1844. At that time the settlers on the Missouri river were in the habit of making regular yearly visits to St. Louis to do their trading for themselves and friends. They were not provided with daily intercourse with the outside world; and many who lived back from the river seldom, if ever, saw a steamboat once a year. It happened that, during the fall of 1844, the new steamboat, Lexington, started up the Missouri river, loaded down to the guards with freight. Among the passengers were Judge Joseph C. Ranson, Theodore Warner, of Lexington, Ben Holliday, (afterward the famous overland stage proprietor), Col. Pomeroy, of Lexington, and a planter of Platte county, named George Yocum.

The steamer, Lixington, was provided with a steam-whistle—the first used on the Missouri river—and, as it happened, no one knew anything about it, except Warner, who was a wag and a lover of a joke. The night after leaving St. Louis, the passengers were collected together playing cards (for fun) in the cabin, when the talk turned to steamboat explosions, then very common.

"I feel perfectly safe on this boat," said Warner as he dealt the cards.

"Why?" inquired Yocum, the planter.

"Why?" echoed the rest of the company.

"I will tell you," said the wag, carefully studying his cards. "This boat is provided with a new patent safety-valve, which notifies the passengers on board just when it is about to blow up. It is a concern which makes an unearthly noise; and when you hear it, it is time to get back aft, or jump overboard."

Notwithstanding the fact that Warner told his story with the most solemn and earnest countenance, some were skeptical. Not so, however, with the planter. Next morning, when the Lexington was steaming up the long stretch of the river just below Washington, Mo., the passengers were at breakfast. The meal had been called, and all were busily engaged in doing justice to the kind of meals they were accustomed to serve on steamboats in those days. Suddenly the whistle commenced to blow, the first time on the trip. The passengers looked at each other a moment; and horror and dismay spread itself over their faces. The first man to realize the situation, and act, was Yocum the planter, who, with hair erect and blanched face, jumped up, crying as he pulled over one after another of the passengers—

"Run, run for your lives! Follow me, and let's save our lives!"

Of course there was a stampede for the rear of the boat; and it was only by the exertions of some of the crew that the more excited were restrained from jumping into the river.

The Original Penny.

The old, old penny in England, as in other countries, was of silver, and its appearance throughout the earliest time of its history would astonish those who knew nothing of numismatic lore. From the Saxon times, when it was the only silver piece extinct, till those of Edward I., it was stamped with a square cross. This enabled the coin to be readily broken into halves or quarters, which then served the purpose of halfpence or farthings. But the latter coin was not much inferior to the value of the present English penny, inasmuch as the unbroken pieces were valued at one-thirtieth of a mark, or three pence sterling. At this time five of them seem to have made a skilling, or shilling, so that the relations between what are now chief English silver and bronze coins have entirely altered in the course of six centuries. King Edward, who reformed the coinage, like everything else, was the first to issue pennies without the indented cross, and to make up for the loss of the queer-shaped halfpennies and farthings heretofore in use, supplemented the silver coinage with circular pieces, bearing the same value and denomination. He fixed the standard of the penny, moreover, by ordering that it should weigh thirty-two grains of well ground wheat, or, what was probably a more accurate test, that twenty pennies should weigh one ounce.

"You wouldn't believe it," remarked Bliffers, who had just returned from 'Yurrup,' "but I tell you it's a fact. There are plenty of little shavers in Paris, not more than three or four years old, who can speak French!" And Bliffers wondered why we manifest so little surprise at the remark.—Yawcob Strauss.

WITHHELD.

Your dainty note lies before me,
And its contents have filled me with grief;
For you know that I fairly adore thee,
That, of all, I hold you the chief.
Yet you say it is best that we sever
The tie which has bound us, and be Henceforward strangers forever,
Through time and eternity.

You return all the presents I gave you—
Pictures and jewels and ring;
Those [illegible] letters I sent, too,
And songs which you've not heart to sing.
You say that it pains you, this parting,
For more than mere words can express;
And you write, the tear-drops are starting,
And you're filled with the direst distress.

Yes, you've returned all the jewels and letters;
The music and pictures—all trash!
Your request I obey, and the fetters
That bound you, I break—though 'tis rash.
The gifts you return are all worthless;
The choicest and best you retain.
What is it? A gift that is priceless;
Oh, give me my heart back again!

RUBY.

An Interesting Story.

Two young girls were in their room dressing for a horseback ride.

Ellen More was just 18, short and plump, with dancing gray eyes, bonny brown curls and rosy cheeks. She wore a black riding habit, which was relieved by a simple bunch of scarlet geraniums and white olive blossoms at her throat.

Ruby Rae was taller by three inches than her cousin, and her form and features were of rarest loveliness. Her manner at times was dignified, reserved and haughty, and again merry and unrestrained as Ellen's. Her big black eyes could sparkle with mirth, soften with affection, or blaze with anger.

To-day they shone their merriest in anticipation of a rare treat. She was a Northern girl, just out of school, and making her first visit to the South. She long had desired to become an accomplished horsewoman, and bade fair to realize her wish. Being perfectly fearless, her first lesson proved altogether satisfactory, and to-day she hoped to add to her reputation.

Her habit was similar to her cousin's, the scarlet and white blossoms enhancing the brilliance of her complexion and adding a deeper shade to her dusky hair, while the close-fitting dress outlined her perfect figure.

Picking up their whips, the girls descended to the front "gallery," where stood the groom holding their horses. Ellen's was a large bay, restive as herself. He stood pawing the ground impatient to be off.

"You better be keerful, Miss Ellen; Mazeppa he mighty skeery to-day."

"Never mind, Sally Ann. He knows me. You and I are good friends, are we not, Mazeppa?" said Ellen, patting her favorite on the neck. He pricked up his ears, but stood still, while she mounted unassisted.

The animal furnished for Ruby was small, but fleet as a deer. Sally Ann, as the negroes had nicknamed the groom, led him up to the steps, and in a moment both girls were out of the gate and down the road through the plantation.

"Go way! Miss Ruby ain't no new beginner, sho'!" said Sally Ann, gazing in admiration after the retreating figures. They had chosen to dispense with his attendance, much to his mortification.

"How the wind blows!" exclaimed Ruby.

"Yes; it will probably rain about to-morrow. Then we may bid farewell to horseback riding for a while, because in wet weather the roads are most impassable."

"Then let us not mind a little wind. But who is that coming?"

"Where? O, that is Emory Lloyd," said Ellen, with deepening color, shaking her curls into order.

"Well, and who is Emory Lloyd?"

"The son of our next neighbor. He has just returned from the city or you would have seen him before. I dare say he has been to call on us now. Good evening, Mr. Lloyd," as he slackened his pace.

"Good morning, Miss Ellen. You are enjoying your favorite exercise, I see," said he, lifting his hat and bowing low. "I have just left your father, who told me you had gone out for a constitutional."

"Yes, and I fear it is the last I shall take for a while. Those clouds look rather threatening. Allow me to introduce you to my Yankee cousin. Miss Rae, Mr. Lloyd."

"Welcome to Dixie-land, Miss Rae. But you did not come early enough to see the full-blown glory of her scenery. Look, 'the sere and yellow leaf' is already making its appearance."

They were riding over a pretty tract of country, the path leading through a dense cypress forest that covered a part of the plantation belonging to Mr. More. It was December, yet there had been but one frost, and that a slight one—just enough to announce the coming of winter. On either hand the overhanging branches were festooned with clinging Spanish moss—its gray hue contrasting finely with the varied tints of the autumn-like woods. The dying brilliance of the more perishable leaves, and the dark, glossy foliage of the evergreen, holly and magnolia, with here and there a bright red hay-ball gleaming like a gaudily-plumaged bird, looked very beautiful through the swaying veil of the moss. The huge, seamed trunks of the oak were twined about with wild vines. Here and there a tall, branchless stump stood, like a broken column, draped with a close mantle of these climbing parasites. The ground was thickly studded with switch-cane, Spanish dagge's, the slim, pointed leaves of the low palmetto and offshoots of various trees.

On the verge of the wood was a little wooden store with a "gallery" or porch in front. Here the plantation hands could get credit, at an abominable sacrifice, for tobacco, whisky, salt or fresh meat, groceries, dry goods, shoes, hardware, wooden ware, earthen ware and, in fact, almost anything the simple tastes of the negroes could require.

Running along by this curiosity shop was a lane crossing a small bayou or creek, on a bridge made of rough logs laid loosely across the timbers. This lane was bordered by a hedge of Cherokee roses and yellow jasmine that in the spring filled the air with perfume. An occasional squalid negro cabin lent a picturesque addition to the scene, its dilapidated gallery fringed with maiden-hair fern, and its tumble-down chimney made of mud and sticks. Strings of red peppers adorned the outside walls on either side of the door. Nearly all the hovels had bunches of tobacco hanging to dry in the sun, and yellow pumpkins and gourds spread on the roofs to ripen. About the doorways played nearly-naked little black children.

"Isn't that M. Besson standing on that gallery?" said Ruby.

"It is, and I see he has some papers in his hand; those he promised you from home, I presume. How do you do, M. Besson?" continued Ellen.

"Famously, Miss Ellen, and I see that the wind, or something, makes the roses in your cheeks bloom brighter than ever. Miss Rae, I have those papers we spoke of, and if you will allow me I shall take great pleasure in calling with them some time this evening."

"Many thanks. We are always glad to see you, even when you do not bear offerings. However, as we are not going directly home, you may bring them and save me the trouble of carrying them about, for I am wofully lazy."

They chatted a few minutes longer, then separated, Mr. Lloyd to pursue his way down the coast, and the girls to resume their interrupted gallop. They flew by the pretty white cottages that graced one side of the road, scarcely turning their heads to notice the smooth lawns, climbing vines and orange trees laden with yellow ripe fruit. It being the time of low water, an occasional glimpse of the river was all that could be had over the high levee.

Entering the open gate of a small plantation, the girls rode slowly through the negro quarter, nodding pleasantly to the inmates who came to the door to greet "de young misses."

The quarter was a row of one-story huts arranged on each side of a road. On some plantations the overseer's house is situated at the head of these hovels, and differs from them in nothing but size. Between the quarter and the sugar-house was a large square covered with burning trash from the cane-carrier. In many of the larger mills this refuse is used for fuel.

Grinding season was almost over, but there was some cane yet standing. At this time it was a little yellow from the recent frost, but early in the season a field of cane is a pretty sight—looking, when there is a slight breeze, like a billowy green sea and being several shades lighter than a cornfield. The hands, men and women, were at work; some cutting with the long, hooked cane-knife, some loading the three-mule carts, and others driving these clumsy, wide wheeled vehicles. Riding along near the workers was a young man, spying whom, Ellen exclaimed:

"Let us hasten by before he can see who we are, Ruby. See him quicken his gait to cross our path! He is Mr. Lloyd's brother, just returned from Europe. He doesn't know us, though, and it will be fun to punish his curiosity. I don't see why he didn't call with Emory."

They gave rein and dashed by with twinkling eyes and coquettish glances back at the inquisitive stranger. But they had gone not further than half an acre when snap went Ellen's stirrup-strap. Mazeppa was in too high spirits for her to venture to ride without a stirrup, so, slackening their speed and turning back with rueful faces, they craved assistance of him they would have avoided. Ellen knew the name of the fair knight, but had not been introduced, as he was a recent acquisition to society. He had only the day before arrived from Europe, where he had been traveling after his graduation at Edinburgh.

Introducing herself and then Ruby, Ellen showed him her detached stirrup, and requested him to replace it. He dismounted and hastened to do her bidding, taking a wonderfully long time to accomplish the task, meantime chatting most pleasantly.

"You are from the North, Miss Rae, are you not?" said he in the course of the rambling talk.

"Yes, I came South to eat sugar-cane and to learn to ride horseback."

"Do you mean to intimate that you are a novice at horsemanship? I took you both to be experienced equestriennes from the meteoric manner in which you flashed by me."

"No, this is but my third lesson."

I should think you would be afraid of falling from so unaccustomed a seat."

"The idea of Ruby fearing anything," laughed Ellen. "She has kept ahead of me this evening in a manner most provoking. I shall have to be looking to my laurels."

By this time the repairing was done, the young man reluctantly surrendering the stirrup to Ellen's foot. Just then a boat whistled at the landing.

"There! I am obliged to take that boat for the city. I was hoping that it would be late and that you would allow me to accompany you to open the gates," said he, in a disappointed tone.

He remounted, and, expressing the hope that they soon would become better acquainted, lifted his hat and rode toward the river. They took no heed of his caution against fast riding, but started off again at full speed, going about the same distance as before, when Ruby felt her saddle turning. She drew the bridle, removed her foot from the stirrup, and jumped lightly to the ground in time to escape a fall. Gathering up her riding-skirt in high glee, she cried:

"Now what are we to do? I cannot straighten that saddle. Isn't this fun? Just like a novel, I declare! Oh! there is our gallant knight dashing back to see how much damage is done. See, that saddle is turned completely over! What if it had turned the other way!"

"Are you hurt? How did it happen? You are sure you are not hurt?" anxiously inquired young Lloyd, throwing himself from his horse and hastening toward Ruby.

She stood with her habit gathered up in one hand and the bridle in the other, her eyes dancing, her cheeks flushed, and her white teeth gleaming through her rosy lips.

"We are unfortunate to-day, Mr. Lloyd," said she, and she looked as if she enjoyed misfortune. "We are sorry to have to trouble you again. Sally Ann did not make this girth tight enough, and, in consequence, I came near getting a fall."

"I wonder you did not fall. You must be favorable to the gods, and under their especial care."

"O, yes, I propitiate them. I promised unending sacrifices if they would give us a fair day and a pleasant ride. Our ride has been somewhat interrupted, but it all seems so romantic that I should quite enjoy it if we had not so often been obliged to encroach on your good nature." She flashed a look from her bright eyes. The conquest was complete.

"If I dared I would bless the happy accidents that have placed it within my power to be of assistance to two fairer ladies than whom belted knight never served."

He glanced at Ellen, then bent a look of unmistakable regard on the merry face of Ruby.

She laughingly ignored the hand he proffered to assist her, and, placing her foot in the stirrup, sprung lightly to her seat, turning to thank him with her witching smile.

"How well you mount," said he, with admiring candor.

"Isn't this the most romantic adventure you ever heard of outside of a novel? But it is well I feel so secure of Emory, else I should be envious of such marked preference for other charms than mine," said Ellen, with mock indignation.

Young Lloyd had again taken leave of them to go to the boat, which was waiting for him, and the girls once more had turned their horses' heads toward home.

"He will not stay long in the city, I am certain. He will be anxious to learn if we met with further accident. Emory will return with him; then we will show you what Southern pleasuring is."

As Ellen had predicted, in a few days the young men returned, and the new-comer soon became as frequent and welcome a visitor as his brother.

Mr. More's hospitality was unbounded and his house was always full to overflowing with merry youths and maidens. Hence not a day came without its round of frolic. The days were spent in visiting the different sugar mills, in strolls through the surrounding country, and in excursions on the river, both by steamboat and oared-boat. For those who wished to stay at home there were archery, croquet and other out-of-door amusements. For the evenings were charades, impromptu concerts by the plantation hands, and dancing parties at which a couple of superannuated negroes acted as musicians. Ruby was called upon to read and charmed all by her perfect personations, comic, pathetic and tragic. She was the bright, particular star round which the lesser lights circled. And Ellen was not a whit jealous or envious. Her generous, affectionate nature had naught but homage for her gifted cousin.

Best of all were the moonlight strolls on the levee or about Mr. More's spacious grounds, or the cozy evenings when none called but Emory and Frank Lloyd. All other suitors were in despair when they saw Ruby's marked preference for the handsome graduate. They came, and went away resolved never to return. But the sparkling eyes and musical voice of their enchantress wooed them from their determination and they again ventured within the charmed circle only to become more and more bewitched.

One morning, a short time after the memorable ride, Mr. More had business in the next parish. He asked the girls if they would like to go with him in the carriage. They eagerly assented. Soon they were on the way, traveling at a lively rate, Mr. More's fine horses being in excellent spirits. Before long the clouds that all day had been floating lazily in the sky gathered together and fell in a brisk shower. A colored man passing in a wagon got down and helped to put up the curtains. The rain, however, still came in through the front. As they were near Mr. Lloyd's plantation gate, Mr. More suggested that they go into the sugar-house until the cloud should pass.

"Yes, yes," quickly agreed both girls.

"Ah, ha! I remember now. This is the day the boys were to visit the mill. I wondered why you were so eager to take a long, dry ride with an old man like me. You are witches, both of you, and knew something would happen to detain us here."

They merrily disclaimed any foreknowledge of the accident.

As they hoped, the young men were in the mill and hastened to welcome their guests. The elder Mr. Lloyd, coming in just here, carried off Mr. More to look at some improvements he had been devising, declaring that the children were big enough to take care of themselves. Emory and Ellen betook themselves to a secluded corner where they might have a cozy talk with no inquisitive lookers on, and Frank offered to initiate Ruby into the mysteries of sugar-making. They strolled about, he proving a most devoted teacher and she a remarkably attentive pupil. But if any one had been near to listen to the conversation he would have discovered that the subject, in some subtle manner, drifted into that dangerously-fascinating topic which causes the cheeks to flush, the eyes to grow tender and the pulsations of the heart to become delicious throbbings. Yes, they were in love, and the minutes flew by unheeded as they conned the pages of the story old, yet ever new.

All too soon the sky cleared, and Mr. More came to say that he must proceed on his journey. Ruby longed to return home and indulge the new and indefinable sensation that had taken possession of her; but, fearing the raillery of her uncle and cousin, she endeavored to take her part in the desultory conversation. She was relieved to find that Ellen was herself too much preoccupied to notice her pensiveness.

Returning home in time for a late dinner, Ruby pleaded extreme fatigue as an excuse to escape to her room. Here she reviewed with glowing cheeks the dialogue of the afternoon and fell asleep to continue it in her dreams.

The next evening Emory and Frank called as usual. As it was a clear, bright night, they took their chairs out upon the veranda. After talking for awhile, Frank requested Ruby to get her shawl and walk with him along the river. She complied, but with a fluttering heart, for she anticipated the declaration which followed.

"Do you know why I asked you to walk?" said he abruptly, after they had proceeded for a time in silence.

"To see the reflection of the sky upon the water? Isn't it beautiful?" said Ruby, but keeping her eyes turned away from him.

"Yes, the night is glorious. But that is not the reason. I wished to make a confession. To confess that I have dared to look with mortal affection on an angel of beauty and goodness. That I have dared to wish to shrine her in my own home. Worse than all, that I even have dared to hope that this bright being looks not unkindly on my presumption. Am I bold beyond forgiveness? Do I mistake that averted look? You do not take your hand from my arm. Will you allow me to guide you through life as well as along this pleasant shore? May I claim this little hand as mine? Will you be my wife—my own precious wife?"

Slowly she placed her hand in his. He clasped it close and raised it to his lips for one long, passionate kiss, then drew her into his arms.

The happiest time of their lives had come. And it was a true happiness, for each was worthy of the other.

Ruby was the daughter of sensible parents who had trained their child to domestic as well as social duties. Under the direction of her Yankee mother, she had become an excellent housekeeper, while her father had been able fully to gratify her thirst for book knowledge. Added to this solid foundation were the graceful accomplishments and brilliant, though good-natured wit, that ever drew around her an admiring circle. Her disposition was naturally warm and impulsive, but a generally sound judgment gave her proper self-control. She was frank and honest. Contact with the world had not yet taught her to hide her better feelings under a mask. There was, therefore, no coquetting with the object of her affection. She gave her hand freely, though tremblingly, to the one who had possessed her heart for weeks.

Her lover was a true Southerner—chivalrous, warm-hearted and warm-headed. His lofty form and dignified bearing commanded respect, while his winning courtesy and true manliness gained him a speedy place in the hearts of his associates.

Frank urged an immediate union. Emory and Ellen were to be married in a few weeks and he thought there might as well be a double wedding.

"That is impossible. We must first ask my parents' consent. I could not marry any one without that. Then I am an only child, and they never would hear to my marrying away from home."

"But, darling, your parents know our family well. I shall write to them to-night. Beside, you are at your own uncle's house, and your father and mother might come here. They would thus, also, escape a long, cold, Northern winter."

"Yes, but how could I get ready in that time? I think we had better wait until spring. I will return home next week, consult mamma and papa, and give you an answer as soon as possible. There, dear, do not persist. You don't know how stubborn I am. Think what nice long letters we can write to each other!"

He was forced to yield, though with a sigh, and they soon joined the others.

Ellen was loth to lose her cousin so suddenly, but consoled herself with the thought that in a few months they would again be together. With her accustomed generosity she sacrificed her desire to have Ruby for her bridesmaid in order that she might the sooner leave for home.

The days and weeks came 'and went slowly to the impatient lover, but more quickly to Ruby, who had the diversions and occupations incident to a bridal preparation. At last came merry May, when Ruby and Frank were wed. Ruby was resplendent in white satin, filmy lace and odorous flowers—beauty's fit embellishment. The bridegroom was happiness personified, and one and all pronounced it a most joyous occasion. The ceremony was performed at home, in the midst of loving friends and relatives. Among the latter were Emory and Ellen Lloyd, then on their bridal tour. After the pronouncing of the solemn words came the reception. Then Ruby bade farewell to her tearful parents, and the newly-wedded pair joined Emory and Ellen in the carriage which was to take them to the depot. Thence they were to go to Boston, where they would take the steamer for Europe. Never was a bridal party followed by more hearty good wishes or—more old shoes, these latter thrown by the adoring servants, who had been in Mr. Rae's employ since Ruby's infancy.

Two years passed in travel. At the end of this time Ruby wrote her parents that they were on their way home, and that in passing they would stop for a few days.

Accordingly, one day a carriage drew up before the door of Mr. Rae's city mansion. From it alighted a gentleman and lady, whom loving eyes recognized as their long-absent daughter. Another woman followed them bearing a peculiar-shaped parcel. When they had entered the house Ruby took the bundle from the woman and laying it in her father's arms said:

"His name is Francis Rae Lloyd."

Predictions Verified.

Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, was reminded not long since by a friend who was at the University of Virginia with him of the curious verification of predictions made thirty years ago and more. Jackson, Thomas Mahone and Charles E. Fennor occupied contiguous rooms in the University of Virginia. They were fast friends, constant companions and the foremost men in their class. A brother student sketched the three in a group one day. "What shall I put under each figure?" he said, when he had completed the drawing. "Put under mine," said Jackson, "Jackson addressing the Senate of the United States." "And under mine," said Mahone, "delivering a lecture to the students of the University of Tennessee." "And under yours, Fennor?" "Oh, Fennor announcing a decision from the Supreme bench of Louisiana." The inscriptions were appended. Jackson is to-day in the Senate of the United States, Mahone is at Vanderbilt University, Tennessee, and Fennor is a member of the Supreme Court of Louisiana.

The Original Penny.

The old, old penny in England, as in other countries, was of silver, and its appearance throughout the earliest time of its history would rather astonish those who know nothing of numismatic lore. From the Saxon times, in which it was the only piece of silver extant, till those of Edward I., it was stamped with a square cross. This enabled the coin to be readily broken into halves or quarters, which then served the purpose of half-pence or farthings. But the latter coin was not much inferior to the value of the present English penny, inasmuch as the unbroken piece was valued at one-thirtieth of a mark or three-pence sterling. At this time five of them seem to have made a skilling, or shilling, so that the relations between what are now chief English silver and bronze coins have entirely altered in the course of six centuries. King Edward, who reformed the coinage, like everything else, was the first to issue pennies without the indented cross; and, to make up for the loss of the queer-shaped half-pennies and farthings hitherto in use, supplemented the silver coinage with circular pieces, bearing the same value and denomination. He fixed the standard of the penny, moreover, by ordering that it should weigh thirty-two grains of well-grown wheat, or, which was a more accurate test, that twenty pennies should weigh one ounce.

Gymnastics.

"Say, stranger, kin I git a fight in yere?" he asked, looking cautiously around and wetting his hands in a premonitory sort of way.

"What kind of a fight would you like?" asked the bar-keeper, eyeing him gloomily.

"Pistol, knife, fist, tooth, anything. I want to live up to the prevailin' style. Suit yourself, pardner."

"Well," observed the host, picking up a base ball bat, "how'll this suit you? Like to try something in this line?"

"Haven't yer got a sword, or a cleaver, or a buzz saw, or somethin' that yer can rely onto if we git close together? Ain't there some weapon that goes more into the gore business?"

"This will do me," replied the bar-keeper waltzing over the bar and slamming the pugnacious visitor against the wall. "Don't need anything better than this," and he banged him across a beer table. "Got enough?"

"I ain't got started yit," said the stranger, as he lifted the bar-keeper over the stove. "Don't git impatient. I'll warm up in a second," and he hoisted his antagonist over the bar. "Jist indulge these yer false starts; I'll go under the string for a heat in a minute," and he hauled the bar-keeper out by the ear and broke half a dozen chairs with him. "I'll rouse up pooty quick now. Gimme a little time," and he danced a hornpipe on his foe and then pitched him through the back door. "Now I'm feelin' the inspiration! Whoop!" and he kicked his enemy under the porch. "Hi, stranger! Ain't this fruit? Talk about spring vegetables! What's lamb and peas to this?" and he fired the unhapppy bar-keeper down cellar.

"What was your object in wanting to fight me?" asked the walloped bar-keeper, as he crawled out and set the bottle and glass on the counter.

"Yer see, pardner," said the stranger, filling a glass to the brim, and holding it between his eyes and the light, "yer see, I've only been married a month, and I haven't been home for a week, and I wanted to be warmed up into trim for the matinee. There's four bar rooms twixt here and my house, and by the time I git thar pot lids and flatirons will only be an appetizer for me. Married man, pardner?"

"No," replied the barkeeper, shoving the bottle toward his late enemy, "I'm not, but my father was. I know how it is."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Wedding Ring.

In our day, and in our country, the wedding ring has become, to an almost universal extent, a thing of the past, and many there are of our people, married and intelligent, who cannot tell of the significance of the wedding ring, nor where it should be worn. From time immemorial the finger ring has been held as a symbol. In ancient times the seal was always upon a finger ring; and the husband, when he placed his ring upon the hand of his wife, signified thereby that he had given to her his seal, and that thenceforth she should be his representative. In old times it was the custom of the Doge of Venice annually, on Ascension Day, to go out upon the water, and from the deck of the ship Bucentaur to throw a ring into the sea, thereby signifying that he had "married the Adriatic," and that the beautiful sea was united with and tributary to Venice.

In the days of the commonwealth of England, Cromwell sought to put a stop to the custom of giving and wearing the wedding ring—and many of the Puritans did cast it aside—because of its heathen origin.

In old times, among the nobility, the wedding ring was the husband's seal; but later a simple hoop of gold is sufficient.

And now: Where shall the wedding ring be worn? Always—from the earliest times to the present—on the fourth finger of the left hand, counting the thumb as number one. If you ask why this finger is selected, I answer, there are several explanations; but the oldest, and therefore the most rational, is this: The ancients believed that a wonderful artery led from the fourth finger of the left hand directly to the heart, and hence this was the point whence love might send its mystic message most readily to the seat of the affections—to the throbbing centre of the soul.

Really, I like the idea of the wedding ring. It helps to make more strong and more binding the marriage rite; it helps to sanctify it. May we not attribute much—very much—of the present-day disposition to divorce to the throwing away of so many of the forms and symbols held sacred by our ancestors?

A Yankee Novelty in London.

A startling Yankee novelty just introduced in London is the one-shilling American rubber baby. It is washable, durable, and unbreakable; it resembles life; it coos at pleasure, yet screams awfully when spanked. "Even experienced fathers," says the advertisement, "are deceived by these laughter-producing infants, and no home can be a happy one without their cheering presence." "In long white dress complete, fourteen stamps; twins, postage free, two shillings."—Buffalo Express.

THERE was only one passenger on board the ship, and the Captain and mate contrived to get the most and best of what was on the table. One day there was a rollypoly pudding with the sweet-meats in the middle. "Do you like puddin' ends, sir?" asked the Captain. "No, I don't like pudding ends, sir," said the passenger. "Well, me and my mate does," said the Captain, cutting the pudding in two and putting one-half on the mate's plate and the other on his own. And the two soon made an end of both.

Is a sovereign remedy for all forms of Liver and Stomach troubles, and is the ONLY SAFE and ABSOLUTE cure for Malaria in its various types.

Dr. Holman's Pad is a genuine and radical remedy, WITHOUT TAKING MEDICINE.

It was the FIRST article of the kind that was introduced to the public generally. It was the ORIGINAL PAD, and was devised by DR. HOLMAN alone.

He struck out from the beaten path and made a NEW WAY. No sooner had he rendered the undertaking a CERTAINTY than the IMITATORS and PIRATES who hang to and infest ever successful enterprise, started up and have since followed in his footsteps as closely as the law will tolerate.

Against these DR. HOLMAN gives SPECIAL WARNING. Not only do they FAIL TO CURE, but in disappointing the purchaser they bring doubt and odium on the principal of Absorption, of which Dr. Holman's Pad is the GENUINE and ONLY TRUE EXPONENT.

Every Imitation is an emphatic endorsement of the substantial worth of the genuine article. A poor one is never copied.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not who. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,

DUJORDIN observed that when a milfola (a microscopic animal) attempted to climb up the side of a vase, it could improvise, as it were, on the instant, and at the expense of its own substance, a provisional foot, which stretched itself out rapidly, and performed all the functions of a permanent member. When its task was done the foot was at once absorbed into the body.

A POPULAR notion existed in the olden times that thunder prognosticated evil or good, according to the day of the week on which it occurred. If it occurred on Sunday, it brought about the death of learned men, Judges and others; on Tuesday, it augured plenty of grain; on Wednesday, death of harlots and bloodshed; on Thursday, it brought plenty of sheep and corn; on Friday, "the slaughter of a great man and other horrible murders;" on Saturday, pestilence and death. It was also a popular fancy that the ringing of bells in populous cities charmed away thunder.

The average depth is 12,000 feet, though the steamer Cyclops obtained a depth of 15,000 feet. This ocean floor begins about 150 miles from the Irish coast; there the descent from the shallow to deep water is very rapid, reaching 10,500 feet in fifty miles, giving an angle of descent greater than that of Italian Alps. The deepest part of the Atlantic is on the American side, near the banks of Newfoundland, where a great basin exists ranging east and west for nearly 1,000 miles, and whose depth is believed to exceed the highest of the Himalaya mountains.

The "Utter" Kangaroo Soup.

Any one in London desiring to indulge in a basin of kangaroo-tail soup can do so much more readily than if he were living in any of the great antipodean towns. Several of the colonial meat companies have made the tails of the kangaroo an article of export for consumers in England, and a shilling or two will place a Londoner in possession of a luxury of Australia which the colonists there can generally obtain only after a hard day's work on horseback. As a matter of fact, it is the rarest thing possible to see a kangaroo hanging in a colonial butcher's shop; and potage queue de kangaroo is a rarer item on the carte de jour of a Melbourne or Sydney dining-room than it might be in the restaurants of the Boulevard des Italiens or Regent street. The soup is a thing which, if once tasted, is to be forever remembered. Prepared, as it ought to be, with a due admixture of white wine and the yelks of hard-boiled eggs, it is richer than that made from hare or grouse, with a peculiar and quite indescribable flavor. But, except the liver and digestion be sound, it is not to be partaken of with impunity. Had Brillat Saverin but tasted it, he would have immortalized its merits. No pen except his could do justice to its appetite-inspiring aroma and its gastronomically quite "too utter" savor.

But, for the rest, travelers have asserted that the hams of the kangaroo—the only other parts of the animal which ever find a place at table—are equal in taste to venison. In this opinion few who have partaken of them will concur. Every allowance may be made for men weary with hunting in the Australian bush; but, experto crede, any one capable of making such an assertion never deserves to eat a venison pasty again. Not the skill of a cordon bleu of the kitchen, however celebrated—not all the sauces in the world—could disguise or subdue the rankness of kangaroo or wallaby ham.—London Globe.

Vanderbilt's Bonds.

It is of course absurd for anybody to attempt to tell how much any very rich man is worth. Probably Vanderbilt is the richest man in the world. One thing I do know, that he has at least $50,000,000 that he has no use for, and I don't know how much more. This amount he has in registered bonds, deposited in the treasury vaults in this city. From them alone his income is over $2,000,000 a year. How many coupon bonds of the Government he has heaven only knows. Then count his railroad and other stocks and bonds, his real estate, etc., and the figures become bewildering. Flood, the bonanza king, told me once that he was worth $50,000,000 at least and Mackay was worth still more. O'Brien, since dead, was supposed to be worth about the same, and also Fair, now Senator, but this was in the golden days of Comstock, before the pockets petered out. Take the wealth of Vanderbilt and let it increase for ten or twenty years as fast as it has increased during the past decade, and what is there he cannot do? Jay Gould the same, Mackay the same, and a dozen others. I am not much of a Communist, but I must say that I look with great apprehension at the rapid accumulation of these countless millions in the hands of a few men. But let them slide; they don't owe me anything, and I am very glad I don't owe them. I don't care much for money myself. There are, however, two things I would like to be rich for. One is so that I could have a pair of suspenders to every pair of pantaloons, and the other so I could stay at home on rainy days—like to-day, for example.—Washington Cor. Philadelphia Times.

A Losing Joke.

A prominent physician of Pittsburgh said jokingly to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill-health, and of his inability to cure her, "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.—Harrisburg Patriot.

A Thorough Job.

Judge M——, a well-known jurist living near Cincinnati, was fond of relating this anecdote. He had once occasion to send to the village for a carpenter, and a sturdy young fellow appeared with his tools.

"I want this fence mended to keep the cattle. There are some unplaned boards—use them. It is out of sight from the house, so you need not take time to make it a neat job. I will only pay you a dollar and a half."

The Judge went to dinner, and, coming out, found the man carefully planing each board. Supposing that he was trying to make a costly job of it, he ordered him to nail them on at once just as they were, and continued his walk. When he returned the boards were planed and numbered ready for nailing.

"I told you that this fence was to be covered with vines," he said, angrily. "I do not care how it looks.

"I do," said the carpenter, gruffly, carefully measuring his work. When it was finished there was no part of the fence so thorough in finish.

"How much do you charge?" asked the Judge.

"A dollar and a half," said the man, shouldering his tools.

The Judge stared. "Why did you spend all that labor on the job, if not for money?"

"For the job, sir."

"Nobody would have seen the poor work on it."

"But I should have known it was there. No; I'll take only the dollar and a half." And he took it and went away.

Ten years afterward, the Judge had the contract to give for the building of certain magnificent public buildings. There were many applicants among master-builders, but the face of one caught his eye.

"It was my man of the fence," he said. "I knew we should have only good, genuine work from him. I gave him the contract and it made a rich man of him."

It is a pity that boys were not taught in their earliest years that the highest success belongs only to the man, be he carpenter, farmer, author or artist, whose work is most sincerely an thoroughly done.

Spring and Summer Diet.

Green fruit and bad vegetables, which are particularly plentiful at this season of the year, almost invariably disorder the stomach and superinduce Cramps, Cholera Morbus, and what is worse, Diarrhea and Chronic Dysentery. People who desire to preserve their health should be exceedingly careful about their diet at this season, and at no time should they be without a supply of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER, the safest, surest and speediest remedy for all troubles of the stomach or bowels. All druggists sell it.

Married for Love.

The man who has married for love is a happy fellow. He is generally cheerful, and always thinking about the dear ones at home. He prefers to live out of town for the sake of the children. He is rarely late at business, rises early, gardens a little, eats a hearty breakfast, and goes to the necessary labor with a light heart and a clean conscience.

He often brings home pleasant surprises for his wife and children. You may recognize him in trains loaded with parcels, which he good naturedly carries with perfect unconcern of what others think—a new bonnet, music, books, a cloak for his wife; while in another parcel the wheels of a cart, a jack-in-the-box, a doll, or skipping rope, intrude through the paper and suggest the nursery. He is brave and kind, though he makes no noise in the world.

The humanizing influence of that darling red-cheeked little fellow who calls him father brings a glow and rapture of the purest pleasure earth holds; for the man who has never felt a tiny hand clasp his will always lack something—he will be less human, less blessed than others.

This is the noble, the honest, the only form of life that imparts real contentment and joy, that will make a deathbed glorious, and love see peace through its tears. It is so purely unselfish, so tenderly true; it satisfies the highest instincts, it stimulates men to the best deeds they are capable of.—Yonkers Statesman.

The Size of Molecules.

With regard to the absolute diameter of a molecule and their number in a given space, everything at present is only probable conjecture. Still it may be interesting to state the views which are held on these questions by such investigators as Sir William Thompson and the late Professor Clerk-Maxwell; but we give these without attempting to indicate the character of the speculations on which their conclusions rest. Summing up then both the known and unknown, we may state that the molecular weights and velocities of many substances are accurately known. It is also conjectured that collisions take place among the molecules of hydrogen at the rate of seventeen million-million-million per second; and in oxygen there are less than half that number. The diameter of the hydrogen molecule may be such that two million of them in a row would measure a millimetre. Lastly, it is conjectured that a million-million-million-million hydrogen molecules would weigh about four grammes; while nineteen million-million-million would be contained in a cubic centimetre. Figures like these convey no meaning to the mind, and they are introduced here only to show the character and present state of the research.—Chamber's Magazine.

"Botts."

A Michigan man traded a mule to his neighbor for a horse, warranting the old brayer to be sound in wind and limb. Not ten days had elapsed when the mule brayed his last bray and kicked his last kick. The former owner refused to be held responsible, and the result was a law suit. When the plaintiff had told what he knew and thought and suspected, his wife was put on the stand, and on the cross-examination the defendant's lawyer said:

"Mrs. Smith, what did that mule die of?"

"Botts," was her prompt reply.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes, sir."

"Wasn't the beast choked to death with some fish-bones you gave him along with his slop?"

"No, sir. We haven't had a fish in the house for a year."

"Wasn't it possible that he might have swallowed a hair-pin?"

"No, sir. I've counted my hair-pins and none are missing."

"Do you ever buy poison to kill rats?"

"Never."

"Were you home when the mule was first taken?"

"I was."

"And you knew that his ailment was botts?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you told your husband so?"

"I did."

"Mrs. Smith, do you call yourself a horse or a mule doctor?"

"No, sir."

"Well, how are you so certain that this mule died of botts?"

"Because I am."

"I want a plain answer. How are you so certain that the mule died of botts?"

"Well, I looked him all over, and he didn't have the measles, chicken-pox, whooping-cough or dumb-ague. My husband looked him all over, and he didn't have poll-evil, colic, sweeny, or blind-staggers, then we knew it must be botts."

"How did you know?"

"How did I know?" she echoed in an indignant voice. "Do you suppose I've kept house for thirty-two years and been the mother of eleven children and not know what the botts are? Why, I've had 'em a dozen times myself, and the old man here would have died with 'em in March if I hadn't put on mustard poultices and drawn 'em out of his system by way of his feet! Botts! Why, I know 'em from Dan to Beabeeby!"

Advertising Cheats.

It has become so common to write the beginning of an elegant, interesting article and then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such cheats and simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible, to induce people to give them one trial, as no one who knows their value will ever use anything else.—Providence Advertiser.

The Nearest Star.

In an interesting article on Southern stars, reprinted in Science, Mr. Pope, of New Zealand, describes Alpha Centauri, the known nearest fixed star to the earth. This magnificent double star, he says, is the finest object of the kind in the heavens. Beside being a binary star of very short period, every one knows that Alpha Centauri is our next neighbor among the stars, and that it was the first to give up the secret of its parallax under direct transit circle observations. The color of this star is straw-yellow, or sometimes golden-yellow, according to the state of the atmosphere. When there is a haze, of course the smaller star is somewhat more affected by it than the larger. This tends to give it a slight brownish tint when the sky is not clear. Alpha Centauri is a star of the second class. Its spectrum is very like that of the sun. Even the principal dark lines are fine, and they apparently occupy the same relative positions as do the well-known lettered lines in the solar spectrum. There can be no doubt, in fact, that the physical constitution of this great star is, in most respects, the same as that of the sun. It is probable, however, that Alpha Centauri is less developed than the sun; for, as Mr. Proctor has pointed out, its light is brighter than its mass would lead us to expect it to be, judging from the light of our sun as compared with his mass. While the mass of the star is to the mass of the sun as 2:1, the light of the star is to the light of the sun as 3:1. Now, if it is true, as physicists have good grounds for believing, that the sun is, and has been, very slowly but surely losing his heat, just as our earth has most certainly lost an enormous amount of hers, there must have been a time when the sun and his system were less developed, but far hotter and brighter, than they are now—when they formed, probably, a white star—that is to say, there was, quite possibly, a time when the light from our sun bore the same relation to his mass as the light from Alpha Centauri bears now to its mass. We may also believe that matters are less advanced in the planets (if there are any) of this neighboring system than they are with us.

How the Old Salaries Were Paid.

Between 1777 and 1784 the Territory of Tennessee (really part of North Carolina) maintained a State Government under the name of "Franklyn." In the old records—quoted once by Daniel Webster in a Congressional speech—stand the following curious statements of the way payments were made in a time when the people had no current money:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Franklyn: That from the first day of January, 1779, the salaries of the officers of this Commonwealth be as follows, to-wit:

"His Excellency the Governor, per annum, 1,000 deer skins;

"His Honor the Chief Justice, 500 deer skins; or 500 raccoon skins;

"The Treasurer of the State, 450 raccoon skins;

"Clerk of the House of Commons, 200 raccoon skins;

"Member of Assembly, per diem, three raccoon skins;

"Entered into a law the 18th day of October, 1779, under the great seal of the State."

The well-worn burlesque of the "leather medal" suggests a vague reference to the times when skins were the only money.—Youth's Companion.

BACK VIEW SHOWING THE SURFACE OF THE METALLIC BATTERY OR GENERATOR WHICH SHOULD ALWAYS BE WORN NEXT TO THE BODY.
LONDON GALVANIC

The London Galvanic Generator

(Extract from a London Medical Journal.)

"A great revolution in medical practice has spread throughout England. It has been discovered that most remarkable cures attend the application of a newly-invented miniature Galvanic Generator to diseased parts of the body. Experience has shown that it acts immediately upon the blood, nerves and secretions, producing more relief in a few hours than medicine has given in weeks and months. No shock or unpleasant feeling attends its use. It can be worn day or night, interfering in no way with the dress or occupation of daily life."

A Faultless, Gentle Laxative.

Your family Physician, if consulted, will assure you that it is his daily custom to apply electricity in cases of Constipation and its attending evils. For a long time the profession has been aware of the remarkable effects of Electricity in Medical treatment, but the large size of all Electric Appliances and their high cost have rendered it impossible to place this natural remedy within the reach of all.

No doubt many people will be astonished to learn that electricity is one of the most effective LAXATIVES known. While acting quickly, it is at the same time perfectly harmless, differing radically in this respect from the Pills and cathartics commonly sold. The latter often afford temporary relief, but leave the individual worse after each attack, and, if taken habitually, seriously derange the internal organs, as any regular Practitioner will affirm.

The London Galvanic Generator

CURES Indigestion, Constipation, Torpid Liver, Biliousness, Malaria, Weak Stomach, Nervousness, Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, etc., etc.

All who are troubled with the above-named or similar ailments will find immediate relief in this wonderful discovery, which is so easy, light and portable that it occasions no inconvenience, whilst its remedial effect is simply marvelous.

The above Cut shows the Exact Size. It is Worn Suspended from the Neck, next to the Body, by a Cord or Ribbon.

For sale at our counter and also by all respectable druggists, or we will send them direct, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Full directions accompany each Generator. Every mail brings most gratifying letters from those using them.

Price $1.00. All dealers are authorized to refund the price if it fails to relieve after a reasonable trial. Pamphlets mailed free on application.

CAUTION.—The great success of the London Galvanic Generator has caused the market to be filled with cheap and worthless imitations. If you accept any "Batteries," "Pads" or "Medals," thinking them to be the Generator, you will be imposed upon. Remember its name, and see that the words "Pall Mall Electric Ass'n of London" are stamped upon each one.

THE PALL MALL ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION, N. Y. Branch 842 Broadway, has the sole right to sell the London Galvanic Generator in America.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 14, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

THE latest news from the President continues favorable. Every indication now points to his early recovery.

IT is pleasant to know that both wings of the republican party were represented at the Platt seance in Albany.

SOME young men in Cincinnati are said to have formed a Refrigerator club. The officers are First Icicle, Second Icicle, etc.

TOMMY PLATT'S peep show at Albany, exhibited "for one night only," but it was a success, and drew well. Then Platt, like an honest showman, paid his hotel bill and withdrew.

No change in the balloting at Albany since Platt withdrew. For the short term, Conklin has 31; Lapham, 67; Potter, (dem.) 50. For the long term, Miller, (rep.) 68; Kernan, (dem.) 50.

REPUBLICANS have always claimed to be united on all great moral questions. Let a great republican statesman like Platt find himself in a room with a strange woman, and all the other leading republican statesmen will climb up the step-ladder and look in.

IT is to be hoped that the recent attempt on the life of the president will teach the country the need of some other mode of appointing federal officers. The present plan of allowing so many of these appointments to rest with the president makes him a mere servant to a lot of hungry office-hunters, makes life a burden to him, and takes valuable time that he owes to the country.

THERE is now some difference of opinion among doctors as to the direction of the ball in the president's wound. Some are claiming that if it went through the liver or the stomach it would be fatal, and believe it must have glanced downward or upward after striking the rib. But the attending physicians say they have probed the wound to the depth of three and a half inches, and that it certainly penetrated the liver, but are not certain where it went beyond that.

—The insanity dodge in Guiteau's case is entirely too thin. If a crazy murderer was hung occasionally it would greatly lessen the number of murders by such persons. In fact, the law does not "string up" more than half the scrape graces of the country, who manage with the cry of insanity, or some other mode, to get free from the punishment to which they are justly entitled. When a man wishes to wreak deadly vengence on another, all that is necessary is to get a fit of emotional insanity and he can blaze away with impunity.

AN exchange, in speaking of the dismissal of Pitney the corrupt custodian of the treasury at Washington, says: "The party which voluntarily punishes its own dishonest or unfaithful members is certainly worthy of the people's confidence." If a man steals, or is a defaulter, and is merely allowed to depart in peace, with all his ill-gotten gains jingling in his pockets as he walks down and out, we can't see where the punishment comes in. But as this is all the punishment the republican party seems to mete out to its corrupt office-holders, no wonder it "receives the confidence" of such people as Pitney and those who wish to profit by his example.

Examination for Purdue University.

At the next regular examination of teachers at Auburn, July 30, 1881, I will at the same time and place, hold an examination for the benefit of any who desire admission to Purdue University at Lafayette. Applicants for admission to the Freshman class will be examined in the common school branches (reading excepted) and in physiology, U. S. history, physical geography and elementary algebra through quadratic equations.

Applicants for admission to the academy will be examined in spelling, geography, English grammar, and in arithmetic through interest. Persons wishing to profit by this opportunity should send me their applications before July 20, so I can forward them to the university as early as July 22. Any information cheerfully given.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

Syracuse.

A recent visit to this popular summer resort, as well as items from our exchanges, would seem to indicate that the tide of popularity is fast setting in that direction. Dr. Kelley still holds the fort in his fine, large hotel, and makes everything attractive for the inner and the outer man. A. M. Jones, captain and owner of the steamer, Roxa, makes daily trips from the bridge to the club house at Cedar Beach, and to all points around the large lake. Good fishing, sailing, rowing and bathing are attractions that few can resist these hot days, and the vast lake presents a constantly varying and shifting scene, as steamer, sail-boats and row-boats go gliding by. To all who wish to spend a few days pleasantly, we say drop your little worn out lakes and tackle something near your size. "Go where the lilies are waiting."

To Teachers.

Remember the normal school opens on next Monday, the 18th, to be conducted by W. P. Myers, superintendent of the Auburn schools, assisted by M. W. Harrison. Let every teacher attend. The lectures will be well worth the price of tuition. Every effort will be put forth to make the school a success.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

—Guiteau says he conceived the idea of killing Garfield several weeks before the shooting transpired.

—The demand for the Chicago Times has been great since the assassination of President Garfield.

—The New Yorkers bestow their favors in parcels of $250,000. Mrs. Garfield is the recipient of their glorious bounty.

—Reliable reports go to prove that the president was not shot in the shoulder, the bullet having been stopped by his coat sleeve.

—List of unclaimed letters in the postoffice, at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending July 9, 1881: Fred. Bungand, Rachel Huff, Samuel Moore, F. L. May, A. G. Pinchin, Samuel M. Smith, Elias Yonney.

JOS. RAINIER, P. M.

—Will our weather clerk please call to his memory, and act accordingly, those stirring words of a favorite author,

Backward, turn backward in our flight,
Give us a raging rain just for to-night.

—Senator Voorhees had three hundred invitations to orate on the Fourth, and we have now in our mind's eye several rattlin' orators (in their minds) in our town, who did not have a single call.

—The Jackson Township Sunday-School Association will meet at Grove Bethel church July 31, 1881, at nine o'clock. All persons in the township are cordially invited to attend, and all others that see this notice.

—Strawberries were not as plenty in the market this season as usual, but there is an abundance of raspberries, particularly of the early cluster. The market price ranges from eight to ten cents per quart. Whortleberries are also said to be plenty and of fine quality.

—Griscom, the Chicago faster, has completed his forty-five days. There was not much money in the performance for Griscom if current reports are reliable. It is said that his expenses will be $1,000 more than the receipts. He'd better make a die of it.

—These slang phrases do raise the very mischief. When a handsome young wife went to a hardware store for one of those wooden contrivances to smash potatoes, and said: "I want a masher;" every man in the shop, from the boss to the sweep-out clerk rushed to wait on her.

The Torrid Wave.

Reports come in from all parts of the country to the effect that the past week has been one of the hottest ever known in this country. Our exchanges report an alarming number of sun strokes, mostly in the larger cities, but also in smaller towns and in the country. An unusual large percentage of these cases prove fatal. We learn that many of our farmers have had to suspend work in the harvest field, for a day or two, and wait till it was safe to go on. Reports as to the standing of the mercury vary very much, but from 100 to 103 degrees is no unusual thing.

Waterloo.

Harvest is about over.

Si Locke is now running an ice wagon every day.

Two ice-cream parlors now, and business lively at both.

Peter Noragon, of Franklin township, was in town Tuesday visiting friends.

Miss Lillie Morian, now of Kalamazoo, Michigan, is visiting friends here.

Too hot for buggy-riding on Sunday. The shade-trees and gates had to do double duty.

Conductor Murch, of the Wabash, has been taking a lay off and helping in the harvest field.

Thomas Askey, a former resident of this place, has been stopping here for a few days past.

Trains on the Jackson road have been much delayed by excursions to Pleasant Lake for some days past.

W. B. Maxwell is spending a few days at home. He reports a good business in the furniture line.

Frank Fisk and wife are rejoicing in the possession of a new baby. It is a boy, and will no doubt some day be a teacher as both his parents have been.

The boys at the saw-mill are a jolly set, judging from the noise they make. It must be the abundance of logs that keeps them so lively this hot weather.

Willson Shull, who has been traveling with the New Pacific show as musician, returned Tuesday. He says it is getting a little too hot.

Frank Adams has concluded to change the "bachelor's hall" for "blissful Bowers," and no one can blame him for his choice. Frank and Emma will be a good-looking couple, and they have our best wishes.

Freeman Kelley had the misfortune to cut off the end of one of his fingers in the mower Tuesday. He was clearing the machine and the horses being restive, started a little. He thinks it will not be serious.

There was a bad runaway on our streets Friday. Cause, the careless use of fire-crackers. Result, two or three vehicles badly used up, as many horses considerably hurt and those nice trees in front of Mrs. Yant's store very much injured.

R. M. Lockhart and his brother William have been heavy sufferers by the recent floods in the west. Their log boom in the river at Des Moines, Iowa, has just broken for the second time, letting their logs escape. It is probable that their loss will amount to several thousand dollars.

B. F. Killinger has moved to Angola where he has purchased a restaurant, and will go into the business of catering for the public. "Birt," is an enterprising man, and will succeed. We not only wish him abundant success in his new venture, but feel satisfied that our Angola neighbors can do no better than to give him a hearty and generous patronage.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Judge Tousley has gone to Hot Springs, Ark., for his health. He will remain there some weeks.

Two sons of County Superintendent A. J. Douglas were married at Columbia City last week, one June 23, and the other the next day. A family re-union was held on the occasion.

The Columbia City Post has the following: "We noticed the following premium on the manuscript for the list: 'Best tidy manufactured by lady, male or female, $1.00' Tom. Marshall prepared it."

Hicksville News: "Isaac Hoagland was killed at Paulding last week. He was off-bearing in a saw mill, and in removing a piece of board one end of it came in contact with the saw, which threw it against the man's face, the board penetrating to the brain. He lived an hour."

Hicksville News says: "The sudden rise in prices of horses in the country and the number of buyers who range the farms buying all the most desirable stock, suggests that the breeding of horses can be made very profitable, provided judgment is used in the selection with reference to the market and its wants."

Lagrange Register: "Our hopes for the speedy construction of an east and west road through this place by the Lake-Shore company, received a sudden set-back by an editorial in last week's Steuben Republican. It charges that the survey by this company last winter was only to take possession of the territory, and without any intention of building the road at present. If this is true, the action of the company in Steuben county and further east, has been a gross imposition on the people who have been anxiously at work securing the right-of-way."

THE GREAT WABASH.—The Sunday Mail says: "There seems to be no end to the rapacity of the Wabash, feeders to that great line being bought up almost monthly. The Eel-River line, purchased and completed by the Wabash, is said to have the finest bed of any new line in the country. Last week a special was run at the rates of thirty five miles per hour. It is expected that the road will be open to passenger business by the middle of this month. The Wabash will control the I. P. & C. from and after the first of this month, and it is supposed that the Muncie will be bought in at the sale advertised for the 12th inst.; then efforts, it is rumored, will be made to purchase the Jackson. These purchases will make the Wabash the most powerful organization in the west."

Garrett Herald: "A few nights since Mr Chambers was on the train, and a heavy thunder storm came up. The thunder was loud, the lightning was vivid, and the tumult of the elements was terrific. Trees were uprooted by the wind, and thunder-bolts sent disaster in every direction. The scene was grand in its terror, and Mr. C. thrust his head out of a coach window to witness the war of the elements, but just as he dived his head through, and was becoming interested, a terrible clap of thunder struck a tree near by, and instantly he tried to draw in his head, but was caught in the act by the sash falling on his neck. The crash of thunder, the falling of the sash and the outside racket generally, caused him to imagine that he had been struck instead of the tree. He finally got over his scare, but would not look out of the window any more that trip."

The New Era says in speaking of this county: "The county superintendent holds his examinations in the COURIER office, and a cotemporary suggests that it must be a 'phat take' for the compositors." The New Era evidently copies this interesting and delicate piece of news from the DeKalb County Republican. The first item is untrue. The examinations are not held in the COURIER office. A few young ladies, teachers, called at the office and waited for examination to begin, and afterwards waited there for the train to start home. As to the delicate expression "phat take," we leave the explanation, if there be any, to the editors of the Republican. We don't understand it, and can only say that the teachers of this county are ladies and gentlemen in every sense of the term, and that the employes of the COURIER are too well bred to consider visitors as the subjects of obscene or indelicate remarks.

Meeting of the Indiana Alumni of the University of Michigan.

The association met in the tabernacle at Island Park, Rome City, Ind., July 12, 1881, at 1:30 p. m. Hon. Samuel Harper, of Lagrange, was made temporary chairman, and W. H. Leas of Waterloo, temporary secretary. On motion, the chair appointed the following committee to prepare and report articles of association: A. A. Chapin, H. C. Burt, J. P. Glenn, all of Kendallville.

The address of welcome was made by W. C. Glasgow, of Lagrange, and was responded to by W. L. Penfield of Auburn. Addresses were also made by the following-named members: Hon. T. M. Cooley, President Freese, Dr. Prescott, Dr. Adams, Profs. Payne and Vaughn.

Letters were read from Professor Winchell, Prof. Reed, and Hon. Allen Zollers. This was followed by an address by H. C. Burt. The committee on articles of association then made their report, which was adopted. Association then adjourned to the dining hall for the banquet. After dinner, the organization of the society was effected by the election of the following officers: President, W. L. Penfield, of Auburn; vice-president, Wm. M. Brown, of Orland; secretary, R. H. Rerick, of Lagrange. Executive committee: Dr. J. H. Rerick, of Lagrange; P. A. Randall, of Fort Wayne; M. A. O. Packard, of Plymouth; W. P. Carpenter and J. H. Beadle, of Fort Wayne. It was then decided to hold the next meeting at the call of the executive committee. Adjourned. The meeting was in all its features a most pleasant one, and will no doubt become a permanent organization.

Obituary.

Mrs. Joanna Elba Moore died at her home in Knox county, Ohio, June 29, 1881. She was born in DeKalb county, Indiana, and was 23 years, 7 months and 23 days old at the time of her death. She leaves a husband and babe and numerous friends to mourn her early death. Deceased was a daughter of J. D. and M. A. McAnally, of Waterloo. Her mother, was at her bedside for the last four months, day and night, till the angel of Death relieved her. Her mind was clear to the last moment, and she made all the arrangements as to her funeral and burial. She was buried at Fredericktown, Ohio, July 1, 1881. Her parents were present to the last, and are firm in the belief that though dead in the flesh, she still lives in the spirit world.

West Richland.

There was a pretty good representation of the young people of West Richland at Rome City on the 4th.

Last Tuesday evening a meeting was held at the school-house in regard to school matters.

William Franks is to teach our school which commences the 25th.

The subject of the new school-house is being discussed. The people are now wondering where the trustee will locate it.

Sunday-school every Sunday at 9:30 a. m. Don't let the hot weather keep you away, boys. It is no warmer for you to go to Sunday-school than to run up and down the creek all day.

It is surprising how few in this community are taking a newspaper. Do not neglect it any longer. Subscribe for some one of our papers, read it and learn what is transpiring in your own county.

THE "NEW STAR" $15 SUIT,

CUSTOM MADE.

We told you several days ago we had a surprise for you and here it is: 20 different patterns of most beautiful light and dark Cassimeres we have put aside for our $15 suit; and we honestly believe it is several grades higher than any suit in town for the money. We finish them just the same as higher price suits, in trimmings, linings, etc. We might tell you these were English, and sell them at $35, but we WILL tell the truth if we miss a sale; so we say that these are American Cassimeres.

How will they wear? Ah, that is another question, and we can spread ourselves in praising them, for they are good and no mistake. Drop in and see them.

"CHEBANG!"

AN EXPLOSION IN THE COURT HOUSE.

Treasurer Miller was sleeping sweetly the other afternoon; little angels were hovering o'er his brow whispering encouraging words of the sweet bye and bye. Recorder Boland purchased a fire-cracker about the size of a double-barrel shot gun, placed it upon the office stove and set fire to it. Coop Ralston stationed himself upon the outside of the building just under the window. Bang! went the cannon, and Coop immediately began to cry murder! help! The room was dark with smoke and bits of burning paper scattered here and there. Lafe was jumping 'round that room like a Kansas grasshopper in a corn-crip. "Catch im! hold on to 'im! where is Gus Leas?" he cried, but Gus did'nt appear. He was hid in a corner close by, joining in the laugh with the other boys.

Turn About

A TRIO FROM AUBURN AT ROME CITY.

Dave Hampton, Fred. Davis and Fred. Clark went to Rome City last Tuesday and remained over night. Two of the boys went out in a boat for the purpose of having a bath, and left Fred Davis in the tent. When they returned Fred. crawled out from under the canvas with no wearing apparel on but an undershirt, and begged of his companions to take him out so that he, too, could have a paddle in the water. It is against the rules to land any place about the island, but at the dock. There being no police in sight, the boys took Fred. out. When they returned the officer was "thar" and forbid them coming to the shore. "My g—," said Fred., "here I am with nothing but an undershirt on." "Can't help that," replied the official. "Hand my pants out of the tent, then," demanded Fred. "I don't have to carry your clothes to you," and a motion of his hand was a signal for them to hoist sail and move off. Fred. was taken to the landing place, and Dave Hampton said it was worth a barrel of ice-cream to see him dodging among those tents, anxiously looking for the one which contained his pants.

Done at Last.

FRENCH PETE WILL JOIN THE TEMPERANCE ARMY NOW.

The rumor reached us Monday evening that the notorious French Pete, who, a few days ago, attempted to string Doc Cowan's coon on a pitchfork, had been struck upon the head with a "billy" in the hands of the Marshal at Kendallville, and was in a dying condition. He told the citizens there that he had friends at Stryker, Ohio, and he was sent to that place immediately. His wife received a telegram from Stryker, the same day, directing her to come soon if she desired to see Pete alive. Many remarks were made about this pitiable, unfortunate creature, and some of them cruelly spoken. "He's out of the way now," says one. "He'd been better off dead long ago," remarks another. Out with such hypocrisy. Stay from the back doors of the brine shops; empty the bottles in your cellars; mash that old favorite jug concealed in the hay mow and your hearts will melt with grief when you bring back to memory these uncalled for remarks. An habitual drunkard is an object of pity, not of scorn, and they are possessed of the same tender feeling that nature gives to every man. Poor Pete, then, has crossed the dark, unknown river by the liquor seller's route, and God in his fatherly judgment will decide between the two who shall answer for his death—Pete or the liquor dealer. Peace to his ashes.

INSANE.

THE OLD STORY OF LOVING TOO WELL.

A man by the name of Wesley Vandermark, who has been in this place since last winter went crazy Thursday. It seems that he was in love with a young lady named Bittner, living in the Rickel property, at the north end of town. One Charley Hoff was paying close attention to the girl. This so worried Vandermark that he went to the house last Friday evening and in the presence of the family began to fan Hoff's coat tail with a No. 6 boot. He was overpowered and taken to the jail, where he performed in a frantic manner, continually crying, "Hoff; oh, you Hoff!" and other crazy expression. We are a little surprised at Vandermark's being so foolish. He had not paid the young lady any attention, with the exception of escorting her to church one evening. Now, if Mr. V. had been a young lad, whose mustache is, like faith: "the evidence of things hoped for, the substance of things not yet seen," and had launched into this affair with but little experience in the ways of the world, there would be some excuse for him. But he was a man of thirty-five or upward, with burnsides like a Major-general; a good-looking man and had business qualities about him so that he handled considerable money. He was taken to Indianapolis Monday morning.

"HUCKLEBERRIES."

—Take things cool as possible this warm weather and avoid sickness.

—Ben Williams will soon have a phaeton out of the sprinkling wagon.

—The Hulsenbeck building, recently damaged by the storm, has been repaired.

—The thermometers and the comet make a good pair. They are both flying high.

—Garfield's obituary notices, standing upon the galleys, can now be distributed.

—Charley Groscop has quit the brick making business and is again at home.

—Some one should set up a "Snipe" to the fellow who rang the fire bell Tuesday.

—Plenty of work now. Get off that store-box, put up your knife and make $1.50 per day.

—An enclosed culvert is under construction from Isaac Cool's residence on Main street.

—The girls say that they can't mop their faces, but that the boys think they are flirting.

—Owing to the "elevation" in the price of lemons, that luxury is selling at ten cents a glass.

—Watermelons can be had in the markets of large cities, and Jamaica ginger will advance.

—Keeping cool is a science that just now is fairly appreciated but not so easily mastered.

—Frank Davenport goes to the post-office oftener than heretofore. He lives in a brick house now.

—Ain't it about time that our officers were pulling some of the 'dives" in town.

—Treasurer Miller was pacing down Main street Sunday morning early in search of an ice-cream shop.

—When you pass a friend and don't remark that "it's hot" you will get thirty days in the "cooler."

—Several Sunday-school classes were drilled in singing at the Presbyterian church last sabbath afternoon.

—Will our town guardians see that the shooting of fire-crackers and toy pistols is stopped upon our public streets.

Ball and Bat.

THE JUVENILE NINES OF AUBURN AND WATERLOO.

Last Saturday a game of base-ball was played between the above ball nines. This is the first game that has been indulged in, at this place, for a long time, and was quite interesting for those who enjoy this kind of sport. The day was too warm for playing ball, but the boys showed great zeal and activity notwithstanding the scorching rays of old Sol. The grounds near the Wabash depot were chosen, and a fair crowd was in attendance to cheer the boys as they muffed the flies and struck out. The Auburn club won the game in a score of 13 to 19.

—Billy Edgerton sold his barber shop Monday and thought he would celebrate the occasion by taking a bath in the crystal waters of Cedar creek, at the morning star bridge. Billy plunged in, bull-frog fashion, but his toes were just a little too short to reach the bottom, and it was with difficulty that he gained the shore.

—The cry of fire was again heard Tuesday morning upon our streets, and the bucket brigade were out in full uniform. The location of the fire was near the chimney of Goodman's tin-shop. There are four frame buildings and one brick which would have been destroyed had the fire got under good headway. An ordinary hand engine would have saved a lot of property—but we have none.

—Billy Little is now manufacturing the best home-made boot or shoe in town. He does his own work, and consequently can get up a better, more substantial boot, for less money, than those who have to pay for having the work done by men who rush it through in order to make all the money they can. All kinds of repairing promptly done. Shop in rear of Davis' hardware store.

—Are the members of the Presbyterian church doing their duty as christians to influence the wicked? Their church-doors are closed, the sound of the deep-toned bell is heard only to call the children to sabbath-school, that large and handsome structure is not used for general sabbath work and the attractive pulpit is as silent as the tomb.

—The marshal should spank some of those kids who hang around the "little store on the corner" every evening and swear, wrestle and keep up a continued racket from seven to ten o'clock. Either take care of them or have a free distribution of the revised testament at a given hour each evening.

—A fellow at our elbow says that Doc Ryan was prostrated from a sun-stroke while building two feet of sidewalk last Saturday. But we have found out since that he was mistaken. Doc is flourishing like a green bay horse, and enjoys himself with the same unction as of yore.

—The renowned phrenologist, who visited our city the other week, is now at Albion delineating the heads of her citizens. He got drunk last Saturday, and on awakening in the morning feeling for his own head, he found it securely fastened upon his frame, surrounded by the iron bars of the cooler.

—While Chris Baldock was in Waterloo, last Friday, another rig ran into his and Chris' horse becoming frightened ran away, completely demolishing a lot of tin spouting. The outfit belonged to J. L. Davis, and, of course, little mishaps of this kind are nothing to a banker

—The women also like to swim. Saturday evening several fair damsels were paddling in the water near the cemetery. A woman can't put on any side-saddle style when she goes in swimming. She has either got to kick out like a man or get drowned.

—A couple of fellows from the rural land, east of town, were feeling joyful from the effects of brine, last Sunday, and one of them took Chawles Emanuel's "umbersol" and walked off. Charley was about to trot into a legal decision when the rural chap returned it.

—Boys should not be allowed to handle toy-pistols. They have got them down to such a point that they shoot almost as wicked as a cartridge gun, and, although not loaded with any hard substance, their aim is effective.

—They were in the cemetery looking for four-leaf clover, when he looked squarely at the apple of her eye and said: "Mary Jane, when shall we become as one." And she hesitatingly answered: "John, you can't com-et over me."

—The old version said, that the night cometh when no man can see to work. In the new version it has been changed. They know all about souls in these latter days.

—One of Sebring's boys found a pocket book containing five hundred dollars, in front of Ober's residence, on Jackson street, the other day.

—The question now is, where does the street-corner masher, who toils not, manage to get such good clothes.

—Farmers are now busy in the harvest field, gathering together the golden grain.

The Morning Star.

BECOMING A POPULAR BATHING RESORT.

Heretofore the waters of Cedar creek, near the Morning Star bridge, have been undisturbed, but for the past few days a large number of our citizens have visited that place in the evening for the purpose of bathing. The water is about fifty feet wide and from ten to twelve feet deep, making a very desirable place for this amusement. Hacks are driven backward and forward every evening, the conveyance costing but ten cents to and from the water.

—Again we hear complaints of the COURIER not reaching our subscribers until the following week of its publication. These mails must be sent promptly, and if not done so, we shall inform the proper authorities at Washington. Let us know, friends, if you receive the COURIER each week regularly.

—Law is a big institution. About half of the trundle-bed population of this town carry revolvers, and on frequent occasions bang away at the innocent rats that are having a little gallop about the street crossings.

—The Chicago Times says, "The assassin of the president is afraid of catching cold." If the president should happen to cross that dark, unknown river, Mr. Guiteau will not be bothered long with colds, unless it should be charcoal.

—Each year Mr. Daniel Altenberg comes to the front with the first roasting ears of the season. Last week he had a fine, tempting lot on sale. The doctors of the town should give the 'Squire a benefit—one good turn deserves another.

—One of our citizens very gravely remarked to us that he had been reliably informed by a friend that we are not to have another Fourth of July celebration in this country, until next year. He had just recovered from a two week's drunk.

—They don't sell liquor in Kansas now. When a man gets drunk out there they say he has the dropsy. Dropsy is good. We beg leave to call the attention of our physicians to several cases of dropsy that we saw Monday evening.

—Doc. Cowan's favorite black mare was foundered one day this week, and is not in a condition for driving. She was one of the finest roadsters in the county, and we are sorry that this misfortune has come to her.

—Man has two eyes and two ears, and but one mouth; which signifies that you should see and hear twice as much as you speak. But think of the eloquence that would be lost to the world if this were the universal rule.

—Last Saturday John Beard, one of Frank Culbertson's hack drivers, drove about the city loaded down with juveniles, of both genders, from the north end. The little tads seemed to enjoy the sport hugely.

—Frank Philips, our tonsorial artist, is greatly excited over the report that the Wabash shops will locate at Butler, and is preparing to establish a branch business at that place. "Hold the fort, for he is coming."

—Some owner of swine, who has little fear of law, broke open the pound Tuesday evening and let at liberty several hogs that were contained therein. If this hog law is substantial let it be enforced.

—A heavy wind storm passed over us Tuesday afternoon. One of Kiblinger's large French-plate glass was blown out of the rear door of his store room and broken. Other light damage was done.

—Our supreme court has just decided that the pay of city treasurers must be henceforward such a salary as shall be voted by the council, and that they have no per-cent of tax collections.

—The train going south on the Saginaw was two hours late Tuesday. The Baptist church at Jackson had an excursion to Pleasant Lake. It took two trains to carry then, hence the delay.

—Coop Ralston is a man of fine business qualities—he puts life and vim into everything he undertakes to do. It is amusing to see that old dun horse "get up in shape" when Coop holds the strings.

—The mellow and green apple season have now fully burst in upon us, and the gay and festive undertaker has increased his stock of white satin coffins in proportion.

—The Butler folks feel awful proud since they have the promise of the Wabash shops. Take it moderate, gentlemen, there's many a "slip 'twixt the cup and the lip."

—Jesse Long, who has been working for Pommert Bros. the past few weeks, purchased the barber shop, on Seventh street, owned by Wm. Edgington.

—Some young fellows from Waterloo were in town astride the tricky bicycle Saturday. They handled the machines with skill.

—New crossings are going down on the east side of Main street, and one on the corner of Seventh and Jackson streets. 'Bout time.

Personal Notes.

—Dr. Matheny is suffering with a sore eye

—Charley Jackson was at Angola, Tuesday.

—S. H. Snyder went to Rome City Tuesday.

—Sim Tarney "took in" Wayne last Saturday.

—Dave Hampton went north on the Saginaw yesterday.

—Dr. Sears made a trip to Michigan last Saturday.

—Charley Shephard, the insurance man, is out of town this week.

—J. J. Eakright, one of our livest teachers, called on us Tuesday.

—Mrs. F. D. Ryan is visiting relatives at Reading, Mich., this week.

—Miss Wolf, of Jackson, Michigan, is paying a visit to the family of Isaac Ochs.

—Mrs. William Rakestraw has a young lady friend passing away the time with her.

—John Leas, Frank Adams and W. H. Leas, called on the COURIER folks yesterday.

—U. J. Coats esquire, a rising young attorney of Butler, called to see us this week.

—Frank Borst and wife, of Corunna, Sundayed with the family of treasurer Miller.

—Mrs. C. A. Kalley has been visiting with her sister, Mrs. B. Lewis, for several weeks.

—James E. Rose, one of our ablest attorneys, made a business trip to Fort Wayne yesterday.

—Mrs. R. Wes. McBride, of Waterloo, was calling on her sister, Mrs. John Baxter, Tuesday.

—Sheriff Leas and wife entertained a few relatives and friends at their residence Monday.

—Mr. McBride, of Butler, brother-in-law of George Grund, is paying the latter a visit this week.

—Mrs. Lottie Osgood makes a splendid post office clerk, being affable and pleasant to one and all.

—How's this for a "flush:" T. D. Gross, G. A. Porter and Pete Stutz "did" Waterloo, Monday.

—A. D. Moore laid off from harvest work last Monday and took a drive to Auburn on business.

—Mr. Philips, father of our barber, Frank, is paying his son and the Forshey boys a visit this week.

—Mr. Bowers and his daughter Gracie, of Bucyrus, Ohio, are visiting with L. Bowers, of this place.

—George Patterson joined his wife here Tuesday. He left for the east yesterday via the Wabash.

—Bill Latson made a trip to Butler, Monday Guess he went over to talk the citizens out of the Wabash shops.

—Misses Julia and Lillie McTighe, of Milwaukee, Wis., are visiting with their sister, Mrs William McIntyre.

—'Squire O. P. Smith and A. R. Stevens, of Waterloo, were down on Monday to assist on an insanity inquest.

—Samuel Moody, and Peter Fisher the popular clothier of Waterloo, were taking in the town on Monday.

—Misses Ola and Jennie Lieb, of Waterloo, and Miss Lillie Morlan, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, visited Auburn Monday.

—L. M. Bassett, who has been attending the normal school at Valparaiso, is back shaking hands with his old friends.

—The Junior partner of the COURIER is apparently no better. He looks bad and suffers constantly with pain.

—Mrs. M. J. Widney, one of the earnest Sunday-school workers of this county, made us a brief visit the other day.

—Mrs. A. W. Allen left last week for St. Louis, Michigan, being called to the sick bed of her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Coombs.

—Mrs. W. J. Austin and her little ones returned Monday from quite an extended visit to Richmond, Indiana, her old home.

—F. K. Blake, of Smithfield township, will teach the higher mathematics in the normal school at Dickson, Ill. The fall term begins August 30.

—Our former citizen, Charles Shephard, returned last Saturday with a smile so childlike and bland. He was a guest of Dr. Littlefield and wife.

—William Nelson, of Jackson township, accompanied by his daughter Olive, and Miss Tillie Evans, of Lagrange, called to see us Tuesday while in town.

—L. F. Welling once more bade adieu to Auburn and went back to Jackson, temporarily at least. He left for that place last Saturday. He will likely be promoted.

—Lute Wright, who recently owned an interest in the lumber yard near the Saginaw depot, now of Michigan, was the guest of G. C. Ralston and wife this week.

—Rev. F. F. Christine and Peter Fisher came over to visit the sick editor Tuesday evening. Mr. Husselman expresses his thanks for many kind attentions during his sickness.

—Our young friend Wm. Forshey, left yesterday for Alida, this state, to take the position of agent at that station. Billy is a lively, jovial, good fellow, and our best wishes go with him.

—M. F. Long looks bad. Someone sleeping in the next room to him, at a hotel in Toledo, blew out the gas instead of turning it off and the only way for escape was through the room occupied by Mike. He was roused by someone shaking the door, or otherwise would have been suffocated.

—As we passed Major Sprott upon the street last Monday, and the thermometer a 100° in the shade, we ask: "Well, Major, how does this warm weather agree with you?" "I stand it very well," he replied. It was a noble answer for one so old. The young men of to-day have but little more ambition than old gentlemen like Mr. Sprott and S. W. Ralston. A little thoughtful attention, how happy it makes the old. They have outlived most of the friends of their early youth. Often their partners in life have long filled silent graves; often their children they have followed to the tomb. They stand solitary, bending on their staff, waiting till the same call shall reach them. Should not the young cling 'round them, cheering their gloom with songs and happy smiles?

—Married, at the residence of the bride's parents in Waterloo, July 13. Mr. Frank E. Adams and Miss Emma Bowers. H. J. Lacy of the M. E. church officiated.

—Sunday afternoon a refreshing breeze came up with indications of rain. It was very acceptable to everybody as the heat in the forenoon was intense.

—John Bunch has moved near the Wabash elevator. That end of town is famous for people of extraordinary height.

—Several Garrett fellows were in town Sunday again on a "highlow." How long are these Sunday drunks to be allowed?

—Charley Hoff's nerves are steady now. Vandermark is at the home of the unfortunate in Indianapolis.

Sun Stroke.

CHRIS. BAKER, AT AUBURN JUNCTION, THE VICTIM.

Last Saturday news reached us that Chris. Baker, landlord of one of the hotels at Auburn Junction, received a sun stroke, and upon inquiry we found the report to be true. He was not exposed to the sun any great length of time, but not being accustomed to outdoor life, it took him on the "double-quick" order. He was in a critical condition on Sunday last, but is feeling pretty well to-day.

T. P. Scott also received a stroke Monday while at work near the creek bottom.

Hard Storms.

SOME DAMAGE DONE TO FENCES, TREES, ETC., ETC.

About four o'clock yesterday a heavy wind and rain storm swept over this section of county doing considerable damage. Trees were torn down and fence-boards scattered promiscuously about town. Some of the buildings were more or less racked, and we should feel thankful that it was no worse. It was one of the heaviest wind storms ever witnessed here, and many of our citizens thought their final ending had come. A heavy rain followed, lasting about two hours, purifying the air and making the morning pleasant and beautiful.

Too Hot.

THE MERCURY DANCING AMONG THE NINETIES.

The weather for the past few days has been immensely warm, the thermometer pointing out ninety to one hundred degrees in the shade. Last Friday and Saturday the heat was intense, and many laborers, working up on the highways, were compelled to abandon their usual daily duties. Horses, cattle, etc., are looking badly, owing to the heat and the constant annoyance of flies. The "oldest inhabitants" say that, they cannot call to memory the time when the sun was so hot, at the beginning of July, as it has been for a few days back. Corn and other vegetables are suffering for the want of rain, and the "dish rattler" of the household is worrying about the cistern going dry.

Fuller'n a Tick."

A DISGUSTING CASE OF A DRUNKEN TRAMP SUNDAY NIGHT.

He was staggering down Van Buren street without the least knowledge of where he was going. He had been at the back doors too many times, and the innocent libations of ginger-ale and lemonade he imbibed had settled in his legs; and, although the mind was willing, the flesh was weak—his lower extremities wouldn't track. He was under the impression that he was "billed" in one the go-as-you-please races, and he lost his equilibrium and went head-long into the "canal" near the ward school building. The cool, sparkling water sobered him off somewhat, and his language to the corporation of this town was not strictly orthodox, according to the new revision. He gave his name as John Smith (a very uncommon title) from Ft. Wayne.

—Fellows who have to stand upon their tiptoes to see over their proboscis, are hereby notified that it is against the rules of printing offices for strangers to read copy while the compositor is setting it up.

—Girls, when you see a young man strolling about town in the evening, carrying a nickel fan, never freeze to him, unless you want to build the fires and cut your own wood.

—The following is the latest revision;

"Mary had a little lamp,
And tried to blow it out,
The paper states that Mary went Right up the golden spout!"

—Fin Gibson has made and sold thirty-two gallons of ice cream in a little over a week. He furnishes the largest dish of any dealer in town.

—Picker & Bumpus' brick-laying force went down into Allen county, one day last week, to gather whortleberries. The market is completely overstocked.

—Have Main street sprinkled. Let the town dads order the work to be done. Pass an ordinance. Do anything.

—The rumor that Vandermark had been crazy once before, has no foundation. This probably helped to worry the poor fellow's mind.

—Now the next door neighbor kicks up a racket with Mr. Jones because his hens wipe their feet on his cucumber beds.

—Charley Jackson will move his goods from Angola to Auburn this week and occupy Scott's residence on South Jackson street.

—Have you taken particular notice of Philo Lockwook's gloves? Don't know whether they came with the bicycle or not.

—The Main street ball nine broke a window for Mrs. Jones, Tuesday evening.

—A blind man made music for the boys in front of Kiblinger's hardware store yesterday.

—Our "satan," Conny Little, was somewhat "indisposed," as he said, several days this week.

—A new sidewalk has been put down in front of Guy Plumb's property, opposite the Auburn house.

—Henry Bashelier will move his family into the Stameta property, corner of Main and Twelfth streets.

—Be careful boys, if you have only ten cents, not to order two glasses of lemonade or you will have to stand somebody off.

—There does not seem to be much sickness at present. Everything is favorable, however, for an epidemic of some kind.

—Parties not a thousand blocks away from the COURIER office, are too much in the habit of making an exhibition of themselves at a privy facing the street. It is the result of thoughtlessness no doubt, but is very annoying to people living near. Shut the door, boys, and keep it shut. That is all we ask of you.

AUBURN COURIER.

In response to a call for a meeting of citizens of New York, to take action in regard to the attempt on the life of President Garfield, a large number of gentlemen assembled at the Chamber of Commerce. After appropriate addresses by several persons, Cyrus W. Field announced that a fund of $250,000 was to be subscribed, to be invested in United States bonds and be deposited with a trust company, the income to be paid to Mrs. Garfield, the principal to be divided among her children after her demise. Subscriptions to the amount of $39,000 were received in a few minutes. The Secretary of the Chamber telegraphed Postmaster General James that the full sum had been raised.

The Commissioners of Taxes estimate the present value of real and personal property in the city of New York at $1,186,948,000, an increase of $42,000,000 over last year.... There was a $75,000 fire in Newark, N.J.—a brewery.... Roscoe Conkling, in a letter to Attorney General MacVeagh, calls his attention to the broad distinction between assailing the life of an individual and an attempt to take a life of special value to the whole people, and suggests rigorous punishment for assaults on high executive officers.

THE WEST.

At midnight two masked men robbed a stage-coach near Alamosa, Col., securing from the six passengers about $800.... The paper-mill of Averill, Russell & Carpenter, on Hennepin island, near Minneapolis, valued at $35,000, was burned.... Stock to the amount of $500,000 has been taken for a new stock-yards company in Cincinnati.

A grain warehouse above Port Huron, Mich., filled with corn, was burned, the estimated loss being $40,000.

A laborer engaged in grading a railroad track at Edenville, Iowa, expressed the hope that President Garfield would not recover, and was so badly pounded by a fellow-workman that he died.

In Cincinnati, flames broke out in Marquis's carriage factory and speedily extended to and destroyed the Union furniture works, Closterman's chair factory and Meader's furniture shop. Charles Peat perished in the flames and five persons were injured. The loss will reach $500,000.

The Ute Commissioners have returned to the cantonment on the Uncompahgre, after making 800 miles on horseback through Colorado and Utah. They report having made a selection for the new reservation.... A stage was attacked by Apaches about 100 miles south of El Paso, and four passengers and two drivers killed. One passenger escaped in a wounded condition.

THE SOUTH.

Hiram Warner, formerly Chief Justice of Georgia, died at Atlanta, after a long illness. He was born in Williamsburg, Mass., in 1802.... Henry P. McGrath, the well-known Kentucky breeder and owner of running horses, is dead.

Adam Thompson, colored, was executed at Dallas, Texas, for killing John Schumaker five years ago.

Three children of Sheriff Micken, of Hernando county, Fla., aged 8, 11 and 14, were murdered by a negro in whose charge they were left. After robbing the house, the fiend endeavored to kill the father on his way home, but, instead, was captured, confessed his crime, and was lynched in presence of 200 citizens.

The temperance work which has been actively carried on in Georgia for several months past culminated in the assembling of a State convention at Atlanta at which 100 counties were represented. Judge W. H. Underwood, of Rome, was elected President. It was resolved to ask the Legislature to pass a prohibitory act.... Four persons were killed and fourteen wounded near Covington, Ky., on the 4th, by the collision of two picnic trains.

The explosion of the boiler of a portable threshing-machine on a farm in Talbot county, Md., killed three persons and seriously injured several others. The accident was caused by a reinforcement of cold water.

POLITICAL.

In the ballot at Albany on the 30th ult., for Conkling's successor, Potter had 53 votes, Wheeler 43 and Conkling 32. For the long term, Kernan had 53 supporters, Depew 51 and Platt 28. A motion in the Assembly to adjourn sine die on Saturday was tabled, the Democrats voting in the negative. The Grand Jury indicted A. D. Barber for paying E. R. Phelps $12,500 with which to bribe State officers, and Charles A. Edwards for receiving from Joseph Dickson $7,000 for the same purpose. Phelps was also arraigned, and all three gave bail. It is said that fifty signatures to a call for a caucus were obtained, but sixty-five were required. The latest sensation at Albany is a scandal involving the name of Platt.

On the announcement of a ballot for the long term at Albany, on the 1st inst., the name of Thomas C. Platt was withdrawn, at his own request, and that of Crowley was substituted. The ballot for the long term gave Depew and Kernan each 48 votes, Crowley 20, and Cornell 15. For the short term Potter had 48 votes, Wheeler 38, and Conkling 28. The Bribery Investigating Committee held a meeting without reaching a vote on its report.

The attempt on the life of the President seems to have had no influence on the stalwart vote at Albany. Two ballots were taken on the 5th, in which Potter had 47 for the short term, Wheeler 36 and Conkling 31. The vote for the long term gave Depew 48, Kernan 47, Wheeler 24, Crowley 19 and Cornell 15.

Both houses of the New York Legislature, on the 6th inst., unanimously adopted resolutions of sympathy for the wounded President and his afflicted family, and of condemnation of the murderous deed of his assailant. The ballot for Senator for the short term on that day was as follows: Potter, 53; Wheeler, 42; Crowley, 6; Rogers, 4; Conkling, 32; Cornell, 6; Lapham, 11; Folger, 1. The vote for Platt's successor stood: Kernan, 58; Depew, 53; Cornell, 16; Chapman, 4; Crowley, 19. Sixty-five members of the New York Legislature signed a call for a caucus of the Republican Senators and Assemblymen, to agree, if possible, upon candidates for United States Senators. Only sixty-three were present, however, and the meeting was deferred for one day. Majority and minority reports were made by the Bribery Investigating Committee, which are not conclusive one way or the other. The majority report submitted the evidence taken, but gave no conclusion, owing to the matter being in the hands of the court.

The joint convention of the New York Legislature balloted twice for Senators, on the 7th inst., the closing vote for the short term giving Potter 52, Wheeler 43 and Conkling 30. For the long term Kernan received 52, Depew 49, Crowley 18 and Cornell 17. At a conference of the Republican members in the evening it was agreed to hold a formal caucus next day, fifty-nine signing the call. The supporters of Conkling held a secret conference and resolved to take no part in the caucus.

WASHINGTON.

Attorney General MacVeagh insists that there will be no "let up" in the star-route prosecution, the President and the Cabinet being determined to go to the root of the business.

Sir Edward Thornton has handed to the President his letters of recall from Washington as British Envoy, invoking a continuance of the kindly relations between the two nations. President Garfield paid the retiring Minister the highest compliments for his services in bringing about two very important arbitrations..... The President has appointed R. S. Foster to the Marshalship of Indiana, made vacant by the resignation of William W. Dudley.... The receipts from internal revenue for the fiscal year were $134,974,166, and from customs $197,500,000.

Secretary Kirkwood suspended Theophilus French from the office of Commissioner of Railroads, whereupon Mr. French intimated his intention to resign at once.... Secretary Windom has issued a call for all the outstanding registered 5-per-cent. bonds. Prior to Oct. 1 holders can have them cashed in full with interest, on presentation at the Treasury Department. The amount involved is about $30,000,000.... James B. Fry, Assistant Adjutant General, has been retired. Gen. Hancock has asked promotion for Col. William G. Mitchell, of his staff.

The very last appointments made to office by President Garfield, previous to being shot by the assassin Guiteau, were the following: Charles Payson, of Massachusetts, Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen, vice Cramer, transferred to Switzerland; George W. Carter, of Louisiana, Minister to Venezuela, vice John Baker, recalled; and the Rev. Henry Highland Garnett, of New York, Minister Resident and Consul General to Liberia, vice John H. Smythe, recalled.

Walker Blaine, son of the Secretary, has entered upon his duties as Third Assistant Secretary of State.

GENERAL.

There are 44,490 postoffices in the United States. During the year 2,894 were established and 1,408 discontinued. The number of Postmasters commissioned is 10,441.... Work on the Yorktown centennial monument, which is to cost $100,000, will be begun at once.

The race on the Ottawa river, in which Wallace Ross defeated Trickett, Gaudier and others, was witnessed by 20,000 persons. Hanlan acted as referee, and was presented by the corporation with a chain and cup.... A party of contractors have sailed from San Francisco for the Isthmus of Panama, to build twenty villages along the survey of De Lesseps' canal. California redwood will be used, and nearly $1,000,000 will be disbursed..... Fifty-four national banks were organized during the fiscal year just closed, nineteen went into voluntary liquidation, and there were no failures. The number now in existence is 2,122.

The Mercantile Agency of Dun, Wyman & Co. announce the extent of business failures for the first six months of 1881. In number they amount to 2,862, as compared with 2,497 in the first half of 1880, and 4,018 in 1879. The liabilities for the first half are stated to be $40,000,000, compared with $33,000,000 the first six months of 1880, and $65,000,000 in 1879. The semi-annual circular issued by Dun, Wyman & Co. contains reports from forty-four trade centers, nearly all of which indicate a highly-prosperous condition of business, with reports almost uniformly favorable as to the condition of the crops, not only of grain, but also of cotton, rice, sugar, tobacco, etc. The entire business outlook, as indicated by this authentic return, seems extremely favorable. The necessity of some caution is at the same time indicated.... The Chicago Times has obtained the views of the Western State Boards of Agriculture as to the growing crops. In Ohio the yield is expected to be about 80 per cent. of that of last year, the early sown being the best. The acreage in Michigan is about the same as in 1880, and only ten or twelve bushels per acre are looked for. Indiana expects a crop of only 30,000,000 bushels, as against 47,000,000 last year, the quality being excellent. Wisconsin has a large acreage in spring, but a half breadth of winter wheat, and the crop is in fine condition. The Iowa board estimates the spring-wheat crop at half that of last year, and the winter sown at 44 per cent.

Mrs. Garfield had a narrow escape on her hurried journey from Long Branch to the bedside of her husband. The parallel rod of the engine broke while the wheels were making 250 revolutions a minute. The broken bar tore the ties for two miles before a stop could be made. Railway men pronounce it a miracle that the engine did not jump the track and cause the death of all on board the train.... At the sand hills, about forty miles south of El Paso, the decaying bodies of thirteen men of the Mexican Central surveying party were found by some American tourists. The news was at once carried to El Paso, from which point a strong detachment of troops was sent out. It is believed that the massacre was the work of the remnant of Victoria's band of Apaches, who for months have been committing depredations in the Sierra Candeleria.

Reports are received of massacres by hostile Apache Indians in New Mexico and Northern Mexico. A stage coach was attacked south of El Paso and its four passengers and two drivers killed, and there is a report of the killing of a surveying party of thirty persons on the Mexican Central railroad.

Over 800 Mormon immigrants, chiefly Scandinavians, arrived at New York one day last week, in charge of Elder Rosell.... King David Kalakaua, of the Sandwich islands, has arrived in London.... Mrs. McCoy, of Charleston, Clark county, who recently lost $1,800, and created a sensation by causing the arrest of her own daughter, afterward discovered the money, $800 in one, and $1,000 in another place, where she herself had placed it, but had forgotten the circumstance.

A mass-meeting of the citizens of Greencastle was held at the Mayor's office to pass resolutions regarding the departure of the Japanese students to their homes. Appropriate resolutions were passed, and speeches made by the citizens, to which the Japanese boys replied in suitable terms. They spoke feelingly of the many kindnesses received at the hands of the citizens of Greencastle.

Says the New Albany Ledger-Standard: The sparrow is a fraud. He is game enough in a fight, but as a destroyer of caterpillars a dead failure. New Albany has of late years been overrun by English sparrows. Their increase has been amazing. They are in every tree, on every bush, fill the streets and door-yards, and fight from early dawn to dewey eve. Meantime, however, the caterpillars are taking the city. They are everywhere, even covering the sides of the houses. The aciduous trees are alive with them. But the game sparrow pays no attention to the worms.

The following is a copy of a message from William Henry Harrison to the Legislative Council and House of Representatives, under date of Dec. 6, 1810. In the early history of the Northwest rich creditor might insist upon having the last article of furniture sold away from the poor, leaving wife and children helpless, without food or bed. This injustice was early called to the attention Territory, before legislation by the Territorial Legislature, the poor debtor had nothing exempt from execution, and the of the Legislature by Gov. Harrison, as the message below will show. The document is an old one, but the writing is legible. The paper is an imitation of parchment:

> Gentlemen of the Legislative Council and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:
> I have long thought that our laws are unnecessarily rigorous to insolvent debtors. If I do not mistake, there is scarcely an article, even of the greatest necessity, that is not subject to execution for debt. To take from the debtor those articles which only contribute to his ease and convenience is, no doubt, proper, but I should suppose that justice ought with these to be satisfied, and humanity strongly pleads in favor of leaving a distressed family a few articles which are indispensable to their existence.
>
> I recommend to you, gentlemen, to take the subject under your consideration. A bed, a cow and a few cooking implements are no great matter to a rich creditor, but are all important to a family which has nothing else.
>
> William Henry Harrison.

Disease Conquered by Will.

It has been proved by experiments that imagination may cause sickness, and may even occasion death, without any organic disease. Physicians assert, on the other hand, that a resolute will may baffle dangerous disease and bring recovery when reasonable hope be lost.

Mr. Andrew Crosse, the famous electrician of England, has shown that hydrophobia can be resisted and overcome by power of will. He was bitten by a cat, which died of madness the same day. The wound healed, and the circumstance was almost forgotten. But one day, three months after, intense pain was felt in his arm, attended by great thirst. In attempting to drink a severe spasm closed his throat.

A sudden faintness came over him, and with it the thought that he was doomed to die of hydrophobia. He determined to conquer the disease, and, taking a gun, went forth on a long hunt. In spite of the pain in his arm he kept up a vigorous tramp all day. On reaching home in the evening he felt better, and was able to eat and drink water. The next day the pain retreated to the elbow, the following day to the wrist, and then left him without harm. An experienced physician affirmed that a decided case of hydrophobia had been arrested only by the mastery of the will.

Six sisters and a brother reside near each other in Eastern Massachusetts, whose united ages are 546 years and 2 months, and there has been no death in their generation of their family for eighty years.

Boston's Italians.

Boston has an Italian colony about 1,300 strong. There are few wealthy Italians there, but a large majority of them possess the comforts, and many the luxuries, of life. In small houses, located on narrow streets and alleys, rich Brussels carpets and costly walnut furniture may be found. Paintings and engravings adorn the walls, and tasteful articles of bijouterie abound. Their moral character also is good. Their church is regularly attended by over 300 families, while the police declare them to be the most orderly class of the city's population.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 22.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer afflicted in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1881.

ASSASSINATED.

President Garfield Shot Down at Washington.

The Assassin a Chicago Lawyer, Named Guiteau.

Full and Accurate Details of the Horrible Crime.

The President of the United States was shot twice on the morning of Saturday, July 2, in the Pennsylvania railroad depot in Washington, by Charles J. Guiteau, of Illinois. One shot inflicted a mere flesh wound—not at all dangerous—in the left arm. The second shot entered the lower left side from the back, fractured one of the ribs, and lodged in the lower part of the liver. When the President received this shot he fell to the floor. The assassin cried out: "President Garfield is dead. Arthur is President, and the stalwarts are avenged! Bring on the police. I have a letter for Gen. Sherman that will explain everything." He was at once seized by two officers in the depot, and, almost before the crowd could realize what had happened, the assassin had been taken to jail. From the voluminous mass of telegraphic dispatches to the daily press we condense the following connected account of the dreadful affair:

The President had alighted from his carriage and was passing through the ladies' room to the cars. When about five feet inside of the room, the assassin, who was within three feet of him, fired one shot. The President was dazed, and made no attempt at self-protection. Secretary Blaine had turned toward the door. The assassin fired a second shot within ten seconds from the first. The President fell, and Mrs. White, who attends the ladies' waiting-room, rushed to him and raised up his head. Secretary Blaine also rushed to the assistance of the President. The assassin passed out toward B street, but Capt. Parke, the ticket agent, jumped through the window and caught the assassin, who made no resistance. Officer Carney, the depot policeman, ran up and took hold of the assassin, and immediately afterward Officer Scott also took hold of him. Parke let the officers have him, and turned his attention to the President. Help came, and the President was taken up-stairs. He said not a word until he was laid down, when he asked that his shoes be taken off, saying he felt pain in his feet. As soon as his shoes were removed, he said to Secretary Windom: "Go right home now and send a telegram to Mrs. Garfield, saying: 'I feel considerably better,' and, if she feels well enough, tell her to come to Washington immediately." This dispatch was sent, and a special train was at once sent to Long Branch for Mrs. Garfield.

Col. Rockwell, who was with the President's party, at once dispatched mounted orderlies for physicians. The President was laid upon a couch at the depot. The doors were guarded against the crowd that began to mass about the depot, pale with excitement. Surgeon General Barnes, of the army; Surgeon General Wales, of the navy; Dr. Bliss, one of the most skillful of the army surgeons, and a host of local practitioners were soon at the depot. The President did not lose consciousness, but his pulse ran down to 55, and after a short time he vomited. The shot in the back was thought for a time to be fatal. Reports that death had already resulted speedily became current. Crowds gathered everywhere; carriages blocked every crossing; every one seemed wild with excitement. The public departments at once suspended business, and nearly the whole population of Washington poured out into the street. The air was fresh and crisp; the wind was from the sea; a more lovely day had never been known there at this season. Instead of the usual sultry atmosphere of a Washington summer, the air was as fresh as a Northern seaside resort. The President himself was in a happy and chatty mood that morning when he left the White House. He was in perfect health, and looking forward with delight to his trip to New England. He wore a frock suit of tourist's grey, and a silk hat. He was accompanied in his ride to the depot by Secretary Blaine and Col. Rockwell. The carriage that followed him contained his two boys, Harry and James, and Don Rockwell, son of Col. Rockwell. Of the Cabinet officers beside Mr. Blaine, Messrs. Hunt, Lincoln, MacVeagh and James were at the depot.

INSIDE THE WHITE HOUSE.

The President was taken to the White House on a mattress in a police ambulance about 10 o'clock. Looking up as he reached the entrance he saw Cols. Crook and Morton, of his personal staff, and pluckily waved his hand to them, as if to assure them that he was not so badly injured as had been reported. As he was brought in upon the stout shoulders of policemen, he passed Mrs. Blaine in the ante-room below, and kissed his hand to her with a reassuring air. He was then carried up to his own bedroom, where Mrs. Garfield was sick so long, and laid upon the bed. A consultation of physicians was at once held. Mrs. Dr. Edson was installed as nurse. Col. Rockwell sat upon the bed, watching the President, while Mr. Crump, the steward, stood at the head of the bed. Dr. Bliss was placed in charge of the case. All the physicians were pale and trembling with excitement. The President was the coolest person in the room. He was perfectly cheerful, and immediately ordered dispatches to be sent to his wife and mother, to contradict rumors of his death that might have reached them.

The bedroom was cleared of all but the physicians, the personal attendants of the President and his two sons. All the members of the Cabinet were in the hall adjoining the bedroom, where they remained until favorable symptoms began to appear. At twenty minutes of 11 o'clock, Harry Garfield dashed into the private telegraph office in the White House and sent a dispatch to Mrs. Eliza Garfield, his grandmother, saying that the doctor's opinion then was that the wound was not fatal. A consultation was had at 12 o'clock, and Surgeon General Barnes said a few moments afterward that a final examination would be made at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The patient's condition was so far favorable. His pulse had gone up from below 55 to nearly the normal rate. His face was losing the look of pain, and the tense muscles were relaxing. He did not think the spine was injured, because the President could move his legs up and down without any trouble. Whether the intestines had been cut was not certain. If the spine and intestines had escaped there was every reason to hope for recovery. The wound was made by a very large flaring ball, and the edges were ragged.

The President was very brave and collected. He was continually reassuring those about him, and made not a single word of complaint. When Dr. Bliss handed him a large glass of whisky, the President said, with a smile, as he took it: "Doctor, you will make me drunk." After the reaction and the stimulants inclined him to doze, the hope that he was not fatally injured quieted the excitement in the White House, but the excitement outside continued.

After the President's arrival at the White House, there was a continued stream of diplomatic callers and officials. They were received in the hallway near the President's private room. Here, scattered about upon the lounges and easy-chairs of the waiting-rooms, were grouped, at various times in the day, all of the representative men at Washington. The glass doors which separate the large, wide hall of the White House from the hallways of the executive offices were closed and locked. The correspondent was admitted by Private Secretary Brown to the private part of the house, in the neighborhood of 11 o'clock. This hallway was darkened. Passing down this to the extreme end, another glass door, also locked, was opened, and the private room of Gen. Garfield was passed. It is a large, spacious room. The furniture is a light wood. The carpet is dark, overrun with small crimson roses and straggling vines. The room itself was moderately darkened, enough light coming in from the southern windows to light up the scene about the bed. There lay Gen. Garfield, with his head slightly supported upon a low pillow. Half reclining upon the bed near him was Col. Rockwell, in a gray tweed suit. He rested on his right elbow, gazing attentively at the President to anticipate every movement of his will almost before the utterance.

The stolid and faithful house steward stood at the head of the bed, and one or two messengers were ranged about, obeying the orders of the physicians. Mrs. Dr. Edson, the celebrated woman doctor of the city, who was one of the principal physicians attending on Mrs. Garfield, was also in the room. She is a tall, broad-shouldered, robust-looking woman, dressed in plain, rather seedy-looking black bombazine. Her yellowish-gray hair was cut short, and combed down straight like a man's. She wore gold-bowed glasses that were continually falling off from her long, thin nose, so nervous and excited was this great friend of the President's wife.

Mrs. Edson occupied the position of nurse. She was not recognized by the doctors during the consultation. It was she who remained a greater part of the time by the General's bedside, every now and then leaving the room and rushing to the telegraph office to send a dispatch to Mrs. Garfield, at Long Branch, or to Mrs. Garfield, senior, in Ohio. Coming in and out of the room constantly during the physicians' long consultation, held at 12 o'clock, were the two boys of the President, Harry and James. Harry is a tall, stout boy, in the neighborhood of 16, although he looks a trifle older. The younger boy, James, is in the neighborhood of 14. The two lads behaved very bravely throughout the whole affair.

THE EXCITEMENT IN WASHINGTON.

Before the President was removed from the depot no one was permitted to enter except those whose presence was absolutely required. By some unaccountable means, news was conveyed to multitudes in the streets to the effect that, although the President was not dead, he was mortally wounded. Then a gloom seemed to settle down upon the city like a great pall, and the vast concourse of people waited patiently outside the depot for news from within. They reminded one strongly of the friends and relatives of a dying man waiting in the ante-room of the chamber of death.

The suspense was dreadful. Business men and ladies, with faces pale with excitement, and eyes bloodshot with straining, stared fixedly at the door of the depot, and strove painfully to learn or divine something about the wounded man within. At last the door opened and some of the doctors came out. The throng pressed closely around them and begged for information. The medical men said: "He is not dead; he is not in any immediate danger, and in fact there are hopes of his recovery." The purport of these words was conveyed to the people present, and was transmitted from lip to lip and from lip to wire all over the country. The city drew a long breath, and the excitement, which had been at white heat, gradually subsided in intensity. Then there was a stir on the outer edge of the crowd, and the people were moved off right and left, and every way. It was to make room for an ambulance which had been summoned to transport the suffering President to the White House. Tenderly was he borne from the building to the vehicle, and quietly and gently was he laid on a mattress therein. Then the vehicle drove off slowly to the White House, followed at a respectful distance by the crowd. When he reached it he was borne inside, and was followed by Surgeon Bliss, who had attended him from the first, and other physicians. The friends of the wounded chief stood sorrowfully about him, and the doors closed between him, his future, and the thousands who stood in the highways and byways of the city awaiting the end.

SECRETARY BLAINE'S STATEMENT.

Secretary Blaine was not going with the party, but went down to bid the President good-by. He said: "The President and I were walking arm in arm toward the train. I heard two shots and saw a man run. I started after him, but, seeing that he was grabbed just as he got out of the room, I came to the President and found him lying on the floor. The floor was covered with the President's blood. A number of people who were around shortly afterward have some of that blood on their persons."

Mr. Blaine also gave a very interesting account of his talk with the President that morning going down in the carriage. The President said to Mr. Blaine: "You have no idea how happy I am this morning. I feel like a boy again—everything seems to go so well. The funding operations are all successful, and I think we have gotten through our hard times. The people seem to be with us, and I think we can look forward now to having a very successful administration." He said: "I am so well satisfied with the situation, so well satisfied with the past, that I feel now that I can go to New England and just have a boy's frolic. I intend to forget that I am President. I intend to forget all about my past troubles and have a good, wholesome rest." Mr. Blaine says that he never saw the President in such a joyful mood, and he was talking in this vein with him in the ladies' waiting room when the ignoble assassin came upon them and fired the two shots that laid the President low. Mr. Blaine himself had a narrow escape, as he stood exactly in line with the President, and, had it not been for the attempt of the assassin to escape after having made the two shots, he too might have shared his crazy fury.

SECRETARY LINCOLN'S STATEMENT.

Speaking of the shooting, Secretary of War Robert Lincoln said no one could have foreseen the incident, and the duration of its occurrence was barely three seconds. Secretary Blaine and the President stood elbow to elbow talking about some ordinary topic. The sound of the two shots and the fall of the President were almost instantaneous. The exclamation of the assassin followed as quickly, and in the brief seconds of the occurrence the scene of quiet changed to that of excitement, so great that it amounted to a wild panic. The coolness of the depot officers and some of the local officials prevented anything like a riot that was for a few moments threatened. The prisoner was conveyed to the Central Station before the crowd fully realized what had been done.

THE PRESIDENT'S WONDERFUL NERVE.

Said Dr. Bliss: "From the very first the President has been plucky and brave. Indeed, he has at times been in an almost-frolicsome mood. I never, in all my experience, met with such a patient. I never have seen such nerve—never have seen such coolness, such self-possession. The President has discussed his case with me at different times all day. When I came to him at the depot he shook me by the hand and said, 'Bliss, how is it?' and it has been 'Bliss, how is it?' at different times all the afternoon." "Yes," said Gen. James, "he shook me by the hand down at the depot, and as he gave me a strong grip he said: 'James, what do you think was the motive of this man?' and I replied: 'Well, you will have to ask Father Kirkwood—he is here—he is older than I;' and he then turned to Kirkwood, and all that Kirkwood could say was, 'Devilish, infamous.'"

ARRIVAL OF MRS. GARFIELD.

The most touching episode of the day was the home-coming of Mrs. Garfield. A dispatch had been sent to her early in the day to come. The dispatch was carefully worded so as not needlessly to alarm her. A peremptory dispatch was sent to Judge Swayne, who was with her, to charter a special train and bring her on as rapidly as possible. All the afternoon the President kept inquiring for her. At the time the carriages first appeared in sight, there was a cry: "Oh, there they come!" There were three carriages, and the horses attached to them were lashed into a gallop. So furious and swift were they coming that hardly had they appeared in sight when there was a crash and roll on the gravel, and the close black carriage and black horses belonging to the President's own stable came with a whirl up in front of the Attorney General, and were checked by a blue-coated messenger who stood there waiting. The colored man on the box did not turn his head. He sat as if carved in marble. The Attorney General ran forward, seized the door of the carriage and opened it. Just back of him came running little James Garfield, young Rockwell and Mrs. MacVeagh.

Every head was bowed as Mrs. Garfield stepped resolutely out. There were traces of tears about her eyes. She showed no other signs of weakness. Her little boy sprang forward and cried: "Oh, mamma." That was all he said. She pressed his hand warmly, and then, leaning upon the arm of the Attorney General and leading her little boy, she started up the steps. Then came Mollie Garfield, weeping, a pleasant-faced little lass in gray. She was followed by Mrs. Rockwell, a snow-white haired lady, whose appearance of youthfulness did not correspond with the gray of her hair. A servant or two with wraps followed. They walked quickly up-stairs. There was hardly a dry eye among the few spectators who watched the pathetic home-coming of the poor woman who had suffered so much. Something of her resolute character was shown as she walked almost without assistance to her husband's room. She went in and walked up to him quietly without the first evidence or sign of any emotion that would annoy or irritate or make him nervous. She said simply: "I am glad to be home." He said: "I am very glad to have you." They kissed, and then she, after a moment or two, passed into a side room, fearing that she would not be able to control herself in his sight. A moment or two afterward she was seen in company with Judge Swayne and her boy James. The boy had his arm about his mother's waist and he was doing his best to console her. She very nearly broke down after this, but in a moment she regained her self-control.

THE ASSASSIN'S LETTERS.

When Guiteau was arrested he made no resistance, saying that he had contemplated the killing of the President, and it was for the good of the country. About 9 o'clock the assassin went to the hack stand adjoining the depot to engage a hack from Barton, a colored hackman. He said he wanted to go to Glenwood Cemetery in a short time, and wanted the hackman to drive very fast when he should get in the hack. He agreed to pay $2 for the hack on condition that the hackman should drive fast. When stopped, the assassin was going to the hack he had engaged, and he insisted that it was important for him to go and deliver a message to Gen. Sherman. When the officers refused to let him go he begged them to take a letter he had to Gen. Sherman.

Following is a copy of the letter:

JULY 2, 1881.

To the White House

The President's tragic death was a sad necessity, but it will unite the Republican party and save the republic. Life is a flimsy dream, and it matters little when one goes. A human life is of small importance. During the war thousands of brave boys went down without a tear. I presume the President was a Christian, and that he will be happier in Paradise than here. It will be no worse for Mrs. Garfield, dear soul, to part with her husband this way than by natural death. He is liable to go at any time, anyway. I had no ill-will against the President. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, a theologian and a politician. I am a stalwart of the stalwarts. I was with Gen. Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I have some papers for the press which I shall leave with Byron Andrews and his co-journalists at No. 1,420 New York avenue, where all reporters can see them. I am now going to jail. CHARLES GUITEAU.

The following letter was found on the street shortly after Guiteau's arrest. The envelope was unsealed and addressed: "Please deliver at once to Gen. Sherman or his first assistant in charge of the War Department."

To GEN. SHERMAN: I have just shot the President. I shot him several times, as I wished him to go as easily as possible. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, theologian and politician. I am stalwart of the stalwarts. I was with Gen. Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I am going to jail. Please order out troops and take possession of the jail at once.

Very respectfully CHARLES GUITEAU.

TALK WITH THE ASSASSIN.

The assassin was taken to jail by Lieuts. Austin and Eckloff and Detective McElfresh. The following conversation took place on their way to the jail: McElfresh said: "I asked him, 'Where are you from?' 'I am a native-born American, born in Chicago.' He said he was a lawyer and a theologian. I asked 'Why did you do this?' and he replied, 'I did it to save the Republican party.' 'What is your politics?' said I. He answered, 'I am a stalwart among the stalwarts. With Garfield out of the way we can carry all the Northern States, and with him in the way we can't carry a single one.' He then said to me, 'Who are you?' and I replied, 'A detective officer of this department.' 'You stick to me,' he said, 'and have me put in the third-story front at the jail, and Gen. Sherman is coming down to take charge. Arthur and all those men are my friends, and I'll have you made Chief of Police. When you go back to the depot you will find that I left two bundles of papers at the news stand, which will explain all.' I asked him, 'Is there anybody else with you in this matter?' and he answered, 'Not a living soul. I contemplated this thing for the last six weeks, and would have shot him when he went away with Mrs. Garfield, but I looked at her and she looked so bad that I changed my mind.' On reaching the jail the people there did not seem to know anything about the assassination, and, when we took him inside the door, Mr. Russ, the Deputy Warden, says, 'This man has been here before.' I then asked him, 'Have you ever been here before?' He replied, 'No, sir.' I said, 'Well, the Deputy Warden seems to identify you.' He said, 'Yes, I was down here last Saturday morning and wanted them to let me look through, and they told me that I couldn't, but to come Monday.' I asked, 'What was your object in looking through?' He said, 'I wanted to see what sort of quarters I would have to occupy.' I then searched him, and, when I pulled off his shoes, he said, 'Give me my shoes. I will catch cold on this stone pavement.' I told him he couldn't have them, and he said, 'Give me a pair of pumps, then.'"

GUITEAU'S VISITS TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

Secretary Lincoln said that he knew the assassin by general reputation in Chicago. He had heard of him quite often in connection with Socialistic organization, in that city, and he believed that once or twice he had some temporary connection with the bar. At least he called himself a lawyer, and perhaps had picked up a little practice. As soon as Secretary Lincoln announced in the White House the name of the assassin, all of the Secretaries of the President could call him to mind. Col. Crook, especially, has had a great deal to do with him, and gave, this morning, a very elaborate description of Guiteau, and some of the details of his many visits at the White House.

Col. Crook said: "Of course you know that the White House has become, in latter years, a sort of headquarters for all the lunatics in the country. We are continually being inundated with letters from crazy people, and there is hardly a day that some some lunatic does not call at the White House upon some very important mission who desires a special audience with the President. Most of the people who call are perfectly harmless. Guiteau never, to my mind, has suggested the idea of danger. He has been coming in and going out of here ever since the 4th of March. He came to me one morning in April, in my office, and threw his card down upon my desk and said: 'I want to see the President.' He always claimed that he was largely instrumental in carrying Illinois for Garfield, and for that reason he ought to be recognized. Well, after that I went out and told Mr. Guiteau that he could not see the President. The President was engaged. One day, however, he did succeed in getting by us, and got in with the general crowd, and presented his hand to the President. That was some time ago, however. The President treated him as he did all that class of callers, and got rid of him as easily as possible, without making any promises one way or the other. Since then he has been coming here every day. He was a very peculiar man—so peculiar that I have made a sketch of him, and here the Colonel opened his book and showed a lead-pencil sketch that he had made of Guiteau several weeks ago. The pencil sketch represents a man with a good forehead, clear staring eyes, sharp nose, full mustache, flowing beard, and stubby hair combed right back from the forehead without parting. Col. Crook says he has always worn a blue gray suit, and a black, dirty hat. He had been very impudent and insolent to most of the people about the White House and has annoyed them excessively, but has never approached anything like violence or disorder so as to warrant his arrest. He said that he came in one day and called for some stationery and cards, and gradually began to use one of the large ante-rooms of the White House as a private office. He would come up there in the morning with his papers and read them, and borrow some stationery and write a lot of letters, and in fact was making himself so much at home that yesterday Col. Crook suggested to him that he was encroaching upon the privileges of the office, and that he could not give him any more stationery. This seemed to irritate Guiteau very much. Guiteau at all times sought to produce an impression upon the Secretary that he was a very powerful politician. One day Gen. Logan came into the White House, and while there Guiteau ran up to him and shook hands with him. Gen. Logan looked at him as if he might have known him and might not have known him, and passed on. Then Guiteau came to Crook and said: "There, do you see, I know Logan. I know all them big fellows. You see how I stand with them. Now do you think I am a man the administration can afford to overlook?" The proof of Guiteau's lunacy lies in the letters that he has written. He belongs to the class of crazy men who feel it their duty to send each day a daily missive to the White House. His letters have become so notorious that they are simply thrown into the waste-basket without being opened. At the first part of the administration his letters were addressed to the President, congratulating him on his policy and giving him very elaborate advice. His sentences were well written and the words correctly spelled, but there was a lack of coherency. There was nothing in the way of cause in the communications from beginning to end. If the letters were not artful preparations and were the honest productions of Guiteau, any judge would certainly convict him of insanity upon their reading."

DISPATCH TO MINISTER LOWELL.

WASHINGTON, July 2.

The following was forwarded by cable:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, July 2.

To James Russell Lowell, Minister, etc., London:

The President of the United States was shot this morning by an assassin named Charles Guiteau. The weapon was a large-sized revolver. The President had just reached the Baltimore and Potomac station at about twenty minutes past 9, intending, with a portion of his Cabinet, to leave on the limited express train for New York. I rode in the carriage with him from the Executive Mansion, and was walking by his side when he was shot. The assassin was immediately arrested, and the President was conveyed to a private room in the station building, and surgical aid at once summoned. He has now (at twenty minutes past 10) been removed to the Executive Mansion. The surgeons in consultation regard his wounds as very serious, though not necessarily fatal. His vigorous health gives strong hopes of his recovery. He has not lost consciousness for a moment. Inform our Ministers in Europe.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

A MESSAGE FROM GEN. HANCOCK.

The following was received from Gen. Hancock:

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, July 2.

To Gen. W. T. Sherman, Washington:

I trust that the result of the assault upon the life of the President to-day may not have fatal consequences, and that in the interest of the country the act may be shown to have been that of a madman. Thanks for your dispatch and your promise of further information. W. S. HANCOCK.

GRANT'S WORD.

The following dispatch was received by Secretary Lincoln from Gen. Grant:

ELBERON, N. J., July 2.

To Secretary Lincoln, Washington:

Please dispatch me the condition of the President. News received conflicts. I hope the most favorable may be confirmed. Express to the President my deep sympathy and hope that he may speedily recover. U. S. GRANT.

THE QUEEN'S SYMPATHY.

The Secretary of State received from Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister, the following telegram, dated London, July 2, 10:15 p. m.:

To Sir Edward Thornton, British Ambassador, Washington:

The Queen desires that you will at once express her sorrow with which she has learned of the attempt upon the President's life, and her warmest hope for his recovery. Her Majesty wishes for full and immediate reports as to his condition.

LORD GRANVILLE.

ARTHUR'S CONDOLENCE.

The following telegram was received by Secretary Blaine:

NEW YORK, July 2.

The Hon. James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, Washington:

Your telegram with its deplorable narrative did not reach me promptly, owing to my absence. I am profoundly shocked at the dreadful news. The hopes you express relieve somewhat the horror of the first announcement. I await further intelligence with the greatest anxiety. Express to the President and those about him my grief and sympathy, in which the whole American people will join. C. A. ARTHUR.

THE FEELING IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, July 3.

Intelligence of the attempt to assassinate President Garfield was received here about 3 o'clock yesterday, creating the most intense excitement among Americans. All sorts of speculations were indulged in. Some thought it was done by Socialists, as part of a general plan for the assassination of the rulers of the various countries, as lately announced in the Socialist programme. Supposing such to be the case, it was the universal wish that the assassin should never be permitted to reach the jail alive. It was also hoped that the people of the United States would at once commence a war of extermination against every socialist in the country who should indorse the deed. Every American center in London was besieged by Americans to get the latest news.

The office of the American legation was thronged by crowds, anxious to get the latest news, and personal calls were received from hundreds, many of whom were British officials, asking information and expressing regret over the event. Minister Lowell was not at all communicative, declining entirely to express any opinion as to the occurrence, or as to the effect on the British people in case Garfield should die. Telegrams were received by Mr. Lowell from several members of the British Cabinet, and one from the Queen at Windsor, asking for the latest information, and expressing regret at the attempt made upon Mr. Garfield's life.

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

James A. Garfield, the twentieth President of the United States in succession to that office, was born at Orange, Cuyahoga county, Ohio (fifteen miles from Cleveland), Nov. 9, 1831. Both his parents were of New England stock. His father was a farmer in moderate circumstances, and died when James was only 2 years old. There were three other children, and upon the widowed mother devolved the rearing of her little family. James developed a stout boyhood in the rugged out-door life which filled his earlier years at farm work and canal-driving, and he had intended to ship as a seaman on a lake vessel, when a fit of sickness turned his destiny to another direction. He therefore entered Geauga Academy, near his mother's home, and, working his way, was able, at the age of 23 years, to enter the junior class at Williams (Mass.) College, from which he graduated with honor in 1856. He then connected himself with the little college at Hiram, Portage county, Ohio, as Professor, and later as its President, and incidentally filled the pulpit of Campbellite churches, to which denomination Hiram College was attached. While college Professor, he married Miss Lucretia Rudolph, daughter of a neighboring farmer.

His political career began in 1859 with an election to the Ohio Senate, and the outbreak of the Civil War, in 1861, opened to him a wider life. He went to the field as Colonel of the Forty-second Ohio regiment, was soon put in command of a brigade, and, as a brigade commander, participated in the earlier campaigns of Kentucky and Tennessee, including the second day's battle at Pittsburg Landing, the siege of Corinth, and operations along the line of the Memphis and Charleston railroad. In January, 1863, he became Chief of Staff to Gen. Rosecrans, in the Army of the Cumberland, and bore prominent share in all the campaigns in Middle Tennessee in the spring and summer of that year. His last conspicuous military service was at the battle of Chickamauga. For his conduct in that battle he was promoted to a Major Generalship.

In 1862 the district long represented in Congress by Joshua R. Giddings had made Gen. Garfield a Congressman-elect, and, with the assembling of the House, in December, 1863, his Congressional service began. Successive re-elections extended that service over a period of seventeen years, and it was begun and continued in a manner to place him in the front rank of Republican leaders.

Gen. Garfield was elected a Senator of the United States, as the successor of Thurman (Democrat), by the Legislature of Ohio, in January, 1880. Gen. Garfield's term as Senator would begin the 4th of March, 1881, but the political events of 1880 decreed that he should, instead, be inaugurated President of the United States on that day.

BREAKING THE NEWS TO THE GOOD OLD MOTHER.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 3.

The news of the shooting of the President was broken to his mother this forenoon. She had been so much overcome by the fatal accident which resulted in the death of Thomas Garfield and Mrs. Arnold that the family had kept from her the intelligence of the attempted assassination. But this morning she felt better, and spoke of attending Mrs. Arnold's funeral, which took place at Bedford to-day. In announcing her intention, she remarked: "Last Saturday Thomas was buried, to-day Cornelia. I wonder who it will be next Sunday?" Mrs. Trowbridge, at whose house Mrs. Garfield was, then sent for Mrs. Larrabee, another daughter. When the latter arrived Mrs. Garfield inquired if she was going to Mrs. Arnold's funeral. Mrs. Larrabee replied that she guessed she could not, as something had happened, so the sisters thought it best not to go.

"What has happened?" inquired Mrs. Garfield.

"We have heard that James is hurt," replied Mrs. Larrabee.

"By the cars?" asked the mother.

"No. He was shot by an assassin, but he was not killed," replied the daughter.

"The Lord help me!" exclaimed Mrs. Garfield.

Mrs. Larrabee assured her mother that the latest reports were favorable, and showed that the President was resting quietly and in a fair way to recovery.

"When did you hear of this?" queried Mrs. Garfield.

"Yesterday noon; but we thought best not to tell you. The news was not as favorable as to-day," was the reply.

"You were very thoughtful. I am glad you didn't tell me," said Mrs. Garfield, adding that she thought something had happened, as she had noticed that the manners of her daughters had been peculiar toward her during yesterday. She added: "How could anybody be so cold-hearted as to want to kill my baby?"

This afternoon she dictated the following dispatch to her grandson:

Harry A. Garfield, Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.:

The news was broken to me this morning, and shocked me very much. Since receiving your telegram I feel much more hopeful. Tell James that I hear he is cheerful and I am glad of it. Tell him to keep in good spirits and accept the love and sympathy of mother, sisters and friends.

ELIZA GARFIELD.

A FASTING FOURTH.

Gov. Cullom has issued the following:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SPRINGFIELD, July 3, 1881.

In pride and prosperity the people of Illinois and of the Union were preparing to celebrate the 105th anniversary of American independence, when the appalling news broke upon them that, on Saturday morning last, the President of the United States was shot by an assassin.

In the providence of God, President Garfield, though dangerously wounded, still lives, and, at the writing of this proclamation, at midnight preceding the Fourth of July, the attending physicians report that the wound is not necessarily fatal, and his condition gives hope that he may ultimately recover.

WHEREFORE, I, Shelby M. Cullom, Governor of the State of Illinois, do recommend to the people of this State, that, in their public ceremonies on to-morrow, they manifest, by appropriate expressions, their thankfulness to Almighty God for the preservation from death thus far of the President of the United States, not forgetting that he still lies in great danger.

In testimony whereof, I hereto set my hand, and cause the great seal of the State to be affixed.

Done at Springfield the day and date above named.

S. M. CULLOM.

By the Governor: Henry D. Dement, Secretary of State.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 3.

Gov. Foster has issued the following proclamation:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 3, 1881.

Suggestions are coming to me to counsel Mayors of cities and villages and the people of the State to suspend the usual Fourth of July celebration, and substitute therefor exercises in harmony with the universal feeling of distress over the attempted assassination of the President. These suggestions being so heartily in accord with my own feelings, I earnestly request that the people assemble in the churches at 10:30 a. m. and engage in devotions to Almighty God, and that the celebrations of the day be conducted in accord with what may then be known of the physical condition of the President.

Thanks to kind Providence, it is a great joy to add that present advices give hope for the recovery of the President.

CHARLES FOSTER, Governor.
SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 3.

THE DAY AFTER—HOPEFUL FEELING.

WASHINGTON, July 3.

President Garfield still lives. That such is the fact is largely due to his vigorous constitution, his temperate habits, his robust health and his indomitable pluck. As Secretary Windom remarked this morning: "If the President had not been one of the greatest men in the world he would not now be alive. He does not treat his condition lightly, nor assume an air of bravado, but, contemplating the probabilities of his situation with the calm heroism of a Christian, he is firm and determined, yet cheerful. This seems to describe the President's mental condition perfectly. He has a soul that knows no fear, and, while he undoubtedly fully realizes the imminent danger of his situation, he has not permitted it for an instant to unnerve him or to cloud his faculties. His pain, which has been at times intense, has been borne with patient cheerfulness. No murmur has escaped him. He has been as tender and considerate of the feelings of those around him as he used to be in the hours of his greatest vigor and joyousness.

During the night, although the wound was not probed, medical tests were employed by the surgeons to track the course of the ball, and they gave the alternative of two positions. They said it was either lodged in the lower edge of the right lobe of the liver, or that it had passed through that portion of the liver and was lodged in the anterior wall of the abdomen. Through the night morphine was constantly used to deaden the pain, and for other repressive purposes.

Ice was also constantly used to prevent inflammation, and the wound was continually swabbed. Mrs. Garfield is very certain that her husband will recover. The President himself shares this opinion. Once only has he felt that his hours were numbered, when, at his own request, at a time when he seemed to be sinking rapidly, the physicians told him that the chances were that he had not many hours to live. But it was only for a very short time that he seemed to feel that his end was near, and, even then, he was not despondent.

Late in the night he talked of pleasant things, and discussed with the watching physician, Dr. Bliss, what the effect upon his (the President's) career would have been had a brother of Dr. Bliss (who was Garfield's boon companion) failed to return to him a $10 note which he had lost. "The loss of that note," said the President, "might have prevented my going to school, might have prevented me from becoming President." The President's mind during the night was constantly on pleasant things of this sort, and he conversed cheerfully, in all his waking intervals, during the night.

Commissioner of Pensions Dudley passed the night with the President. The latter, in all his waking hours, was eager to talk. His mind was clear. He had great confidence that he was improving and would ultimately recover. He asked about the assassin, but from the description was unable to recall him. He suffered much pain at times in his legs, but did not at any time complain. As to the possibility of death he spoke calmly, and said, with great deliberation, that, if it was God's will that he must die, he was ready to go and was not afraid to die.

Secretary Blaine has been deluged by telegrams of condolence and sorrow from prominent people in every part of the country, including one from Senator Conkling.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, called at the White House and informed the members of the Cabinet that Vice President Arthur had arrived in the city and was his guest, and would like to see the President if he could be permitted to do so. Senator Jones was told the physicians did not think it best to allow any one to see the President except the members of his family.

EX-SENATOR CONKLING.

NEW YORK, July 2.

Late in the evening, when Mr. Conkling had partially recovered from the awful news, he left his room and paced thoughtfully along the halls of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. "I hardly know what to say," he remarked to a party of gentlemen who met him. "I was prepared for almost anything rather than this. When I saw that dispatch in General Arthur's hands to-day I was almost stunned. I felt as if I could scarcely hold my breath. God grant it be not true. I cannot yet bring myself to believe it is as bad as was first reported. It is, if true, the most terrible scourge that has afflicted this country since the murder of Lincoln. All I have to say further, gentlemen, is [turning to go to his room and throwing up his hands] may Heaven help our country!"

MOMENTS OF ANXIETY.

WASHINGTON, July 4, 4:30 A. M.

The President is given up as beyond recovery. He is dying under the influence of opiates.

Mrs. Garfield has been with him almost all night, and is now prostrated with grief and exhaustion.

The President is suffering intense pain in the feet, which is considered a fatal symptom. The abdominal swelling was only slight, but peritonitis has set in, and his fever is rising. Powerful opiates are being administered and patient is barely conscious. Secretary Lincoln says "hope is dead." Dr. Bliss refuses to concede the worst.

HOPE REVIVES.

WASHINGTON, July 4, 8:15 A. M.

The general symptoms of the President are much better. He is conscious, and says if it was not for the pain in his feet he would feel as well as he ever did. Dr. Bliss is very hopeful that his patient will pull through.

ARTHUR UNDER GUARD.

WASHINGTON, July 5.

Gen. Arthur has received a number of letters warning him to take care of his personal safety, and he is constantly guarded by detectives.

FROM THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, July 5.

The Secretary of State has issued the following:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
July 4—11 p. m.

To the Press:

On behalf of President and Mrs. Garfield I desire to make public acknowledgment of the very numerous messages of condolence and affection which have been received since Saturday morning from almost every State in the Union. From the South as bountifully as from the North, and from countries beyond the seas, have come messages of anxious inquiry and tender words of sympathy in such numbers that it has been found impossible to answer them in detail. I therefore ask the newspapers to express for the President and Mrs. Garfield the deep gratitude which they feel for the devotion of their fellow-countrymen and friends abroad in this hour of heavy affliction.

JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

DECIDEDLY HOPEFUL.

WASHINGTON, July 6.

There is a constantly-growing hope in the ultimate recovery of President Garfield. His condition through yesterday and last night was such as to give great encouragement to his physicians and to increase the hopes of the people into confidence. He took nourishment at frequent intervals, and, contrary to the fears of the physicians, was able to retain and assimilate it, thus greatly increasing his strength. He slept about eight hours during the day, and that quietly, and woke up from his slumbers each time evidently much refreshed. The decrease in temperature and in his pulse leads to the belief that there is little to be apprehended from serious inflammation at present.

Mrs. Garfield is a constant watcher at the bedside of her suffering husband. Last night she had a good sleep. When she awoke this morning her first question was as to the condition of the President. When informed that he was better, she said: "I told you he would not die."

Dr. Frank H. Hamilton, of New York, who was summoned here for consultation, says there is much encouragement in the fact that the patient has passed the fourth day of his suffering without any very active symptoms of extended inflammation. He thinks the ball has not seriously injured any vital internal organ. The greatest danger is from peritonitis. The tenth rib was broken, and the bullet was evidently deflected away from the spinal column.

GUITEAU.

District Attorney Corkhill has made an examination of the assassin's pistol, or, rather, one of the cartridges. He found that they contained but very little powder, so that the ball had but very little force. The ball was considerably larger than the bore of the barrel. Being asked what has resulted from his investigation as to the motive of the crime, the District Attorney replied: "I have followed every clew, and I am convinced that the man tells the truth about the affair—that no one had the slightest information of what he intended to do. He seems to have made his plans with perfect secrecy, and to have taken no one into his confidence in the slightest degree, nor did he act in such a way as to arouse suspicion beforehand of any evil intention. He seems to have been regarded as a sort of innocent fellow as far as reported, bent on the perpetration of petty frauds as a sort of dead beat."

The prisoner was photographed in jail to-day. He was taken in eleven different positions.

It is reported that an organization of 600 negroes has been discovered banded together to take possession of the jail and kill Guiteau in case the President dies.

ANOTHER HIRED ASSASSIN.

A crazy man from Philadelphia has been caged here for threatening to shoot Secretary Blaine.

WASHINGTON, July 7.

The favorable indications for the recovery of the President continue this morning, he having passed a comfortable twenty-four hours.

The President suffers no pain to speak of, and is cheerful and confident. There has been no return of unfavorable symptoms.

WASHINGTON, July 8.

Some experiments with Guiteau's pistol gave surprising results. The fact that the first ball fired by the would-be assassin fell out of the President's coat-sleeve seems to have escaped public attention. The weapon proved to be a cheap affair with a terrible-looking cartridge. On several trials it was found that a board placed twelve feet away was only indented by the bullet, so small was the amount of powder contained in the cartridge. The fact is now recalled that, while at Mentor last fall, Gen. Garfield received a letter from the assassin, written upon the letter-head of a New York hotel, stating that he was about to marry an accomplished heiress and desired the Austrian mission.

"I think there is a good, substantial probability that the President will recover," said Dr. Bliss to Attorney General MacVeagh, and he went on to say that the treatment under which the President is handled is a preparation for dangers and accidents which are liable to occur, and that it will be weeks before the President is out of danger. He then mentioned the case of a soldier who was shot in the liver in July, and who was a well man in September. Dr. Bliss attended the soldier, and said when an abscess was formed he put a tube in and washed it out. He said that there was very little probability that peritonitis would set in, and that the chief dangers to be guarded against were secondary hemorrhage and blood poisoning. He feels great confidence that the President's vigorous constitution, strong vitality and calm courage will pull him through.

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE ASSASSIN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3.

Guiteau sent for District-Attorney Corkhill this afternoon, and asked for an interview. Col. Corkhill took a stenographer with him, and the interview lasted for three hours. The District Attorney refuses to give to the press the story told by the prisoner, but says that he made a very full statement, which he is now engaged in verifying. In answer to a suggestion made by Col. Corkhill that it was a horrible crime, of which he was guilty—so horrible that all having any connection with him in any way would be suspected of being implicated with him—Guiteau said: "If that was so, he would tell all." He then told all the incidents of his life in Washington, from his arrival here until the attempted assassination. He told where he lived, what he did from day to day, where he received his money, who lent it to him, whom he knows and associated with, and where he bought his pistol. He reiterated the statement contained in his published letter that his motive in shooting the President was to save the Republican party. He told how he had formed the plan and when, how long he had brooded upon it, and how it had become a fixed fact in his mind that the only salvation of the Republican party was the death of the President. He seems to have said very little about the defeat of his aspirations for office, and the District Attorney rejects the theory that he is insane. He has no delusion, and talks rationally and calmly about his crime, glorying in it, and evinces no symptoms of regret at its commission. On the contrary, he is as firmly convinced as ever that it was his duty to kill the President, and says that he shot him with precisely the same feeling that he would have shot a rebel had he been in the army. His talk on this subject is apparently that of a fanatic. The only regret that he expresses at all is that the President is not dead. He said that he learned with sorrow that he is growing better. This was early in the afternoon, and he based his remark on the talk he had heard among the officers of the jail, who had been expressing their pleasure at the favorable bulletins that were then issuing by Dr. Bliss. Guiteau scoffs at the idea that he is an ordinary criminal, and desired to save himself from punishment. On the contrary, he says that the happiest moment of his life since he matured his plan to kill the President he experienced when he was on his way to jail. The carriage that he hired to take him to the Congressional Cemetery was really intended to carry him to the jail, which adjoins the cemetery. He had the carriage ready and waiting for him, and had instructed the driver to hurry quickly as possible to the cemetery when he should jump in.

There is no one here who believes that the crime has any political significance whatever. The District Attorney says that Guiteau now talks very little of his stalwartism. At any rate, whether he does or not, there is a general feeling here that it is cruelly unjust to hold the stalwarts in any way responsible for the criminal vagaries of a man who is not absolutely crazy, but is a most deluded fanatic. No one, of course, thinks that Conkling or Arthur, or any other stalwart, had anything directly to do with the shooting of the President, but they or their friends here say that an effort is making to cast odium upon them by reason of the shooting.

GUITEAU'S RECORD.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

Guiteau is a man now 39 years of age. He was born in Freeport, Ill., where his father—the cashier of a bank for many years, but now dead—was a respected citizen. He studied in Ann Arbor, and went from there to the Oneida Community in New York. His father was a believer in the doctrines of the peculiar people of whom Mr. Noyes was the head, and the young man had read much in earlier days of the literature of the Community. His life there, however, was neither very long nor a very happy one. He was unwilling to work, and finally left the Community, demanding the return of the $700 which he had put into the common fund when he entered the Community there. This was at first refused him, and in 1869 he began a suit against the Community for the recovery of this money. Finally, with the aid of Mr. George Scoville, lawyer, who had married his sister, he succeeded in getting some of it back, and, after a very brief residence in New York, he came to this city, where he appeared in 1869 as a lawyer, officing at No. 60 La Salle street. The following year he moved his quarters to No. 104 Dearborn street, still professing to be a lawyer. At this period he got into trouble with the Young Men's Library, from which he was charged with stealing some books. He was prosecuted, but was acquitted, and afterwards brought suit against the association. Toward the close of 1870 he married a young lady in this city and moved with her to New York, where they lived unhappily for a few months, and she finally got a divorce from him on account of his cruelty and ill-treatment. He remained in New York until the latter part of 1874. During his residence there he got into difficulty on account of his cheating the hotels out of their board bills, was imprisoned in Ludlow street jail, and was released only by the exertions of his brother-in-law. In 1876 he was back in the city, officing at No. 176 Fifth avenue, and living for a time at the Clifton House. Failing to pay his bill at this hotel, as he had failed to pay it at so many others, he was summarily ejected. The following year he was over at No. 147 LaSalle street, and was making an effort to live at the Gault House, but was put out of there for his peculiarities. During this year he went to New York and again resumed the practice of the law there. Owing to his irregularities when intrusted with the collection of debts—for he collected his share first and then let his client do the rest of the collecting for himself—he was written up extensively by the New York Herald, his practices being commented on in very unfavorable terms. After this article he sued the paper for $100,000, and in October of that year returned to Chicago. In January, 1877, he broke out with his religious mania. He had conceived the idea that the second coming of Christ occurred at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, and that we were not living under the new dispensation. He tried to enforce these doctrines through lectures delivered in the city, and through pamphlets and books which he printed. In July of that year he was arrested on a charge of embezzlement—failing to turn over money which he had been employed to collect, and was sent to the county jail, but was released on the 28th of July, the grand jury failing to find an indictment against him. After that he again delivered his lectures at various points throughout the country, and in September, 1877, was over in Detroit, Mich. Here he tried to steal away without paying his board-bill, was arrested in the interior of the State, and, while being taken back to Detroit in the cars, jumped from the train and escaped. It was at first thought that he had been killed, but this, unfortunately, turned out to be an error. In 1879 he was back in the city, officing at No. 98 Randolph street, and employed as an insurance agent.

His dishonesty, however, drove him out of the business, and he spent his time from that period till the time of the murder in wandering around the country, seeking to deliver his lectures, turning up occasionally at his brother-in-law's house for the purpose of getting some clean clothes and a decent meal. During the national campaign last year he suddenly appeared in New York, at the headquarters of the National and State Committees. He had meddled in politics to some little extent here, and on this occasion transferred his activity to a broader sphere. He produced a printed speech which he said he had delivered at various points, and tried to get money and a position from the committee. After President Garfield's inauguration, he wandered to Washington in quest of a Consulship, his claim being the political services he had rendered during the campaign. He also bore with him a petition signed by one or two people of this city, who had put their names to the document simply in order to get rid of him, and without being aware of the rascally features in the man's character. He hung around there all through the spring months, but returned to this city in May, stayed a few days, and then, on the 1st of June, left again for Washington.

PUBLIC FEELING.

The daily press of the large cities print innumerable interviews with prominent men in all parts of the United States touching the great crime that has so startled the country. All classes, in all sections—North, South, East and West—are unanimous in expressions of horror and indignation at the dastardly deed. The act is generally looked upon as that of a crazy adventurer, an irresponsible vagabond. The news of the assassination created the wildest excitement all over the land, and the people everywhere were so stunned and shocked by the intelligence that for the time being business was wholly suspended, and nothing was thought of or talked of but the one absorbing theme. No occurrence in the history of the country, except the shooting of President Lincoln, has caused such a universal feeling of horror and indignation.

THE PRESIDENT'S TROUBLE.

WASHINGTON, July 8.

The only thing that seemed to trouble the President was why the man should have shot him. He was told that he was a crazy man who had expected to get an office and had failed. He replied that there was lots of people to whom he had not been able to give an office when they asked it, and he did not see why the man should have killed him on that account. He had never believed that he had a personal enemy, or at least one that would wish to take his life. The President has seemed ever since the shooting to have no other trouble on his mind. All through the day he kept up his courage, never losing hope of his ultimate recovery.

IS GUITEAU INSANE?

WASHINGTON, July 3.

The general opinion toward this assassin, Guiteau, among those who have known him is that he is not insane. Secretary Blaine recognized the man as soon as he saw him after the shots were fired.

Chief Clerk Brown says that he knows the man well, having met him at the Department several times. He scouts the idea of his insanity. "Guiteau," Mr. Brown says, "after filing his applications for the Austrian mission and the Consul Generalship at Paris, and failing to receive either, conceived a violent spite against the President and the Secretary of State. He regarded the latter as the prime cause of his failure to receive a foreign appointment, and some of the circumstances attending the shooting justify the belief that one ball was intended for Secretary Blaine.

Whether the man was insane or not, there can be no doubt that the crime was coolly planned and deliberately executed. Guiteau over two weeks ago visited the District jail to make an examination of it, and was denied admittance by the Warden. He saw that it was safe enough to defend him from the hands of an infuriated mob. Immediately after the shooting he expressed great anxiety to be taken to jail to escape the fury of the crowds. The letter he sent to Gen. Sherman, requested that officer to send troops to the jail, evidently for no other purpose than to defend him.

A prominent lawyer of the city said to-day: "Insanity does not contemplate the risk and cool plan to avoid it. Insanity is not capable of such accurate calculation of danger—for the danger of being mobbed for such an act is the chief one—and of so systematically planning to escape it. No, sir. That man is as sane as you or I, and he is legally responsible for his act. I tell you the law should be swift in this case. Should the President die, Guiteau should be indicted to-morrow, tried on Tuesday, and executed Wednesday."

A detachment of two companies of troops was sent to the jail last night as a guard. About half of them were placed in the building, and the remainder were encamped on the outside. There were no manifestations of violence made, and but few people visited the jail. Orders to withdraw the troops were accordingly issued to-day. When Guiteau was taken to his cell yesterday some one asked what the President did when he fired his first shot. Guiteau replied, "I will show you," and throwing up his right elbow with his hand hanging downward shook his head remarking: "That's the way he did, but the next shot cut him. When he was first struck he sort of turned and looked scared." Guiteau went to bed rather late last night, but slept soundly, and has eaten his meals regularly and with good appetite. He has frequently asked for news from the White House, and seems depressed when good news is received, and elated in spirits when the reports indicate a probability of the President's dying.

The Key to Health.

Have you found the key to perfect health and strength? It is Kidney-Wort, the only remedy that overcomes at once the inaction of the kidneys and bowels. It purifies the blood by cleansing the system of foul humors and by giving strength to the liver, kidneys and bowels to perform their regular functions. See displayed advertisement.

Educated Women.

Refined and educated women will sometimes suffer in silence for years from kidney disease, or constipation and piles, which could easily be cured by a package of Kidney-Wort. There is hardly a woman to be found that does not, at some times, suffer from some of the diseases for which this great remedy is a specific. It is put up in liquid and dry form, equally efficient.—[Springfield Union.

Night Blooming Cereus.

The following from the Wabash Plaindealer, will interest many of our readers: "Lovers of flowers have had an opportunity rarely met with this week to gratify their desire to see a night blooming cereus in bloom. Mr. Fowler, of the City green house, has two of these beautiful flowering plants, and on last Sunday he announced that one of them would bloom that evening. On last Wednesday evening another flower bloomed which was visited by even a larger crowd than on Sunday. The plant is of the cactus family, of the grandiflora species. The flower is of open tubular form, pure white; the outer petals standing erect, and of straw color, while the inner petals project, trumpet-shape—color, white; the stamen and pistil were of light yellow or lemon color. The diameter of the blossom was fully ten inches. The plant is a native of the tropical region and requires the utmost care to rear it.

* * *

A strange accident happened on the Wabash road nine miles west of the city of Wabash during the gale last Wednesday morning. The Ft. Wayne News says: "At the time the tornado of the early morning was at the highest, the first section of freight train No. 21, Richardson conductor, was bowling along at its usual rate, when the engineer noticed his engine shoot suddenly ahead at a high rate of speed. Turning his head he found, to his utter astonishment, that the entire train of twenty-nine cars, but three of which were loaded, had been blown off the track and nineteen of them had been lifted clear off the trucks and were at that moment engaged in arranging themselves in the ditch alongside the track. Conductor Richardson telegraphed this morning that nobody was hurt by this remarkable accident, and, after a delay of but three hours, trains ran again as usual. We doubt if the circumstance has a precedent in the history of railroading."

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelry trade, possessing as it does so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only Stiffened Case made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Albright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

The Missing Link.

[Boston Commercial Bulletin.]

He roamed the forest free,
  With a proud untrammelled air,
He built a nest on the palm tree's crest,
  And dwelt a master there.
The monarch of the earth,
  The lord of wood and plain,
The lion fled when his angry tread
  Shook the earth with proud disdain.

He dined on elephant, did
  This cy-no-ceph-a-lus,
And rhinoceros, and the river horse
  And the hip-po-pot-am-us.
Brawny of limb was he,
  Yet supple and agile,
On rock or tree his arms were free,
  For his toes were prehensile.

Yet doth the monarch sigh
  As he paces up and down;
And soliloquise with downcast eyes
  And highly regal frown.
Sad is the royal heart,
  Wounded the royal pride,
For the lords of state say the king shall mate
  With a Nshiego Mbouve bride.

"What! marry a subject! I
  Espouse a chimpanzee!
No, I'm not a Guelph if I know myself,
  No mesalliance for me!
Perish my royal blood,
  Perish the princely line,
Ere I desecrate with a vulgar mate,
  This lineage of mine."

The monarch paused, transfixed,
  Vanished his growing wrath,
And a bright surprise beamed in his eyes
  As he gazed down the forest path.
A vision of beauty, such
  As by Simian eye, before
Had never been seen in the woodland green,
  Or been known to Simian lore.

A maiden young and fair
  As the charcoal's ebon tint,
With teeth as white as cowries bright
  From the Royal Congo mint.
Her locks of a crispy curl,
  Her feet of a mammoth size,
All made her seem a bewitching dream
  To the fond gorilla's eyes.

To a high o'er-arching limb
  He swung by his sinewy arms,
And dangling there, 'twixt earth and air,
  Gazed on her dusty charms.
"Now, by my kingly troth,
  This maid shall be, I think,
My royal bride, and supply beside
  Mr. Darwin's missing link."

The thoughtless ebon maid,
  Suspicionless of guile,
To the tree trunk strayed and beneath its shade,
  Tarried in thought awhile.
Then the monarch spake his love
  (As he swung by the lofty limb,
He was gifted, they say, with a taking way,
  For the lady smiled on him.

He puts her curly locks,
  With his great prehensile toes
Entwined in her wool—a vigorous pull—
  A shriek—and up she goes!
Thus was the monarch wed,
  And thus the race began,
Whence, through various links, somewhat strange, methinks
Came the "Descent of Man!"

A Miner's Romance.

GIVING UP THE GIRL HE LOVED TO A RICH CHUM AND WINNING HER AT LAST.

At Amherst college, in the class of '53, there were two chums, who had stuck together ever since they had first entered college. They were fast friends and no trouble had ever disturbed their friendship. One was the son of rich parents and the other of a country minister. When they graduated the rich man's son went into business with his father in New York and took his friend with him as an employe. Things went smoothly for some time, when that common accident of life happed. They both fell in love with the same girl. The fight at the heart of the employe was long and bitter, but, contrasting his position with that of his friend, the difference in the advantages he could offer the woman, he yielded, and with scarce a word of parting, with none of explanation, he left New York and went west. A year afterward found him in San Francisco, and he soon joined the gold-diggers. His fortune varied, at times rich, at times poor; afterward in Nevada he followed silver-mining, and when the silver craze struck Leadville he went there. There he was successful, and this spring, a rich man, he determined to return east for the first time in twenty-four years. Friday, as he got off the southwestern train at Wilton, Iowa, and went to get on the main line train which was to carry him to Chicago, a lady who was trying to turn a seat attracted his attention. Stepping forward to help her, he first looked with wonder, then joy, to see that it was the woman he had run away from so long ago, a woman now past forty, but handsome yet. He talked to her timidly at first, and uncertain. When he learned that she was yet unmarried, his questions came faster yet, and her present condition was soon known to him. Her parents had died, and, depending on her own exertions for support, she had taught school, and at present was principal of a school in western Iowa. The old love still lived in the miner's heart, and he soon found that he had not been entirely forgotten by her. To make a long story short, it was a happy looking couple that got off the train at Chicago that night, looking for a minister, and a still happier one which registered at the Sherman as Mr. and Mrs.——, Leadville, Colorado.

Correspondence.

SAN JOSE, CAL., July 10, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: As several friends requested me to write them my impressions of the regions of country which I visit, it has occurred to me to make your paper the medium of communication, thus saving much pen scratching for me.

Twenty-six hours ride from Auburn, through a delightful and fertile scope of country brought us to Kansas City. Arrived, it seemed to me we found ourselves in the busiest depot in the world. People of various races, colors and conditions jostled each other almost rudely, in their eager haste to determine about their particular train. All was excitement, bustle and confusion in this mass of strangers, thus thrown together for the time, but the greatest order and method prevail in the depot and train appointments. Here are worried mothers with many burdens, a whole flock of children, and restless babies crying in arms, trying to make their journey without the aid of husbands and fathers. You marvel at their courageous undertaking till you remember their ignorance and know that they stepped blindly from their obscure homes and unexpectly find themselves in this surging mælstrom of active restless life. Some of these have never looked upon a map, and could not understand its meaning if they did. They only have a sort of confused idea that they are "going west." One woman handed me a paper with the name of town, county and state written as her destination. Could I tell her the train and its time of leaving? I made necessary inquiries and explained to her satisfaction I thought, and hoped she would rest until the dispatcher called her train. But no; in a few minutes I heard her plying her inquiries of another, and he gave her very different directions. Then I told her to leave baby in my care and ask the ticket agent in the ticket office I pointed her to, and he would give her correct instructions, as it was his business to guide travelers aright. Suspiciously she deposited his crossness in my lap, though he seemed diverted by change of nurses, and very familiarly seized my chain with his dirty fingers, and showed plainly that he had intentions of tasting my locket. The bewildered mother stepped back after advancing a little way toward the ticket office to re-assure herself that mine was an honest, matronly-looking face, with no sign that I could make a Charley Ross case of kidnapping her precious baby; and I felt that all the reward offered for the recovery of that stolen boy would scarcely tempt me to hold this restless little crier an hour. She came after getting information from the agent and sat down with baby in a sort of satisfied way that quite put me at rest concerning her, till in a very short time I heard her ask a gentleman passing near her, if he knew what train she ought to take to go to the place named on her slip of paper. At length the dispatcher gave the expected call, and she understood sufficiently to waken her sleeping brood, and, after loading each one with bundles, disappeared out of the depot, and I trust, reached her destination in safety.

Twelve hours we waited over to take a good look at this famed city of Missouri, new and of such rapid growth. She, as a city, reminds me of a young Miss donning a train while she plays baby-house on the wood-pile. This trying to be citified with horse-cars, waterworks, prospective parks and avenue drive where nature seems to have had her attention suddenly called to some distant duty, leaving this portion of her work in unfinished confusion; the face of the country so rough, rolling and broken, abrupt hillsides with narrow ravines at their base, no farmer would ever think of choosing this place for a possible, tillable farm. And yet our restless, adventurous men who go west seem pleased to find such adverse natural conditions where to found a city, so that their effervescing ebullition of energy, courage and spirit will be utilized in showing the triumph of active genius in supplementing nature's unfinished chaos by guiding her into lines of beauty, not only making the "desert to blossom as the rose," but bending the hilltops in a long obeisance to the valley, resulting in a plane which industry covers with large business houses, rife with the thrift of trade, beautiful dwellings and cottages for the laborers. We took horse-cars from the depot and were hauled up, up, a very decided grade into the city. We stepped to the sidewalk and made observations quite to the risk of shins, noses, etc. As we follow the walk up hill and down, sometimes simply an inclined plane, again by one or two stair-steps, but on the whole, a good deal more up, till we reach the business parlors of the Domestic sewing-machine, 1137 Main street, where we called for its popular W. W. Egnew, an old schoolmate, and found he was confined to his bed with typho-malarial fever. His son, a young man, very kindly went with us to his home where we enjoyed the kindest hospitality for four or five hours, talking over events of the past and comparing notes till the present. His place seemed very homelike, and although there was quite a variety of small fruits growing on the lot, and the vegetables in the garden were far in advance of Auburn, one of the most attractive features to me was a grape arbor extending nearly the whole length of the lot, the vines loaded with green fruit. As the heat of the day lessened, the son drove with us in their carriage to the best points of observation, giving us a better practical knowledge of the city. Unfortunately for my shopping proclivities, we drove too late for me to see much of the inside of their large stores, which close promptly at six o'clock. From the little I was able to gather, I conclude goods are sold about as in Fort Wayne, only they carry larger stocks, consequently a greater variety to select from. While looking up a desirable location for a home, I had had a great desire to see Kansas City for myself, and now I feel that I have no desire to pitch my tent here, for it is very warm in summer and disagreeably cold with winds in winter, and although the people have comparatively little ague, they suffer much with typho-malarial fevers. I admire the energy and pluck of the citizens, but would rather not make one of their number. Taking a sleeper at nine o'clock Tuesday night from Kansas City, we slept warmly with the monotonous buzz and clang of the car-wheels for a lullaby. As the sun smiled his morning welcome, we gazed forth on the unbroken stretch of fertile plane, here and there a farm-house with its cosy dot of trees, and in my heart I said, "beautiful, beautiful Kansas. I wonder not that poetic pen has sung thy praises, and many an anxious home-seeker been lured to thy flowery bosom. But ye cannot charm me again with thy syren enchantments, for I know of thy rocks of destruction, and shrink from being swept away by thy whirlwinds and cyclones, or eaten by grasshoppers, or scorched by drought. In thy present year of prosperity and bounteous crops I admire without embracing, and treasure thy image in my heart."

Wednesday at nine o'clock we reached Hutchinson, Reno county, Kansas. We were glad to leave the train, but scarcely had I stepped on terra firma when I was made to realize that this was really Kansas. The wind came sweeping by and I seized my hat and clung to my umbrella with a tenacious life clinch. I would hold my breath till the "zephyr" lulled. I would just stand firm till there was a calm. I waited a small age, and still swept by the waves of air, and I heard the distant call of my companion, accompanied with a laugh: "What are you doing standing there? Don't you know you have reached Kansas?" So, with a firm effort, I took in sail by closing my sun umbrella, and prepared myself to face the enemy. A short walk brought us to Brother Marshall Hale's residence, inclosed by a fence which seemed a luxury indulged in by only a few of the inhabitants of this prairie town, causing the many to have the appearance of having dropped down here in some of the whirlwinds to stop just a little while till the next cyclone gives them another "histe." It does seem to me to be so uncivilized to have no fence marking the limits of one's possessions, but I suppose it is because I am selfish, or, putting it more mildly, so individualized that I like to know my own things. Here we found many shade-trees and fruit-bearing trees, and shrubs, which made the homes seem very pleasant; garden sauce in luxuriant abundance in early June, such as we get in July or early August. Whenever the elements and the grasshoppers give vegetation a chance, the growth is marvelously rapid. But it is only by the greatest energy and perseverance, and a pluck that realizes no defeat, a will that works hopefully in the trail o merciless destruction, setting trees again and again, that these have gained their present size and permanency. Yes, the wind is as constant as the sunshine in Kansas, and the inhabitants are as grateful for the former as the latter. "We could not live without this south breeze," they often say, and I think it is true, for when it seems very warm in the house, you can walk right out in the noonday sun with little inconvenience, and it is long since I have experienced such easy elasticity of step moving me over the earth. But I tell you, this active air makes sad havoc with frizzes and curls, and it browns the soft cheeks of the babies, darkens the naturally fair complexions of the little girls, and distributes numerous freckle specks on otherwise pretty faces. Here in Hutchinson I saw a very pleasant way of housekeeping I think, that is, when the presiding genius has some strength, but not enough for all duties, a way to dispense with hired girls, and we know that in Auburn there are very few who aspire to this useful position. Some reluctantly consent to come into our kitchens because of the kindness of their hearts, relieving for a little while the suffering mistress from some of the drudgery duties of housekeeping, but both the server and the served wish for an easier mode of life. The cooking here is done on an oil-stove at much less expense than over a wood fire, and much less heat and inconvenience to the operator. Washing, ironing and baking are done at some woman's home, who is glad thus to earn a reward which is not greater than one can easily afford to pay, yet fair remuneration to workers. A woman comes in for from ten to fifteen cents per hour, and she cleans or does any extra work you desire. Some in Auburn use the oil-stove I know, so this is nothing new to them, but I was surprised to see meat, three kinds of vegetables and pudding for dessert, nicely cooked and hot for the table, from this diminutive stove, and yet I was told that its possibilities were not exhausted. I presume there are workers in Auburn who would be glad to earn an additional penny by working a few hours in a family now and then, or engaging to do the baking for a few families whom they wash for, making the same fire that boils the clothes and heats the sadirons bake the bread and may be the cake. This would accommodate those who do not patronize the baker because they like home-made bread better. Six days we staid in Hutchinson, and in all that time I did not learn to like the wind. The constant motion of air depressed me, sending an ache through each successive fibre and remotest nerve. Kansas people think our Indiana summer nights quite wilting, while their nights are so cool, so conducive to restful sleep that they feel energetic in the early mornings; but I arose from my whole night's slumber unrefreshed, and think this climate enervating. Twelve hour's ride from Hutchinson through the severest wind for a constant blow that I ever experienced, quite taking away my strength, and so nearly prostrating me that I was obliged to lie down in a passenger coach the best I could, the sleeper being too full to admit another one, and we bade adieu to Kansas with her many and variously bright-hued wild flowers which are scattered with a prodigal generosity all over her prairies, her unclouded sunshine and her ceaseless air currents.

Spencerville Notes.

[Last Week.]

—Miss Minnie Nichols has returned.

—Dan. Herrick helped his father harvest last week.

—Mrs. Dr. Emanuel of Cecil, Ohio, returned to her home Monday.

—Mr. [illegible] Sanders returned to his home in Michigan last Monday.

—Millinery goods, ruchings, etc., etc., closing out cheap, at Miss McKay's.

—Rev. Frank Sanders, of Dayton, O., preached at the Lutheran church last Sunday evening.

—Again death has come into our midst. Last Thursday, at noon, Mrs. Susan Kinsey was called away. She has been a great sufferer, and now she is at rest. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss—one son and four daughters. Her life was that of a constant Christian, a good neighbor and kind friend. Mrs. Kinsey was born in the Canton of Bern, Switzerland, April 18, 1821, being at the time of her death 60 years, 3 months and 9 days.

KIDNEY-WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES! WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Stork, of Junction City, Kansas, says, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular Physicians had been trying for four years.

Mrs. John Arnall, of Washington, Ohio, says her boy was given up to die by four prominent physicians and that he was afterwards cured by Kidney-Wort.

M. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was not expected to live, being bloated beyond belief, but Kidney-Wort cured him.

Anna L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says that seven years suffering from kidney troubles and other complications was ended by the use of Kidney-Wort.

John B. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years from liver and kidney troubles and after taking "barrels of other medicines," Kidney-Wort made him well.

Michael Coto of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with kidney difficulty and was unable to work. Kidney-Wort made him "well as ever."

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES
KIDNEY DISEASES,
LIVER COMPLAINTS,

FARMER JOHN.

BY ELLEN P. ALLERTON.

"If I'd nothing to do," said Farmer John,
"To fret or to bother me—
Were I but rid of this mountain of work,
What a good man I could be!

"The pigs get out, and the cows get in,
Where they have no right to be;
And the weeds in the garden and in the corn—
Why, they fairly frighten me.

"It worries me out of temper quite,
And well nigh out of my head.
What a curse it is that a man must toil
Like this for his daily bread!"

But Farmer John he broke his leg,
And was kept for many a week
A helpless and an idle man—
Was he therefore mild and meek?

Nay; what with the pain, and what with the fret
Of sitting with nothing to do—
And the farm-work botched by a shiftless hand,
He got very cross and blue.

He scolded the children and cuffed the dog
That fawned about his knee;
And snarled at his wife, though she was kind
And patient as wife could be.

He grumbled, and whined, and fretted, and fumed
The whole of the long day through.
"'Twill ruin me quite," cried Farmer John,
"To sit here with nothing to do!"

His hurt got well, and he went to work,
And a busier man than he,
A happier man, or a pleasanter man,
You never would wish to see.

The pigs got out, and he drove them back,
Whistling right merrily;
He mended the fence, and kept the cows
Just where they ought to be.

Weeding the garden was jolly fun,
And ditto hoeing the corn.
"I'm happier far," said Farmer John,
"Than I've been since I was born."

He learned a lesson that lasts him well—
'Twill last him his whole life through.
He frets but seldom, and never because
He has plenty of work to do.

"I tell you what," says Farmer John,
"They are either knaves or fools
Who long to be idle—for idle hands
Are the Devil's chosen tools."

ENGAGED TO BOTH;

OR,

How the Tangle Was Straightened.

Dick Powers dropped his letter with a groan. It fell by the side of its long, slim envelope on the table. The envelope bore upon its back the faint impression of a dove holding in its bill a floating ribbon, upon the ends of which was written, in a quaint, but fine little hand, the direction, "To Mr. Richard Powers."

Again the young man groaned, throwing his arms on the table and hiding his distressed face in his sleeve.

The other occupant of the room sat with his heels on the window-sill and his chair tilted back at a fearful angle. He smoked, raised his eyebrows, looked at his miserable companion, and went on smoking.

The letter, half folding upon its precise and lady-like creases, lay face upward, and the lines betrayed the same quaintly girlish handwriting, all the down strokes primly shaded, each capital fancily twirled. "Dear Richard," it began, Quakerishly, and it said, tearfully, "I haven't heard from you for so long." There was a touch of tenderness in every sentence, and a something that told how simple the writer must have been. Somehow it all gave rise to a picture of a sun-bonnet and a calico dress, a pair of timidly affectionate eyes, and a peaked chin with a dimple in it. On the next page the letter went on plaintively: "Grandpa isn't very well since he had that sickness last winter, and when he coughs so it shakes him all over. And oh! Richard, I'm afraid he is never going to be well again. Wouldn't it be dreadful to have him die and me alone without you?" Then followed a wealth of confidence in the words: "But, if grandpa should die, I should come straight to you, and oh, how happy we would be then, wouldn't we?" Wandering on in this loving strain till the end of the third page, the letter closed with: "Affectionately, your own Marthy."

By-and-by the young man in the tilted chair, eying his friend meditatively, said:

"Your letter don't seem to make you happy, somehow, Dick."

"Oh, Al! if you could only know what a villain I am!" was the rejoinder in a muffled tone from the folds of his sleeve.

At this one eyebrow went up and one came down. "Well, it's very likely." He looked lazily through the window at a group of loungers before the hotel opposite, and then continued indifferently: "What's it all about, anyhow?"

"Just read that!" was the reply, as Dick passed "affectionately your own Marthy's" letter toward him.

Fisher read the letter through carefully. "I should say this was a very sweet little girl," he remarked, musingly.

"So she is, so she is!" said Dick, straightening up. "She's just the sweetest and most confiding little thing in the world, is Martha. That's what hurt me so. She hasn't a doubt that I'm as true blue, because she's truth all the way through herself. And I'm worse than a brute, I am, Al."

"If the state of affairs which now dawns upon me dimly is as it seems, I rather think you are, myself."

"Confound it! You're so hanged cool it riles me," said Dick, blushing. "Just imagine yourself in my place for an instant. Six years ago, when I was 19, I first fell in love, and I've been doing it ever since with decent intervals between. Little Marthy was 15, a little wild rose, Vermont girl, just as shy, and as sweet and unsophisticated as that letter, and all her other letters seem to say she is, yet I feel like a boy of 19 in love with her again, to talk about it to you. Like the great calf that I was, with a dollar in my pocket, and no prospects ahead of me, I up and told her how I felt one day in the spring, when the grass was so green and the birds were singing so loud—I had to tell something to somebody. She looked up at me for a moment with such a smile full of tears coming into her eyes, and such a milk-and-rose blush glowing upon her cheeks, and I just took her right up in my arms then and kissed her as I'd been longing to do ever since I first met her, six weeks before. Ever since that she has considered herself engaged to me."

"A precocious youngster you were at 19, I must say, and a ripe acquaintance it must have been that rooted, blossomed and fruited in six weeks."

"Well, make fun as you please," answered Dick, gloomily; "you have the whole story, anyhow, and you can't think worse of me than I do of myself."

"No, Dick, I haven't by any means all the story yet. As you're 25, I suppose this little girl, now 21, has been for six years hoping and trusting in you. Very likely she's never permitted herself another lover. Why, it's pathetic! Every year she has thought, maybe, you would come back; she has never had a suspicion of you; she has dreamed about you and prayed for you. It's a burning shame! And look at you, violently attached to every pretty girl you see, riding with them, two at a time, dancing with them, making love to them and dressing like a dandy when you ought to be in the Green mountains, wearing butternut and carrying Marthy's milk-pail."

Dick groaned in anguish of spirit. "And I've always told her I couldn't afford to come after her quite yet. Give it to me, you can't hit too hard; but, oh! do help me out of this scrape."

"Help you out? Well, I should think you'd be glad to be in it. Just to think of that little Vermont blossom, tasting like cream and maple sugar, I'll warrant, if blossoms ever do taste; just think of her dropping down any minute among all the furbelows, the frizzes, the paints and the powders of the ladies in our set!"

"Oh, Lord! Al, don't harrow up a fellow so. I don't believe you imagine yet how deep I'm in for it. There's Kate Richardson, now, when you talk about flowers; she's a tiger lily; she's a red cactus; she's a tea rose; she's magnificent; she's gorgeous; she's radiant. Ah, Al Fisher, can't you see how I love her?"

"And she?"—the question was like a flame springing from a bed of coals.

"Well, I just thought I never was so in love in my life. I wasn't sure about her; but one night a month ago I was carried away. I forgot all about Marthy, and I asked her to marry me. By George! she said she would, and I should have been too happy altogether if, after my first transport, little Marthy hadn't occurred to me again. Now I'm engaged to both of them, don't you see, and it's a deuce of a mess. I wouldn't give up Kate if I could, and I don't see how I could give up Marthy if I would."

A silence fell between the two then, in which the falling of a cigar ash might have echoed, and the twilight, stealing down, came like a veil over silence.

* * * * * * *

It was fully six months later when Kate Richardson walked into a sleeping-car at Omaha, followed by baggage and a porter. Her step was so quick and confident, her accoutrements were so appropriate, and the porter followed her with so deferential an air, that the passengers, making themselves comfortable on either side the aisle, looked after her with great respect for her style. "Very common sort of people; shan't make the acquaintance of any of them," Miss Richardson thought as she observed them in a glance without seeming to. She paused near the middle of the car.

"Put my things here," she said to the porter. "I have the whole section, and you may pile them all on the front seat."

She sat down upon the back seat and spread her skirts comfortably, took out her silk handkerchief and wiped her lips, sighed as enduring a penance, smoothed the collar of her ulster, and thought what a bore crossing the continent was. The prominent setting of a ring visible under her glove made one forefinger noticeable, and it might have been tenderness or not, but she placed her elbow on the arm of the seat and rested her lips upon it.

In the meantime the car was rapidly filling. There was much talk between passengers and porter, and from her square of window she could see piles of trunks being carted forward. By and by the cars gave a little shake and quiver, as if rousing; then a jerk, a dizzy, gliding motion, and then Miss Richardson became conscious that some one spoke to her. It was a voice that was apology itself as it said: "Oh, if you please, ma'am, it's a mistake, and I've made so many mistakes;" and it was almost a cry for help. It had color in its cheeks and its lips, a little, little mouth, and a shy light in its hazel eyes. It carried a portmanteau, and the porter towered over all with a patronizing air.

Miss Richardson was disturbed. "But, porter," said she, "I had engaged the whole of this section. I don't want any one in with me; I shall have no place for my things."

The hazel eyes were turned piteously upon her, but the voice was tinged with a bit of dignity, albeit touched with tears, as it answered: "Never mind; perhaps there's another half section unoccupied."

"They ain't no other, 'thout it's a gentleman's in the lower berth, if you don't mind that, miss," said the porter.

The distressed face was a picture.

"Oh, very well," Miss Richardson interposed, in a bored tone; "I suppose I shall be able to manage, and I dare say we shall be comfortable enough."

The portmanteau was placed as snug neighbor to the stylish traps in the front seat, and the little woman made herself quite small in the corner furthest from her grand companion, never so much as attempting to steal a glance from the window monopolized by Miss Richardson's elbow. But presently she leaned toward Miss Richardson and touched her shoulder softly. "I'm very much obliged to you," said she, gratefully, "and I'm sure I shan't incommode you any more than I can help."

Miss Richardson made her a gracious reply, and became interested in her book.

At length she yawned, and closed it. The afternoon was passing. The scene was rich in billowy green and stretching plain, and across the green level the day was mellowing away to its close, the sunlight falling upon it like winnowing grain. Miss Richardson felt the timid and confiding little touch again upon her arm, and turned to meet with her handsome eyes the wistful, appealing ones looking toward her.

"Would you let me go into the dining-room to dinner with you?" asked the flute voice with a tremble of apprehension in it.

"Oh, yes," said Miss Richardson, smiling, "I'd just as lief you would as not."

"Oh! thank you so much," was the reply, after a breath of relief. "I should never have courage to go in and sat alone. The waiters are in such a hurry, and I don't know where to sit, and I never can find my own car when I'm ready to come back."

So it was that Miss Richardson came to have a charge, and, somehow, so much clinging timidity opposed to her own independence seemed a sort of bond. Before the second day was out she had given her dainty and pretty companion a petting tap or two, short and contented laughter rippled up between them, confidential undertones of talk passed from one to the other, and finally Miss Richardson leaned forward and said:

"I haven't any idea what your name is. I think it ought to be Posy, though."

And then the small woman laughed as she answered: "It isn't, though, it's Marthy—Marthy Fairchild."

And then the magnificent gorgeous, radiant Kate replied, just as she would have caressed a bird: "Ah! and I shall call you Marthy, then—shall I not?"

Not one dim thought of warning had she, not a single swift feeling of recoil, not an idea that she was hugging to her heart a rival—she who held sway among men with waltz, and tete-a-tete, and repartee.

But under the feet of those who tread volcanoes the ground will sometimes break; one cannot forever safely walk the edge of the precipice; thin ice will part.

They were sitting side by side, as usual, one evening; the window framed a calm, mild star. Sitting so silently, how strange if they had known each was saying over and over the same name. The star was shining kindly—shining and twinkling like an eye mildly shrewd, and then it gave place to another and another, till the night sky seemed shaken full with a lustered dust. Presently Miss Richardson began to hum a little, in her soft contralto, and Marthy's bird-like soprano took it up like a carol, under a breath. The men under the dull lamp in the further end of the car held their fingers on their cards for a moment, and the fretful baby ceased its crying. Two women hushed gossiping, and stared, and, under pretense of a flare, the passing porter turned down the flame in a lamp while he stopped to listen.

"Marthy," said Miss Richardson, very gently, "where did you learn that? It's such an old-fashioned, sentimental thing. I shouldn't wonder if it had been a love-song in 1776."

"Oh, yes; I shouldn't wonder if it had. I learned it way back in Vermont—oh, how far away that seems now! I used to sing it with Richard—but that seems only yesterday, though it has been years and years. I've never told you about Richard, have I? His name is Powers, and it is he that I'm coming to California to meet. A long, long time ago, when I was such a little girl I scarcely remember it, some kind of sickness broke out, and mother and father took it and died. I can just see mother lying with a white flower in her hand as they closed the coffin lid, and then in a day or two some woman said she wondered what was to be done with me. Somehow or other I got to grandpa's in among the hills, and the cows that gave me a living. Grandpa was just my mother to me over again, and there I stayed and was so happy with him. I have always been a little girl, and I never shall be anything else. When I am an old woman it seems as though I shall still be a little girl. How it all came about I never could imagine, but it was just as the flowers came up in the spring, and as the fruit gets ripe in the fall. Grandpa said one morning he should have a young man come to help me with the milking, and before night I knew Richard; and, somehow, I think I must have been ripening ready to know him, for my heart was all open to him from the first. He came up to me when it was twilight, and said he, 'Good evening, Marthy,' and then I seemed to fall into a flutter, and to feel that he seemed to know it. Oh! I never can tell you how Richard seemed to me. Every night, after that, as I went along the meadow path he came and said, 'Good evening, Marthy'—just so; and I took to listening so hard for his coming that my heart hurt me, and beat in my lips and cheeks, and all the time grandpa never knew. One day the sky was so blue and the air was so sweet I was certain that something was going to happen, and whether it was the birds singing or my heart beating out a rhythm I do not know, but in a moment I seemed to be standing among the flowers, for Richard had taken me in his arms.

"Oh, life had just begun to me then, and not one day since, not even the day grandpa died, has been all sorrow; though dark days there have been, too, for in a few weeks more my Richard went away, so that by and by he could marry his 'bud of a girl'—that's what he always called me! Oh, how tender and true he is! What a grand place his heart is to live in! What a little queen he has crowned me! His letters have been so loving and so sweet that one never came without carrying me through the space of heaven; and they were such sorry little ones I could write in answer. So many noble women must have loved him. But he has loved his little Marthy all the time. Ah, Miss Richardson," and her earnest, reverent tone deepened in its half whisper, "can you imagine anything at all about what I tell you?"

"No," replied Miss Richardson, bitterly, "for there is no romance, not one grain of it, in my life. The romance I had was spoiled just a short time ago. Keep your faith in your Richard, Marthy, but I have none left for man. You must go on now and let me know the rest."

"I would rather die than lose my faith in Richard," said Marthy, tremulously. "There is such a little more to tell," she went on then; "all the time his letters told me he could not afford to come; he was waiting in hopes, and, oh, if the time was to him as to me, then to both it was a dreary, dreary waiting. And grandpa began to fret; he wanted to see me married before he died. But one day, a month ago, he died, and left me alone with the cows. Then, to show Richard how much I yet loved him, and how little I cared whether he was rich or whether he was poor, I wrote him a glad letter, that I was coming to him at last. And, oh, I am coming to him soon, soon. When I reach the end of my journey, there he will be to take me home—his home. I can almost see him now, so glad to find me again."

She was moving restlessly about like the wind, and her hands were winding their fingers about each other, her eyes shining, and her chin with its cleft pointing into a ray of the moon.

"I think I know your Richard," said Miss Richardson, by-and-by. "He is a tall, handsome man with blonde eyes and hair, and a pleasant, bright way with him. You know I live in Sacramento, too."

In a few minutes the porter came along again, and Miss Richardson gave orders to have only the lower berth made, "for we will sleep together tonight, Marthy," she said, quietly.

So all the night long she lay awake, with her arms around little Marthy. All the night long, thinking and thinking, she lay with the sweet breath of the trusting child woman falling on her left hand—the hand was now shorn of its sparkling ring.

"I loved him, too," she cried to herself, suddenly, and then her arm tightened upon the child-heart beating under it, and the throb ran through her like an appeal for mercy. The cars tramped into and through the night, and by-and-by the morning came, as fair and fresh as though Kate Richardson had not made a sacrifice the night before.

When the train pulled into the depot at Sacramento, Miss Richardson espied Dick Powers waiting, and by his side was Al Fisher. He was haggard and in distress; he was thin, and had grown five years older than when she had left him two months before. He saw her, too, and ran along by the window grasping the hand she held out to him.

"Oh, Kate! Kate!" he pleaded, imploringly.

She went to the door to meet him, and drew him along the aisle. "Dick, here is Marthy," said she.

He looked at the wild rose blooming so sweetly for him, and, as he saw the hazel eyes brimming up with drops, the falling corners of the shy mouth quivering, the old, sweet beauty grew upon him again, and a hungry smile dawned in his eyes.

"Oh, Marthy! little Marthy!" he murmured.

"At last, dear Richard, at last!" she cried, and he gathered her in his arms.

Al Fisher took Miss Richardson home, and she was gravely polite and smiling all the way. But it was two years before she allowed him to draw the last drop of bitterness out of her heart; and, even then, she gave the last kiss before her marriage to Baby Marthy.

Powers never would think of calling her any name beside Kate Richardson.—Belgravia Magazine.

The Chameleon.

The chameleon has been an object of curiosity the world over on account of its power to change its color, but its power to change its form is not less remarkable. Sometimes it assumes the form of a disconsolate mouse sitting mum in a corner; again, with back curved and tail erect, it resembles a crouching lion, which no doubt gave origin to its name chamal-leon, or ground lion. By inflating its sides it flattens its belly, and, viewed from below, takes the form of an ovate leaf. The tail is the petiole, while the white, serrated line, which runs from nose to tip of tail over the belly, becomes the midrib. Still again throwing out the air, it draws in its sides, and at the same time expands itself upward and downward till it becomes as thin as a knife, and then, viewed from the side, it has the form of an ovate leaf without a midrib, but with the serrated line of the belly and the serrated back becoming the serrated edges of a leaf. When thus expanded it also has the extraordinary power to sway itself over so as to present an edge to an observer, thus greatly adding to its means of concealment. I have studied the changes of color with much interest. In its normal state of rest it is of a light pea green, at times blending with yellow. The least excitement, as in handling, causes a change. The ground-work remains the same, but transverse stripes appear running across the back and nearly encircling the body in a full-grown animal, numbering about thirty, and extending from head to tip of tail. These stripes occupy about the same amount of space as the ground-work and are most susceptible of change of color. At first they become deeply green, and, if the excitement continues, gradually change to black. When placed upon a tree the ground-work becomes a deep green and the stripes a deeper green or black, and so long as they remain on the trees the color does not change. The prevailing idea that they take on the peculiar hue of the foliage among which they happen to be, is, I think, erroneous. We have placed them on the scarlet leaves of the dracæna and among the red flowers of the acacia with no change from the prevailing green.

Unlucky People.

A genuinely unlucky man will entail as much misery upon those who are dependent upon or associated with him as a genuinely wicked one. They can never be relied upon. Their speculations turn out ill when those of stupider men succeed. Their inventions are just a little anticipated by those they never heard of. Their books or plays do not become popular. Their crops are sure to be injured by the floods or the tornadoes; their vessels to be wrecked or burned; their houses consumed within the twenty-four hours after the insurance policy had expired, or the day before they had resolved to take one out. Judges are sure to rule adversely to their interests; juries always bring in verdicts against them. Their letters are certain to go astray; their baggage or express packages to be lost or stolen. It is they who are always looking for their missing knives, and are constantly wondering where their hats and umbrellas have gone to. The money they put into their pocket-books, or the pocket-books they put into their pockets, mysteriously disappear. Even when they desire to be prudent, and, with considerable sacrifice and pains, buy their potatoes, their coal and other stores in advance at reduced rates, the prices of the succeeding winter invariably fall below what they have paid. They are to be dreaded as Jonah was dreaded. The boughs of trees they climb always break; the boats they row or sail always capsize. The train they take is by no means to be expected at its terminus on time, and, even if late, should cause gratitude that it got there at all. Or, if they are not the victims, they are the authors of all sorts of involuntary mischief. Altogether, shrewd old Rothschild was wise when he counseled his sons to "avoid unlucky men."

LISTEN to conscience more than to intellect.

MORE important than the thing you do may be the discipline of the doing.

THE things which we enjoy are passing, and we are passing who enjoy them.

THE greatest sources of happiness and usefulness are open to rich and poor alike.

BODILY labor alleviates the pain of the mind; whence arises the happiness of the poor.

TEMPTATIONS come to us from our own bosom mainly. That is the great magazine of temptations.

I HAVE seldom known any one who deserted truth in trifles that could be trusted in matters of importance.

DOUBT always sees huge obstacles in the way of accomplishing anything—nay, the doubt itself is the obstacle.

THE highest elements of character, of power and of dignity lie within the reach of the lowest and the poorest.

ONE of the most effectual ways of pleasing and of making one's self loved is to be cheerful; joy softens more hearts than tears.

LIFE is a casket, not precious in itself, but valuable in proportion to what fortune, or industry, or virtue has placed within it.

HOPE is man's birthright, which, after all his blandishments, delusions and mockeries, never maketh him ashamed to hope on, hope ever.

AFTER we have learned to give willingly when asked, we will next learn to give as largely without the asking.—Central Baptist.

ONLY the waters in the ship can sink the ship; but while kept outside, all the heaving deep waters thundering over three-fifths of the globe can work no shipwreck.

THE last, best fruit, which comes late to perfection, even in the kindliest soul, is tenderness toward the hard, forbearance toward the unfortunate, warmth of heart toward the misanthropic.

"OH, THOU to-morrow! Mystery!
Oh, day that ever runs before!
What has thy hidden hand in store
For mine, to-morrow, and for me?
Oh! thou to-morrow! what hast thou
In store to make me bear thee now?"

THE images with which the minds holds converse may uplift or degrade as truly as companions in bodily form. A thought may scar the soul as a weapon leaves its mark on the flesh.—National Baptist.

HE who hates an enemy, gives him more reason for animosity; he who shuns him, creates the suspicion that he hates him; he who forgives him, always triumphs over him; he who loves him, makes him a means of good.

I BELIEVE that virtue shows quite as well in rags and patches as she does in purple and fine linen. I believe that she and every beautiful object in external nature, claims some sympathy in the breast of the poorest man who breaks his scanty loaf of daily bread.—Dickens.

THE best part of one's life is the performance of one's daily duties. All higher motives, ideals, conceptions, sentiments, in a man are of no account if they do not come down and strengthen him for the better discharge of the duties which devolve upon him in the ordinary affairs of life.

HAPPINESS is like manna. It is to be gathered in the grains and enjoyed every day; it will not keep; it cannot be accumulated; nor need we go out of ourselves nor into remote places to gather it, since it has rained down from heaven, at our doors, or rather within them.

How strongly a man loves is not to be measured by the flame of the impulse that he has at any hour or at any moment. It is what he is willing to do and to suffer for another that measures how much he loves. The mere outgushing of emotion is one test, but an unfit one. The living one's life—not the laying it down, but the using it for the object loved—is the highest test possible.

Very Gullible.

Thirty years ago Mr. Wm. Hall, of New York, lent a "friend" named White $30,000 worth of bonds and checks as a security in a speculation, with the understanding that they were on no account to be converted into cash. The friend immediately converted them into cash and disappeared. Not long ago he went to Hall's house, and in spite of Hall's anger placated him by representing that with the $30,000 which he had appropriated to his own use he had gone to California, had made a large fortune and had traveled across the continent for the express purpose of refunding the money. Mr. Hall was charmed and entertained White royally at his house. White pretended to be sincerely sorry for the roguery of his younger days, and entertained his host with graphic descriptions of California, and amazing yarns about the way in which he had made his princely fortune on the Pacific slope. Hall believed every word he said, and agreed to lend him $6,000, on White's turning over securities in "a sealed envelope." He had already paid him $1,200, when Mrs. Hall, rising at 5 in the morning, carried the envelope to the Chief of Police. On opening it, the papers were found almost worthless, and White was arrested. How a man capable of being gulled after this fashion was also capable of accumulating $30,000, or 30,000 cents, is a mystery that would puzzle even a phrenologist.

What the Thumb Does.

Have you noticed that when you want to take hold of anything—a bit of thread, we will say—that it is always the thumb who puts himself forward, and that he is always on one side by himself, while the rest of the fingers are on the other? If the thumb is not helping nothing stops in your hand, and you don't know what to do with it. Try, by way of experiment, to carry your spoon to your mouth without putting your thumb to it, and you will see what a long time it will take you to get through with a poor little plateful of broth. The thumb is placed in such a manner on your hand that it can face each of the other fingers, one after the other, or all together, as you please, and by this we are enabled to grasp, as with a pair of pincers, all objects, whether large or small. Our hands owe their perfection of usefulness to this happy arrangement, which has been bestowed on no other animal except the monkey, our nearest neighbor.

TRADE MARK.
The Only True Malarial Antidote.

DR. HOLMAN'S PAD is no guess-work remedy—no feeble imitative experiment—no patched hodge podge (some other inventor's idea); it is the original and only genuine curative Pad, the only remedy that has an honestly-acquired right to use the title-word "Pad" in connection with a treatment for chronic diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Spleen.

By a recently perfected improvement DR. HOLMAN has greatly increased the scope of the Pad's usefulness, and appreciably augmented its active curative power.

This great improvement gives HOLMAN'S PAD (with its Adjuvants) such complete and unfailing control over the most persistent and unyielding forms of Chronic Disease of the Stomach and Liver, as well as Malarial Blood-Poisoning, as to amply justify the eminent Professor Loomis' high encomium: "IT IS NEARER A UNIVERSAL PANACEA THAN ANYTHING IN MEDICINE!"

The success of HOLMAN'S PADS has inspired imitators who offer Pads similar in form and odor to the genuine HOLMAN PAD. Beware of these Bogus and Imitation Pads, gotten up to sell on the reputation of the GENUINE HOLMAN PAD.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD COMPANY with the above Trade Mark printed in green.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,
J. P. WATSON,

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Dr. Likenstie recommends soap-suds, made of any soap on hand, to spread over burned surfaces. Their action in relieving pain and reducing inflammation is due to the presence of the alkali, and they possess, he thinks, evident advantages over powdering with bicarbonate of soda.

Eggs on Toast.—For this a perfectly-fresh egg is necessary; put a pan half full of hot water on the stove, break your egg carefully in it, cover, and put back on the stove till the white is firm. Take out of the pan with a skimmer, and slide into a bowl of hot water while you make and butter your toast. Take up the egg carefully on a perforated skimmer, shake dry, trim off any ragged edges, and serve immediately on the toast. Sprinkle a little salt and pepper on the egg. If this is well and neatly done it is appetizing for a sick person.

Dr. Felix L. Oswald makes an eloquent plea, in an article published in the Popular Science Monthly, for the advantages of physical exercise as a preventive of and cure for bodily ailments. He urges it as the proper remedy, curing the symptoms by removing the cause, for some of the besetting vices of youth, which he ascribes to an excess of potential energy for which our sedentary mode of life provides no outlet. He urges, also, that in large cities parents owe their children a provision for a frequent opportunity of active exercise, just as they owe them an antiseptic diet in a malarious climate.

If a person should eat his dinner to-day at 12 o'clock, to-morrow at 2 and the next day at 3, and continue in this irregular manner for a couple of weeks, his nervous system would be apt to become entirely deranged, for the reason that the individual has prevented this natural tendency of the nerves to have a fixed and periodic time to demand the food, and, as a consequence from such irregularity, indigestion is the result, and, on account of the intimate connection of the nerves and the brain, a very serious and detrimental effect upon the latter is produced, causing mental inactivity and loss of memory. But, on the other hand, if we should eat our dinner to-day at 12, and to-morrow and the next day at the same hour, we will find that this periodicity has been established, and the little messengers, the nerves, will warn us exactly at 12 that our regular period has arrived. It therefore follows that if we comply with that request every day promptly we find good digestion, quiet nerves, better memory and a more active mind to be the result.

Constipation.—Hall's Journal of Health thinks it doubtful if consumption numbers as many victims as are stricken down by the various diseases that result from habitual constipation. True consumption is an inherited disease. It may remain always dormant, but when aroused to action, decay commences at a point circumscribed, and gradually extends, unless arrested, until so much of the lungs become involved that vital action ceases. The evils of constipation result from inattention to the calls of nature, and usually commence with children whose habits are not closely looked to by their parents. The processes of nature are always active while life lasts. When effete matter is retained a moment beyond the time its expulsion is demanded, the system commences its efforts to get rid of it. When the natural egress is checked, the absorbents carry the more-fluid portions of the poisonous mass into the circulation, and it becomes diffused throughout the body. The more-solid or clay-like portion is forced into the lower rectum, where it becomes firmly impacted, thus cutting off the circulation of the small blood vessels, causing painful engorgements known as piles or hemorrhoids. A continuance of the troubles often results in fissure, fistula or cancer. The trouble is seldom confined here. As a result of the blood poisoning we invariably find more or less dyspepsia, with decided derangements of the functions of the heart, liver and kidneys, accompanied by headache and nervous debility, often verging on paralysis.

Woodcock Telegraphy.

On a number of occasions I have closely observed the woodcock's system of telegraphy. The bird's mandibles are furnished with extremely sensitive nerves, so arranged that when the point of the bill rests upon the ground the slightest sounds are conveyed to its brain. Standing upon the water-saturated earth of a spouty bog, our bird utters a faint, keen cry, scarcely audible at two-rods' distance, then immediately lets fall his head till the tip of his bill touches the ground, and listens attentively. If his mate hears him she replies, puts her bill on the ground, and listens in turn. So the love messages go back and forth as long as the birds have anything to say. This sort of thing usually happens in the soft twilights from May to the middle of August, though occasionally I have seen and heard it in the broad light of a summer day. In June, 1868, I made the following note:

"To-day sketched a woodcock in the listening attitude. Shall try to get further studies."

Five years later I succeeded in getting three more sketches and last year (1880) I got four more. Many of these and kindred sketches have been obtained at the end of indescribable care and labor. The woodcock is so shy, so attentive, so sensitive, that the least sound will cause it to skulk and hide—a thing it does with even greater cunning and success than the quail. The only way in which I ever have been able to get near enough to the bird to sketch its natural attitudes has been to crawl on the wet ground through tangled weeds and shrubs until I reached a hiding place on the border of its feeding range, and there patiently and silently watch for its coming. This I have done over and over again for days together before getting sight of the bird.—Chicago Tribune.

Ripe and Sweet.

It will not take many years to bring one to the period of life when men, at least the majority of writing and talking men, do nothing but praise. Men, like peaches and pears, grow sweet a little while before they begin to decay. It is a fact that most writers, except sour and unsuccessful ones, get tired of finding fault at about a time when they are beginning to grow old. At 30 we are all trying to cut our names in big letters upon the walls of this tenement of life; twenty years later we have carved it, or shut up our jack-knives. Then we are ready to help others and care less to hinder any, because nobody's elbows are in our way.

Meteorology.

The study of meteorology has made immense strides. The tracking of storms over the entire northern hemisphere by means of the international system of simultaneous observations, and their charting and monthly publication under the direction of Professor Abbe, of the General Weather Service of the United States, is an accomplished fact. This valuable publication is based upon the reports from regular stations in the United States and Canada, a large number of monthly records of voluntary observers and army post-surgeons, the logs of vessels, the international system of observation, reliable newspaper extracts, special reports, and the labors of the State Weather Services of Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri.

The work involves great sagacity and skill in the line of investigation, and is supplemented by monthly graphic charts, showing the tracks of centers of areas of low barometer, the isobars, isotherms, prevailing winds and rainfall for the month, not alone in the United States, but over the whole northern hemisphere. In a recent publication, tracks of storms, with date and place of their central areas, were traced over North America, Europe, Siberia, Hindostan, China, and Japan Sea and the northern oceans. It is common and, for all practical purposes, sufficient to say a storm developed in the northwest, passed over the country, and disappeared in the northeast. Instances may be cited of a storm, traced from its appearance in the western part of this country, thence moving eastward over the Gulf of St. Lawrence, thence northeastward across the southern portion of Greenland, thence southeastward over Iceland and Scotland, and thence eastward over the North Sea, disappearing in Central Europe. Another, whose track was based upon reports from China and Japan, logs of vessels in the North Pacific and reports from Unalaska, was found to have made its appearance in Southern China, moving northeastward over the China Sea, thence over the Japan sea and Japan, and thence pursuing an easterly course to the western coast of North America, where it gathered renewed energy, and its subsequent passage over this country was recorded by our own unequaled Weather Service.—Cincinnati Commercial.

[From the Battle Creek (Mich.) Daily Journal.]

Upon being spoken to concerning St. Jacobs Oil, our fellow townsman, Mr. Theodore Wakelee, said: I had been suffering with rheumatism, and obtained the greatest relief from the use of St. Jacobs Oil. It has also been used in my family for some time, and has never been found to fail in giving prompt relief.

Encouragement.

An amusing story is told of a little fellow named Artie, one of three brothers, whose parents had brought them up to be brave and self-reliant. He couldn't do much, but what he could do he did with all his might.

And as their parents were Methodists of the good old-fashioned kind, the boys were in the habit of hearing—at such times—the hearty "Amen" break forth from their father's lips when the sermon was particularly enjoyable.

One cold Sabbath day these children were left at home, with many cautions to be careful.

Hardly had the parents left ere the woodwork near the stovepipe was discovered to be on fire and out of the children's reach; but, with wonderful activity and energy, the eldest climbed upon the table and put out the flames.

When the father and mother returned they shuddered to see the danger to which their dear ones had been exposed, and, with thankful hearts, praised them for their courage.

"How did you manage, Tommy, to reach the fire?" asked their father.

"Why," said Tommy, "I pushed the table up to the wall and got upon that."

"And did you help brother, Jimmy?" to the next.

"Yes, sir; I brought him a pail of water and handed him the dipper."

"And what did you do?" said the proud father to his pet, the youngest of the group.

"Well, papa," said Artie, "you see I was too small to help put out the fire, so I just stood by and hollered 'Amen.'"—Youth's Companion.

[From the South Bend Evening Register.]

When certain powers are claimed for an article, and everybody testifies that it does more than is claimed for it, to gainsay its worth is useless. This is the substance of the St. Jacobs Oil record.

Life in Texas.

"You am de squarest man in Austin," said old Uncle Mose, entering a drug store and taking the clerk by the hand. The drug man blushed modestly and said he always tried to do his duty as a Christian and an American citizen, regardless of age, race, sex or previous condition.

"I knowed right off you was a Christian, sah. No man in de drug bizness 'ceptin' a follerer ob de Lord would hang out sich a sign as you has got. Hit shows you am a Christian fust, and a pisen mixer afterward. I was jest spellin' it out. Hit am de best advice eber I got in a drug store."

"What sign are you talking about, Uncle?" asked the somewhat-bewildered druggist.

"Dat ar," said the old man, pointing to a placard on the wall, which read: "Tasteless Medicines." "Dat ar am de best advice in de world, taste less medicines. I neber had tasted no medicines, no how, and dat ar am de chief reason I'se alive and kickin' yit. But you am de fust Christian druggist eber I struck," and the old man strolled out just in time to avoid stopping with his head a package of hair restorer that the infuriated druggist hurled after him.—Texas Siftings.

Advertising Cheats.

It has become so common to write the beginning of an elegant, interesting article and then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such cheats and simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible, to induce people to give them one trial, as no one who knows their value will ever use anything else.—Providence Advertiser.

The Ways of Plants.

In a great many cases leaves are said to sleep; that is to say, at the approach of night they change their position, and sometimes fold themselves up, thus presenting a smaller surface for radiation, and being in consequence less exposed to cold. Mr. Darwin has proved experimentally that leaves which were prevented from moving suffered more from cold than those which were allowed to assume their natural position. He has observed with reference to one plant, Maranta arundinacea, the arrow-root, a West Indian species allied to Canna, that if the plant has had a severe shock it cannot get to sleep for the next two or three nights.

The sleep of flowers is also probably a case of the same kind, though, as I have elsewhere attempted to show, it has now, I believe, special reference to the visits of insects; those flowers which are fertilized by bees, butterflies, and other day insects, sleep by night, if at all; while those which are dependent on moths rouse themselves toward evening, as already mentioned, and sleep by day. These motions, indeed, have but an indirect reference to our present subject. On the other hand, in the dandelion (Leontodon), the flower-stalk is upright while the flower is expanded, a period which lasts for three or four days; it then lowers itself and lies close to the ground for about twelve days, while the fruits are ripening, and then rises again when they are mature. In the Cyclamen the stalk curls itself up into a beautiful spire after the flower has faded.

The flower of the little Linaria of our walls (L. cymbalaria) pushes out into the light and sunshine, but as soon as it is fertilized it turns round and endeavors to find some hole or cranny in which it may remain safely ensconced until the seed is ripe.

In some water-plants the flower expands at the surface, but after it is faded retreats again to the bottom. This is the case for instance, with the water-lilies, some species of the Patamogeton (Trapa natans). In Valisneria, again, the female flowers are borne on long stalks, which reach to the surface of the water, on which the flowers float. The male flowers on the contrary, have short, straight stalks, from which, when mature, the pollen detaches itself, rises to the surface, and, floating freely on it, is wafted about, so that it comes in contact with the female flowers. After fertilization, however, the long stalk coils up spirally, and thus carries the ovary down to the bottom, where the seeds can ripen with great safety.—Sir John Lubbock, in the Popular Science Monthly.

A Losing Joke.

A prominent physician of Pittsburgh said jokingly to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill-health, and of his inability to cure her, "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.—Harrisburg Patriot.

Vesta, the largest of the minute planets known as "asteroids," is computed to have a diameter of about three hundred miles; and Echo, the smallest, is probably about ten miles in diameter. Some mathematician has lately furnished the rough but interesting calculation that the sun is a thousand times the volume of Jupiter; Jupiter, a thousand that of the earth; the earth, a thousand times that of Vesta; and Vesta a thousand times that of Echo—the "baby" of the solar system as at present considered. A vast number of bodies far more minute than Echo is doubtless moving about the sun, but these fragmentary masses are so small as to be unseen by astronomers except when they flash as meteors through the upper regions of our atmosphere on their way to the earth.

Wanted Pay for Being a Fool.

A well-known New York architect was urged by a person who was interested in a certain monument project of large pretensions to make a design for it. He objected. When further urged to name a sum he replied:

"Well, I'll make you a design for $1,000."

"Isn't that a trifle steep?" said the inviter.

"I don't charge $1,000 for merely making the design," answered the architect, adding, "any man who makes a design for an American monumental committee is a fool, and when I deliberately make a fool of myself, I want at least $1,000 for it."

Bayard on the Natural Affections.

Senator Bayard said a pretty thing and a true one at an orphan asylum in Baltimore, the other day: "The best part of a man's life is in the world of his natural affections, and that realm has laws of its own that neither know nor heed King, Kaiser nor President, nor Reichstags nor Congresses, and are deaf even to the voices of shouting popular majorities, but heed and obey rather the gentle voice of woman and the cry of helpless and feeble childhood."

Guard against fever and all malarial diseases by using Kidney-Wort.

Respecting the Sabbath.

The people of a New Hampshire town are so fearfully lazy that when the wife of a minister who had just settled in that town asked a prominent citizen if the inhabitants generally respected the Sabbath and refrained from business he replied: "Confound it, ma'am, they don't do enough work in a whole week to break the Sabbath, if it was all done on that day."

Storm Signals of Married Life.

A marriage has other uses than those of perpetuating the race. In this great city there are thousands of refined, high-strung, intelligent, appreciative, but lone, desolate souls, for whom it would be an earthly paradise to rest ever so little in the shade of a really peaceful household. But such peace must be genuine. It must not be any patched-up affair—any show of affection between husband and wife before the guest's face and a snarl behind his back. It's just this lack of harmony between husband and wife that makes so many households as a tomb to visit. It's a bad sign when the wife's friends are hustled out of the husband's presence into another room. It's a bad sign when the husband's visitors are not the wife's visitors, and vice versa. It's a bad sign if matters which interest the wife do not interest the husband, and vice versa. It's a bad sign when the lord of the manor looks down from his lofty elevation and speaks with a sneer, more or less subdued, of the "trivialities of fashion," and deems it beneath him to assist his wife in choosing a dress pattern. Marriage partnership must mean partnership in everything, or there's a social desert for one party or the other to travel over pretty often. We are talking of married life as we have seen it in the houses of great and little men; in the houses of Judges and Generals, of lawyers and politicians, among whom also both great and little men are to be found.—Graphic.

Camel-Riding.

A traveler says that, if he were asked to describe the first sensation of a camel-ride, he would say: Take a music-stool, and, having wound it up as high as it would go, put it in a cart without springs, get on top, and next drive the cart transversely across a plowed field, and you will then form some notion of the terror and uncertainty you would experience the first time you mounted a camel.

It is stated that the Bank of France has almost entirely abandoned chemical tests in favor of the camera for detecting forgeries. The sensitive plate not only proclaims forthwith the doing of the eraser or penknife, but frequently shows, under the bold figures of the forger, the sum originally borne on the check. So ready is the camera to detect ink marks that a carte-de-visite inclosed in a letter may to the eye appear without blemish, while a copy of it in the camera will probably exhibit traces of writing across the face, where it has merely been in contact with the written page.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. William Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take Dr. William Hall's Balsam, and be convinced that consumption can be cured. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

KIDNEY-WORT

THE ONLY MEDICINE

IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM

That Acts at the same time on

THE LIVER, THE BOWELS, AND THE KIDNEYS.

WHY ARE WE SICK?

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT

WILL SURELY CURE KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, PILES, CONSTIPATION, URINARY DISEASES, FEMALE WEAKNESSES, AND NERVOUS DISORDERS, by causing free action of these organs and restoring their power to throw off disease.

Why suffer Bilious pains and aches! Why tormented with Piles, Constipation! Why frightened over disordered Kidneys! Why endure nervous or sick headaches!

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health.

It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

It acts with equal efficiency in either form. GET IT OF YOUR DRUGGIST. PRICE, $1.00

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 21, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

THE president is still improving.

THE president is now reported out of danger, and Guiteau wishes he could say as much for himself.

J. W. BOOKWALTER, was last week nominated for governor of Ohio by the democrats.

A NEW daily paper, called the Times, has been started in Indianapolis. It is owned by Col. Holloway, and bids fair to be a success.

DORSEY, the star route swindler is still secretary of the republican national committee. They evidently consider him the right man in the right place.

FOSTER and Bookwalter, the nominees for governor of Ohio, are laying off for cooler weather. But when the sun gets well on its way to the other tropic, look out for business.

ONE senator was elected at Albany. A few of Conkling's friends added their votes to those who have been supporting Warner Miller for a week or more, giving him 76, a majority.

THE nomination of Bookwalter by the democrats in Ohio, is having a good moral effect. The Wapakoneta Bee, heretofore republican, has deserted Foster and come out squarely for Bookwalter.

A DISASTROUS fire occured at East Saginaw, Michigan, Tuesday, several buildings and some large stocks of lumber were destroyed. Loss variously estimated at $200,000 to $300,000. Partly insured.

DANIEL ROYSE, clerk of the supreme court, died in Indianapolis last week. He died very suddenly but he had been in ill health for some time. The governor has appointed Major J. W. Gordon in his place.

Now that the yatching season has begun, the regulation sea serpent begins to loom up. A fishing-party saw one a few days ago off the coast of Rhode Island. He was said to be about forty feet long. Some how the fishers forgot to spit on the bait, and as usual, the serpent escaped.

THE Press is anxious to get our opinion on the new constitutional amendments. We are surprised at this, as we had supposed that the business of furnishing opinions to republican editors belonged exclusively to little Ben-ny Har-ri-son. Is it a coldness or only a dryness?

MANY of our exchanges are saying, "The comet has disappeared." But these are only the old fellows of the profession. To the young editor and his "best girl" sitting on the porch counting the stars in the region of the north pole, it is as plain as ever. Don't give it up yet, gentlemen.

—The Auburn Normal school started out with an enrollment of thirty-one, which was increased to forty-one on Wednesday. The principals both speak in complimentary terms of the students, not only as to deportment and studious habits, but in regard to general intelligence. They expect an additional number of students next week, as it will be as easy for most teachers to enter the classes then, as during the first week.

THE heated term just passed has been very disastrous in its effects, especially in the larger towns. The official report from Cincinnati shows that in the seven days from July 10 to 16, there were 264 deaths from sunstroke and 150 from excessive heat, making 414 in all. The greatest number for any one day was on the 14th, there being eighty-six cases reported that day.

THEY have had a cyclone at New Ulm, in Minnesota, one of the worst ever known. About one-third of the town is in ruins, and many lives were lost. There is scarcely a building that is not injured, and the loss is estimated at $250,000. Several villages in the vicinity of New Ulm also suffered severely. The work of rebuilding the ruined town has already begun, and aid is pouring in from the surrounding towns and country.

THOSE who have facilities for observation, claim that the comet has divided, and is now in two distinct parts, each a perfect comet. This is a very unusual occurrence. The only other on record as far as we know, is the case of Biela's comet, which returned every seven years, until 1845, when it divided into two parts. It returned in 1852, but the parts were much farther apart than before. This was its last appearance. It has probably wandered from our system never to return.

THE democracy of Ohio feel jubilant over their nominee for Govenor, John W. Bookwalter, who received the nomination at the State convention last week. Judging from the leading papers of the Buckeye state, Mr. B. has not ranked high as a politician in the past. However, he is spoken of as an educated gentleman, well liked by all who become acquainted with him. The Cincinnati Enquirer and Cleveland Plain Dealer are confident of his election. We hope their prophecy will come true.

Neighborhood Nippings.

A team ran away while standing in a harvest field near South Bend, and coming against a fence of barbed wire, were terribly injured.

The Palmer House, at Pierceton, was destroyed by fire about one week ago. By persistent efforts the fire was kept from spreading to the adjacent buildings.

A spirited young lady in Columbia City was insulted on the streets lately, and paid the fellow off by breaking her parasol over his head. She ought to have $250,000.

They have had a glass ball shooting-match in Kendallville. The prizes were a keg of powder, a silver cup and a sack of shot. The first was won by Mergel, of Fort Wayne.

The factory of the Dodge manufacturing company, at Mishawaka, was struck by lightning last Wednesday and burned to the ground. Loss $40,000, and no insurance.

The Middlebury Record has changed hands, Mr. Heatwole having sold the establishment to Rev. John F. Blakemore. Mr. Heatwole expresses his determination to continue the newspaper business at some more favorable point.

Sam, Pete and Max, the popular clothiers of Fort Wayne, came near having a blaze the other day. Some goods in a show window caught fire, and for a few minutes things were lively. It was soon subdued, and they are all right again.

The Lagrange Register is authority for the statement that an engineer on the Grand Rapids road was knocked off his engine into the lake at Rome City last week. He was standing on the bridge when his train in backing down swept him in. He was rescued.

The Lagrange Democrat says: The Rensselaer Sentinel was represented in the democratic state editorial convention, held at Michigan City last week by a lady. The Sentinel must be a thoroughbred woman's rights journal.

Kendallville News: Burglars forced there way into the boot and shoe store of Julius Lang Tuesday night and took goods to the amount of $100. They entered through the back windows by prying them up, breaking the locks or fastenings. An effort should be made to capture the fellows and the severest punishment known to the law inflicted.

A man named Wm. Finley, living near Columbia City, was killed by lightning while going home from town last Tuesday afternoon, July 12. During the sudden storm that arose, he put up at a farm-house on the road, and was standing in the barn talking with the owner, when he was struck and instantly killed. Another was killed in the same storm, while standing under a tree near South Bend.

Bluffton Banner: Wells county is to have two county fairs this fall, one at Five Points, in Chester township, and the other in Bluffton. Let the farmers in the county make arrangements to assist the officers in making both of these fairs a grand success. Without the farmers lend a helping hand by bringing their stuff and placing it on exhibition it is impossible for any set of managers to make a fair creditable.

O. T. Clark is making needed improvements in front of his business rooms.

The young people have our thanks for a fine serenade last week. Come again and stay longer.

Mrs. O. L. Hall has been to Toledo for medical advice. She has been in poor health for some time.

The Waterloo base-ball club will play the Pleasant Lake boys a second game at Waterloo Saturday.

The base-ball game took a turn Saturday, resulting this time in favor of the Waterloo boys, by a score of 26 to 9.

The normal school is making good progress, and bids fair to be well attended. Students hunting rooms may be seen every day.

H. H. Knott is re-building his house, which was partly destroyed by fire awhile ago. When finished it will be greatly improved.

The Junior ball fellows beat the Seniors by a score of 8 to 4. We understand the Seniors did not get a tally till the last inning.

The army worm is making sad havoc with the oats in some places in this vicinity. Fortunately their time is short, as the crop is nearly ready to be cut.

Duncan Brothers ground the first new wheat July 14. They think the quality not equal to that of last year. In 1877 they ground the first grist July 13.

Frank Adams has settled down to married life in a very sensible manner, and Emma seems as well suited as if she had always been intended for Adams' Express company.

Sharpshooters.

The Standard is authority for the statement that the following fancy shots were made at the recent shooting tournament "Glass balls were thrown and broken by rifle balls, a pear was shot from between the fingers, a pear was also held in the fingers and the neck shot off, a tooth-pick was shot from the hand, a cigar was held in the mouth and the ashes shot off; the sharpened point of a lead pencil was the next, a pin was held between the fingers and the head shot off, then a horse-hair was cut in two, and the shoot wound up by each putting a glass ball on their heads, standing thirty-five feet apart, and both firing at the same time, breaking the balls. They will give an exhibition shoot at South Bend in a short time. All who attended Monday were highly entertained."

Now that the thing is started, we expect to see a mania on the shooting business. We hope that it will travel this way. We have several thousand cats in the backyards in our neighborhood that we would like to sacrifice in the interest of science. If these felines can only be trained to do duty, we will agree to furnish the pears, tooth-picks, cigars, pencils, pins and horse-hairs for them to hold. Come on boys, don't be afraid of over-taxing our liberality. When the last tabby is wasted, and has been erased from the catalogue, we know of several vagrant dogs that can be had cheap for cash.

Spencerville Notes.

Miss Ella Emanuel has returned.

Miss Rose Omo spent a few days in our city last week.

Frank Barney and Frank Lancaster went to Ft. Wayne last week.

Mrs. S. E. Rhodes called at the Pioneer House last Saturday evening.

Rev. Erick and wife, of Middlebury, Indiana, are visiting relatives and friends here.

Miss Frank Oberholtzer, of Maysville, is visiting friends this week at Spencerville.

Last Friday night our usual quiet village was startled about two o'clock by hearing the report of a number of shots. Investigation showed that burglars had entered Barney Bros'. hardware store. There were three thieves, and all were captured. Saturday forenoon they were taken to Auburn, by J. A. Provines, Beeks Erick and Frank Barney. Warning had been given early in the evening that an attempt would be made that night. Mr. Provines, Sol. Barney, Beeks Erick, Frank Barney, Frank Lancaster and Dan. Herrick were on the lookout for them and their capture was thus easily effected.

Obituary.

DIED—At Petoskey, Michigan, July 14, Lizzie Appleton, aged eight months, only child of Dr. T. J. Dills, of Fort Wayne.

Less than three years ago we chronicled the happy event of the doctor's marriage with one of the fairest daughters of our neighboring state of Kentucky. Shortly afterward we noted the transporting of his southern bride from the sunny, parental roof to his northern home, and on last November, with sorrow and aching hearts, we recorded the early death of that fair young bride who, in dying, kissed and blessed her babe, and gave to her husband, as she hoped, a lasting and enduring pledge of her affection—"little Lizzie"—who now, after so few short months, had entwined her baby affections about the heart of her father and others has been called to the pure arms and bosom of that sainted young mother.

Indeed, the life of man is a very enigma—some seem to move along in the even tenor of their existence, one day, one year, one generation the same, passing with scarcely a change or ripple in the whole episode of life; others are plunged from the veriest realms of earthly happiness and bliss to utter sorrow, solitude and grief. The doctor, widowed, childless, broken-hearted and bereaved, can only be left to his own sad and sorrowful thoughts; and while our tears may fall and our hearts bleed with his, we, with others, can only extend that sympathy which flows from man to man, and from brother to brother. And now, in the early prime of manhood, and looking down through the dark vista of his coming, and, we hope, useful life, may he realize that the angel forms of his loving bride-wife and innocent babe, accompany him, console him and cheer him onward to greater good to the world at large. W.

ADITIONAL LOCAL.

—A dozen boys and about half as many men were practicing tearing up the sidewalk, corner of Seventh and Jackson streets Monday, in search of a nickel.

LOST.—A hand valise near Auburn Junction. The finder will please leave the same at Drs. Cowan & Allen's office in Case's block.

—A lady in Chicago was troubled with liver-complaint, and after taking three bottles of the Big Bromoline was entirely cured. Fifty cents a bottle.

—We have a free ticket for the country newspaper that didn't head the news from Washington, "The President Continues to Improve."

—The Sunday schools of Richland township will hold their annual picnic at West Richland, Saturday, Aug. 20, instead of the 27th, as the time set at the last institute.

—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for all those painful complaints and weaknesses so common to our best female population. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlets.

—The bar association will meet at Cedar Beach, on the B. & O., near Syracuse, on July 26, 1881. Train leaves Auburn at 7 o'clock A. M., returning at 6:20 P. M. All the members of the bar of DeKalb and adjoining counties, together with county officers and members of the press are cordially invited.

L. J. BLAIR, CHR'M.

STRAYED.—From the farm of the undersigned at Spencerville, about the fourth of July, two heifers. One is three years old, is red, and has the end of tail off. The other is two years old, white with red spots. Both are about the same size. Anyone finding the above described stock will confer a favor by addressing me at Spencerville, Ind. JOHN CODER.

Excursion on the B. & O.

An excursion will run on the occasion of the unveiling of the Pherson Statue, at Clyde, Ohio, July 22, starting from Garrett at 4:00 A. M. Fare for round trip will be $3.60 from Garrett, $3.50 from Auburn and $3.20 from St. Joe.

Examination for Purdue University

At the next regular examination of teachers at Auburn, July 30, 1881, I will at the same time and place, hold an examination for the benefit of any who desire admission to Purdue University at Lafayette. Applicants for admission to the Freshman class will be examined in the common school branches (reading excepted) and in physiology, U. S. history, physical geography and elementary algebra through quadratic equations.

Applicants for admission to the academy will be examined in spelling, geography, English grammar, and in arithmetic through interest. Persons wishing to profit by this opportunity should send me their applications before July 20, so I can forward them to the university as early as July 22. Any information cheerfully given.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

Grand Excursion.

There will be a grand excursion under the direction of the ladies of the M. E. church, of Garrett, on Tuesday, the 26th day of July, 1881, from the points named below to Cedar Beach, the most popular watering place in this section. A special train will run on the B. & O. road at the lowest excursion rates, as follows: Leave Hicksville 6:30 a. m., fare $1.35; leave St. Joe 6:50, fare $1.25; leave Auburn Junction 7:17, fare $1.00; leave Avilla 7:45, fare 85 cents.

We propose to turn out the best concert band in northern Indiana. Fritz Kayser, the unexcelled clarinet player of this part of the state will join with the Garrett band, of eighteen mouth-pieces, in furnishing music for the excursion concert. Refreshments will be furnished, including cold lunch, ice-cream, lemonade and fruit. There are a large number of row and sail boats, fine fishing, and the finest steamboat in the country, which will make constant trips on the lake. Cedar Beach is the best summer resort in the state, and all should spend a day of recreation and pleasure upon this occasion. Rev. Y. B. Meredith will be the orator of the occasion.

Committee of arrangements: Judge Carpenter, M. L. Duck, R. L. Simpson and M. C. Clarkson.

AND now comes Fort Wayne with its revelations as to the manner in which the republicans carried Indiana. Mr. Robinson, proprietor of the Robinson House, has published an open letter in which he releases the republican county committee from a debt for board of certain republican workers during the last campaign. The News comes to the defense of the committee and claims that the debt was contracted by Dorsey and New, and not by the county committee. "It was," says the News, "for the board of a Frenchman and others sent here by the national committee, and the nature of whose work was entirely unknown to the county committee." That settles it. The local committee didn't carry the election. It was the national committee, under the management of Dorsey, that did the business. Of course he called to his assistance such present help as "Jo. Gray," the "Frenchman and others."

THE "NEW STAR" $15 SUIT,

CUSTOM MADE.

We told you several days ago we had a surprise for you and here it is: 20 different patterns of most beautiful light and dark Cassimeres we have put aside for our $15 suit; and we honestly believe it is several grades higher than any suit in town for the money. We finish them just the same as higher price suits, in trimmings, linings, etc. We might tell you these were English, and sell them at $35, but we WILL tell the truth if we miss a sale; so we say that these are American Cassimeres.

How will they wear? Ah, that is another question, and we can spread ourselves in praising them, for they are good and no mistake. Drop in and see them.

CUSTOM MADE.

On a Scout.

JOE LOVELAND AND HIS DOG HAYES ON TRAIL.

While our reporter was riding into the village of Corunna last Saturday evening, his attention was called to the war-like whoops of a Comanche Indian and upon inquiry found that it was Joe and his dog, Hayes, making frantic efforts to hunt down Win Rosenberry's pet crow. After an untiring effort they spied the fowl sitting upon a stump. Joe rolled a big log on Hayes to keep him quiet, and then tip-toed gracefully along the shadow of a huge oak. Taking deliberate aim, he blazed away "winged" the bird, which started off at a rapid pace, being frightened by the loud report of a double-barreled musket. Joe relieved Hayes, and the chase was continued until the crow reached his home, jumped upon the lap of his master, looked him in the face, as much as to say: "Save me from the blood-thirsty hands of that red man and his cur." Joe and Rosenberry had a short dialogue, and while Joe was crossing a five acre field, a short distance ahead of Rosenberry, one could have played a four-handed game of euchre on his coat-tail.

Home Once More.

OUR TEMPORARY GRASS-WIDOWERS IN BETTER SPIRITS TO-DAY.

The Assembly at Rome City closed last Friday, and it is a great consolation to those men whose better-halves have figured prominently at this resort of pleasure. But men are too "selfish" and should put up with the small inconvenience of keeping bachelor's hall during the summer, for their "wives' sake." Just think of it—there is nothing to grumble about. While the "old gals" are enjoying the cool breezes of the lake and the intellectual treats furnished by some of the best "brains" in the country, their husbands should labor hard during the day, roll and tumble the whole night in sleepless agony, to furnish plenty "ducats" for his sweeter-half. Be patient, boys, for Island Park has put our her beacon lights, and when things have been rearranged and the house cleaned, your domestic comforts will be restored again, and you will enjoy them all the more.

Won't go Down.

A REPORT THAT JOE BEUGNOT HAS KICKED UP HIS HEELS.

It will be remembered that a few months ago Joe. Beugnot, in company with Parley Stimely, left for the far west in anticipation of accumulating an immense fortune. Probably Joe had already had a burglar-proof safe made to order, and in course of time would have stood back on his shanks and carried the nom-de-plume of "Vanderbilt No. 2." But we are sorry to say that Joe. wrote to one of our boys that he was massacred by the red men of the forest (good enough) together with his brother corps of engineers. Now we see what Joe is at. He is about ready to return, and has sent these sensational news ahead so that when he reaches home he can tell the boys what a terrible battle they had, and that he was the only one who escaped alve.

—No move yet toward a fire engine. This place is large enough to support a hand-engine and an organized company.

—We have two first-class dentist shops, and now let the quinine doctors quit pulling the ivories, and give the tooth doctors a fair show.

—There is a young fellow at Garrett, who says he can beat any man in the county making time with a bicycle. Who says "no."

—Frank Davenport is still adding beauty and convenience to his new residence. Frank is a tasty fellow, and will make his house attractive.

Surprise Party.

A JOLLY TIME IN THE SOUTH END OF TOWN.

Last Thursday evening a number of our young people met at the residence of J. A. McKay, esq., formed in double rank and marched to the residence of Hiram Weaver, on South Main street, where they "surprised" Herby in a very satisfactory manner. Ice-cream and cake were first served, after which the white-necktie brigade grabbed frantically into a bushel-basket filled with pea-nuts. The evening was cool, and it seemed as though this particular night was set apart for the enjoyment of the young. There was no reporter in attendance, but we feel safe in saying that each "gal" had a protector home after the ice-cream, cake and peanuts were exhausted.

—Irvin Woodard and Miss Cora Cary came near drowning at Rome City, last week, by a frantic effort to rescue a fifteen-cent handkerchief. They capsized the boat, but fortunately the young man was an excellent swimmer and succeeded in flopping the lady upon the inverted boat. Her screams brought assistance and they were taken to shore, none the worse for their involuntary ducking. Why parents send their children to such places is something we can not explain—unless it be that they want to get rid of them. Young ladies especially, should not be allowed to spend weeks and months at these watering places unless accompanied by their parents.

—Mark Rush writes from Fort Wayne to say that he saw French Pete last Sunday, in that place, and had quite a talk with him, about the racket he had in Auburn. Pete says, tell Doc. Cowan and Frank Leas that he is having a good time. It will be remembered that we reported Pete as dead. We heard that he was killed at Kendallville, but it now appears that rumor was wrong in claiming that Pete was dead; or else Pete is mistaken in claiming to be alive. We wish these parties would get together and settle the matter, as it don't make much difference to us.

—There is nothing that looks as well in a young lady as to try and advance her literary attainments. When a girl begins to bloom as a young lady, and we see her reading and studying during her idle time, we have an exalted opinion of that lady. When she teaches a country school, she shows her dignity and pride and openly lets the world know that she can make a livelihood for herself. Such girls are worthy of attention, and will make splendid wives for the average young man of to-day.

—"Goaty" Stahl, jr., was left in charge of his father's tailor shop last Friday, and trade being dull, "Goaty" dozed off and was sleeping soundly until Chris. Baldock walked on his tiptoes and emptied an oyster can filled with ice water down "Goaty's" back. He used language that we have a faint recollection of hearing before, but just at present we cannot call it to memory.

—News reach us from the east, that our harmless and good-natured citizen, George Foster, has "sworn off." And now, as long as this world is wakened by the rippling waves of the Pacific, and hushed to sleep by the lullaby of the Atlantic, we can count George in as a major-general of the temperance army of Indiana. Stick to it, George.

—Mrs. H. Kline, at Corunna, entertained a large party of friends, last Friday, numbering twenty in all. Refreshments were served and a pleasant, enjoyable time was had. To judge from the talk of the "gals" who were in attendance, we are in-Klined to think that that was the only party "what never was."

—Isn't it about time that our county guardians were making arrangements to build a new fence around the court square? The old rickety fence that surrounds this beautiful grove is an eye-sore to every one. Several panels facing Main street will fall down soon if they are not propped up.

—The new style hats are homely enough to cause a dummy to grin. They are on the Chinese style, with about two bolts of musquito-bar wrapped around the crown; streaming, a la peacock, down over the eyes. Oh, woman, where will not this fashionable world drift thee?.

—There is a pack of dogs on south Main street who not only nightly disturb the repose of the people of the neighborhood, but who also assail pedestrians and prowl around people's premises. Owners of these curs can keep them by lookin' a leetie ou-dt.

—The excitement occasioned by the publication and introduction of the revision of the new Testament seems to have entirely died out. But few copies were sold here, and it seems probable that the authorized version will continue to be used, at least during the present generation.

—While Hiram Weaver was returning from Lintz's lake, one day last week, he lost a large, leather pocket-book, containing two town orders, amounting to sixty dollars, and a note. The finder will be rewarded by returning it to the owner.

The Crops.

GATHERED FROM THE TALK OF OUR FARMERS.

To judge by what the tillers of the soil have to say regarding the present crops they will fall short from one-third to one-half. The wheat harvest will not average over one-third that it did last year. Hay is said to be light, and the probabilities are that our townsmen will pay about fifteen dollars a ton for this article next winter. Corn is expected to be at least one-half of a crop. Most of the corn throughout the county is tasseled and only standing about two or three feet high. Clover seed &c., are about the usual yield. We learn that there is a large quantity of grain yet in the county, from last year, that was not marketed, and owing to this fact we will have plenty until another year. Farmers always estimate very low, and probably the average we are making is not exactly correct, but it is not far out of the way.

—Will our brethren never let up on Mary and her lamb. The fellow who perpetrated the following "scabby" doggerel ought to be sent to the small pox asylum on Humpre's bicy le.

"Mary had a vaccine scab
Upon her snow-white arm,
She warned her beau to this effect
For fear he'd do it harm."

"But when they came to part that night
She gave a mighty grab,
And whispered, "hug me awful tight,
And never mind the scab!"

—W. S. Sthair is now finishing off the new band wagon for A. W. Allen It is a fine piece of work and does credit to Mr. Sthair and his employes. And won't the band boys be proud? We shall look for a triple-tongue exercise from all of them, from the E. flat to the snare drummer.

—A Main street barber says to one of our hands, "you fellows want to quit saying, Seventh street ball nine in the paper, it sounds ridiculous." A barber, whew! Wonder where he got his wealth, and if the mine still belongs to him—was he educated at Ann Arbor or at Green's Corners?

—T. H. Leasure, who some time ago left for the west, was married the 8th, inst., to a young lady named Miss Sade Williams. The COURIER, together with the many friends of Tom, at this place, joins in wishing them a bright future.

—John Olinger went out of town the other day, on a keen trot with a hay-mower, and Helms said, "it goes off like a buggy." It strikes us that if that machine had jumped into motion that it would have gone off like a cannon.

—There was a temperance meeting, at Sedan, in the M. E. church last Sunday evening. This is a curious place to call the inebriates together to listen to a lecturer on temperance, when Sedan has not had a saloon for several years.

—Now, while the railroad excitement is raging at Butler, wouldn't it be a good time for Weamer to offer a reaper and mower to the lucky man, out of two hundred, who will subscribe for the Record one year.

—Mr. Poor and Mr. Sanborn have purchased the frame building on D. D. Snyder's premises, and will move the same to the vacant lot on Van Buren street, next to Mr. Stoughdecker's.

—Edward Orr, at Corunna, has one among the best two-year old colts in the county. It will weigh about 1,200 pounds and is proportioned handsomely, having good carriage, and moves gracefully.

—Newspaper men by virtue of their office become acquainted with many men afflicted as is Guiteau. Their lunacy seldom goes further than making life a burden to editors.

—Charley Jackson has settled down to business now, and it makes him throw back his shoulders when the thought flashes through his mind, that he is at the head of a household.

—We hear it whispered frequently that Pommert Bros. are the proprietors of the Seventh street barber shop. Last week we stated that Mr. Jesse Long was the boss.

—Now the society lady carries a pocket book about the dimensions of a Saratoga trunk, and gives the merchant the "big finger" for a paper of pins.

—"There is always an ass in every legislature," remarks an Albany paper. Well, that's letting the other forty or fifty fellows down mighty easy.

—The Cabin saloon must keep in stock some soul-stirring drinks, judging from the songs and loud peals of laughter sounding daily with in her walls.

—Doc. Cowan's mare and her keeper together have only four sound legs and one eye. Near enough to the grave to draw a pension.

—Commissioners were in session last Friday to consider some ditch matters in Franklin township, and other business now pending.

—Fred Forsbey, acknowledged by all to be one of the best boot and shoe workmen in the county, will give his services to Billy Little, hereafter.

Personal Notes.

—Geo. Staley is back.

—Late Wright has gone home.

—Bill Latson left for Hudson, this week.

—Jim Anderson went to Michigan yesterday.

—Al. Markle, of Hudson, was in town Monday.

—C. H. Brown, of Concord, called on us Friday.

—Chris. Ashelman went to Chicago yesterday.

—Miss Laura Keeran, of Butler, was in town Saturday.

—C. Linkenhelt, of Garrett, gave us a call Saturday.

—Miss Grace Bowers returned to Bucyrus, Ohio, Monday.

—Mrs. S. Swineford went east on the Wabash last Friday.

—Sheriff Leas went west on the Wabash, Monday morning.

—Mrs. Amos. Miller has returned to her home at Hickville.

—Mrs. F. D. Ryan has returned home from her Michigan visit.

—Fred Davis returned from Rome Saturday He found his pants.

—Sim. Snyder and wife, of Angola, are guests of D. D. Snyder.

—Buck Allen has been suffering with rheumatism in his "shanks."

—Miss Lilian Morse, of Angola, is visiting Mrs. W. J. Austin this week.

—Gus. J. Beck, the well known baker of Waterloo, was in town last Friday.

—The family of Wm. McIntyre spent Sunday at Sedan, visiting relatives.

—J. R. Nichols, of Spencerville, paid his respects to the COURIER Saturday.

—Lafe Miller was at Corunna Sunday, and converted himself into a baby cab.

—Mr. Harrison, assistant teacher in the normal school, returned last week.

J. D. Kelley was in town last Friday. He had an interest in those ditch cases.

—James Johnson, of Garrett, was in town Tuesday. He don't come over often.

—General Blair came over Tuesday. Business connected with court, we presume.

—Miss Anise Russell, of Albion, is staying with the family of Dr. Sebring this week.

—John Cotrill, of Newville, dropped in to chat with us a few minutes, the other day.

—A brother of W. H. McQuiston, from West Point, is whiling away a few days in town.

—Charley Sthair, who has been working at Churubusco for several weeks, is back again.

—John Robbins, the popular hardware drummer, took in the State of Michigan this week.

—Joe Loveland, son and sister Molly, were in town last week, enjoying a day of pleasure and rest.

—Miss Nettie Montgomery, of Milford, Junction, is visiting with her sister, Mrs. W. Rakestraw.

—Orson Edge, of Waterloo, came over Monday. Guess a man can pay us a visit without giving his reasons.

—Pete Eldridge, who has been in the State of Wisconsin for over a year, is talking of coming home soon.

—Mitch Houston is still at Mt. Clemens, Mich., and is reported worse. He has sent for his wife to join him.

—Allen Shultz, of Franklin, was in town Friday on business connected with the ditch east of Jones' Corners.

—L. P. Welling has moved to Jackson. He has been promoted, and will hereafter act as car tracer for his road.

—John Coder, of Spencerville, was in town Monday to advertise some lost stock. See notice in this week's paper.

—Frank Dills will leave soon for Dakota Territory and join the corps of Engineers of whom Theo. Reed is captain.

—Mr. Isaac Ochs and family visited at the farm residence of Mr. Groscop Sunday. A little country air is refreshing.

—H. T. Smith, Phil Plum, W. H. Leas and J. C. Boyer, of Waterloo, together with their families, were in town Sunday.

—Elza Shaffer came from Albion last Saturday, via the overland route, not stopping to let down fences nor shove back bars.

—Sol. Barney, J. A. Provines and Beeks Erick, of Spencerville, were in town Monday on business connected with the burglary case last Friday.

—Henry Wartenslaben is recovering slowly. We are always glad to note these facts of those who have been so unfortunate as to be a victim of disease this warm, sultry weather.

—Miss Jennie Cowan has come home again after being hospitably entertained, and enjoying a pleasant rest at Rome City. She was in attendance at the Assembly.

—A very pleasant party called on the COURIER Saturday. It consisted of Mrs. Wm. McIntyre and her two sisters, Julia and Little McTighe, a brother from Little Rock, Ark., Mr. McIntyre and his nephew J. A. McIntyre, of Sedan.

—Jonathan Rummel, superintendent of the county farm, called on the junior editor, last week, and made him happy by the present of as nice a lot of vegetables as the heart of man could wish to see. Rummel don't do things by halves.

—Jack Little left via the Wabash for Belview, Ohio, last Saturday. He boarded the train with outstretched arms and we'll wager five to one that he'll have a Pitcher full to a short time after the brakes are put on that train at Belview. From there he will go to Toledo, and accept a situation on the daily Telegram.

—We have heard of fellows who could'nt get away from the heels of a mule until the animal gave them about one hint and a half dozen kicks. But this is a little different. While Frank Leas was feeding his father's horses, one of them "basted" away on his right thigh until he moved the whole frame into the further corner of the barn, and left it remain there until it re-gained vigor enough for Frank to wiggle to the whip rack. There was a little ring performance in that vicinity for a few minutes, with bailiff Frank Leas the managing figure.

—One of Becher's boys has turned himself into a tonsorial artist, and scrapes the citizens of Corunna, Fridays and Saturdays of each week.

—A little child of Mr. and Mrs. Walstrom, living on Sixth street, between Main and Jackson, was buried in the cemetery last Friday.

—John Krueger has built a new arch in his ashery. John is a handy fellow and can lay brick in a workmanlike manner.

Take a Dose.

GOOD FOR THE YOUNG OR FOR THE OLD

The man who gets huffy over a newspaper joke, should be placed upon a bridleless, bare-backed Texas pony and headed on a bee-line for Indianapolis. An editor may toil and worry to prepare articles that reflect the better sentiments of a community. He may pen sound articles that tend to build up the moral and financial status of the town and county, and labor hard to help build up the material interests of the community and but little notice is taken of his efforts. But let him insert a three line local reflecting on some citizen who has been guilty of wrong doing, or take exceptions to certain practices in a community and the writer gets "h—ll on the Wabash"—he is denounced in every possible manner. A three line personal item will get the editor more curses than a column of the best and most sensible matter will bring him commendations. We make this note only to let people see what consummate asses some persons do make of themselves. If we publish the facts concerning those who have given themselves dead away in some supposed cute manner, we think we are doing them a favor—it will prompt them to be more careful in the future. Take it cool, boys. We don't propose to fold our arms and ask you what we shall write.

Narrow Escape.

JOHNNY PICKER COMES WITHIN A QUARTER OF AN INCH OF THAT OTHER COUNTRY.

While several men were cleaning brick at the school house building last Friday, there was a favorite trowel among the party which each one of the workmen had an inclination to use. Charley Picker was using the instrument, and Billy Armstrong was told by the owner of it, Johnny Picker, to take it away from Charley. They tussled for some time, when Armstrong gave up the attempt, and called on Johnny for assistance. Johnny was going to "show 'em how it was done." They went at it "bruin style," and Johnny fell to the ground taking Charley and the trowel along with him. In the fall an ugly gash was cut in the lower extremities of Johnny's abdomen, and the attending physician says that one quarter of an inch deeper was all that would have been necessary for Johnny to abandon the art of cleaning brick here below. There was no malice on the part of anyone, but just a friendly scuffle.

A Fight in Jail.

Monday morning witnessed rather an unusual scene at the jail. McIntyre and the two other men concerned in the attempted robbery of Barney Bros. store, at Spencerville, an account of which is given elsewhere, were occupying the same room in the jail When the two men learned that McIntyre was about to be discharged they began to understand that he had played them false. A few inquiries satisfied them on this head, and without further ceremony they pitched into McIntyre, and gave him a most unmerciful beating. McIntyre could do little more than to ward off a few of the blows, and as they came at him with chairs, &c., he cried lustily for help. He was rescued at last, and soon afterwards liberated as no charge could be brought against him.

A Little Premature.

FRENCH PETE STILL IN THE LAND OF THE LIVING.

Our article last week in regard to the death of French Pete was furnished us, by what we thought, was reliable information, but it seems to be incorrect, We are told now that Pete was not at Kendallville at all, and that some one at Waterloo, put the rumor afloat as published in the COURIER of last week. He was hurt badly while engaged in a general row at Stryker, Ohio, but is recovering rapidly. Pete has many historical events recorded in his life, and among one of the most interesting is, that he read his own obituary several days before he thought of crossing the mystic river.

Too Thin.

MEN WHO READ THIER NEIGHBOR'S PAPER.

Each week we notice a number of newspaper dead beats hanging about our business houses on Thursday waiting to grab the COURIER from the hands of its owner. There are one or two who are up into the office Thursday morning, before the press is fairly started, and make an awkward dive for the first paper that comes from the press. Did these fellows ever think that it takes money to run a newspaper; that our workmen have to be paid a good sum each Saturday; that paper bills are not allowed to accumulate, and many other things that we might mention?

Lucky Ones.

The drawing of the prizes at the Catholic church gift distribution was well managed, and evidently satisfactory. Of the seventy-five persons who drew prizes, the following are among the first. The first prize, a lady's watch, was drawn by Peter Behler, the second, third, fourth and fifth, also watches, were drawn by Dr Serman, Silas Wondre, Frank Yarde and Nettie Yarde respectively. The management of the fair reflects great credit on Father Young and his assistants. We have not learned to what extent it has benefited the church but presume it is satisfactory

Spencerville Again.

Last Friday night three men broke into Barney's store at Spencerville, and while getting things in shape, were caught and made prisoners. One of the gang, the well-known [illegible] McIntyre, had given Mr. Barney notice that he and a few chosen spirits would break into the store that night. Hence everything was in readiness to receive them, and their capture was easy. McIntyre claims to be a detective, but many believe he is only leading men into these scrapes in order to gain notoriety. All three were brought to town and lodged in jail Saturday morning.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1881.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Bishop Kerfoot, of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, died at Meyersdale, Pa., after a prolonged illness.

The saw-mill of the Sherman Lumber Company, at Potsdam, N. Y., with 2,000,000 feet of lumber, and eighteen houses, were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $100,000.... John A. Appleton, a member of the eminent publishing firm of D. Appleton & Co., died in New York the other day.... Justice Clifford, of the United States Supreme Court, has suffered the amputation of his foot for gangrene.

THE WEST.

Just outside of St. Paul, a freight train of forty-three cars on the Omaha road broke apart, the rear section starting back down a high grade, and striking another train at the depot at the rate of sixty miles per hour. George Trider, a veteran engineer, was killed, and a loss of $50,000 inflicted. The track was rooted up for fifteen rods.... Ex-Senator Phineas W. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, is dead.

The Williams brothers, fugitives from justice in Illinois, killed Deputy Sheriff Coleman, of St. Croix county, Wis., and Charles Coleman, formerly Sheriff of Pepin county. The slaughter occurred at Durant, twenty-two miles south of Menominee, while the officers were attempting to arrest the outlaws. Gov. Smith offers $500 reward for their capture, and has authorized the use of the Ludington Guards in running them down.

Iowa and parts of Illinois were visited by severe storms Sunday, the 10th inst., which did great damage to crops, railroad tracks and buildings.

A cyclone swept over the vicinity of Fairfield, Minn., killing four persons and wrecking all the houses and bridges in its path.

THE SOUTH.

A number of persons took refuge in a barn at Decatur, Ala., during the prevalence of a thunder-storm, when a stroke of lightning killed four and seriously injured eight.... Samuel Irivias was hanged at Alexandria, Rapides parish, La., for the murder of A. J. Hanna.

In a long interview at Mississippi City Jefferson Davis declared the attempt on the President's life only an outgrowth of the greedy scramble for office which has of late years been so marked.

The body of Thomas K. Pugh, the son of ex-Senator Pugh, was found recently by a Mexican scouting party near Carrezal, Chihuahua. The body was horribly mutilated, and Mr. Pugh was evidently tortured to death by the Apache Indians, into whose hands he fell. There were three gunshot wounds in his body.

POLITICAL.

In accordance with the arrangement of the previous day, fifteen Republican Senators and fifty-one Assemblymen of the New York Legislature met in caucus at Albany, on the 8th inst., to place in nomination two Republican candidates to succeed Conkling and Platt. A letter was read from Chauncey M. Depew announcing his withdrawal from the contest. The nominees were ex-Vice President Wheeler, Gov. Cornell, Congressman Warner Miller, Congressman Crowley, Sherman Rogers, and Lyman Tremaine. On the fourth ballot Miller received sixty-two votes, and his nomination was then made unanimous. Candidates to succeed Conkling were then balloted for, and on the second ballot Congressman Eldridge G. Lapham received sixty-five votes, all that were cast, and was declared the nominee of the caucus, which then adjourned. The Stalwarts met in caucus, and resolved to support Conkling and Crowley.

In the contest for the short-term Senatorship at Albany, on the 9th inst., Potter received 50 votes, Lapham 67, Conkling 31 and Wheeler 1. The vote for the long term gave Miller 68 votes, Kernan 50 and Wheeler 19.

The ballot at Albany on the 11th inst. for a Senator for the short term gave Lapham 60 votes, with 70 necessary to choice; Potter 49, and Conkling 28. For the long term Miller had 68 votes, Kernan 43, and Wheeler 18. A committee of five, appointed at a recent meeting of the stalwart Republican members, made an appeal to the joint caucus committee to unite in a call for a caucus, arguing that the election of the present candidates, Lapham and Miller, would cause two vacancies in the national House of Representatives at a critical period. The Chairman of the Senate caucus committee replied to the effect that the Conkling faction neglected the opportunity to participate in just such a gathering as it now asked for.

In the ballot for Senator for the short term at Albany, on the 12th inst., Lapham had 68 votes, Potter 52, and Conkling 32, with 78 necessary to a choice. For the long term Miller received 70, Kernan 52, and Wheeler 21.... The Wisconsin Greenback State Convention was held at Watertown on the 12th inst. The following State ticket was nominated by acclamation: Governor, E. P. Allis, Milwaukee; Lieutenant Governor, David Giddings, Fond du Lac; Secretary of State, Wilson Hopkins, Chippewa; Treasurer, Gerhart Lammers, Sheboygan; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. A. Garner, Wood; Attorney General, Joel Foster, Pierce; Railway Commissioner, T. G. Branson, Crawford; Insurance Commissioner, L. Merrill, Dodge.

In the balloting at Albany, on the 13th inst., Lapham led for the short term with 69 votes, Potter had 58 and Conkling 32. For the long term Miller had 71, with 78 necessary for a choice; Kernan 51 and Wheeler 23. Conkling told a New York reporter that under no circumstances would he withdraw.... The Democratic Convention of the State of Ohio met at Columbus July 13 and nominated John W. Bookwalter, of Springfield, to the Governorship. Other nominations were made as follows: For Lieutenant Governor, Edgar M. Johnson, of Cincinnati; for Supreme Judge, E. F. Bingham, of Franklin; for State Treasurer, A. F. Winslow, of Cleveland; for Attorney General, Frank C. Dougherty, of Highland county; Public Works, John Crowe, of Defiance. The platform declares in favor of "tariff for revenue only, levied and adjusted in its details with a view to equity in the public burdens and the encouragement of productive industries without creating monopolies."

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Treasury submitted to the Attorney General the question whether national banks should be permitted to deposit any lawful money other than greenbacks to the credit of the fund for the redemption of circulating notes. A decision has been prepared holding that gold and silver may be deposited for the redemption of circulating notes, and that coin may be paid out by the Treasurer in redemption of national-bank notes.

Secretary Kirkwood has decided that pensioners who have been inmates of soldiers' homes, and who leave these institutions without the consent of the managers, are entitled to receive their pensions directly. He holds that, if the care of soldiers' homes is not given to, or is repudiated by the soldier, the soldier, and not the institution, is entitled to the pension.... Pension Commissioner Dudley recommends the discharge of a hundred clerks and a reduction to the salaries of over sixty. The unadjusted claims number 120,000.

D. O. Mills has given to the University of California $75,000 to endow a chair of intellectual and moral philosophy.

There has been unparalleled suffering from the heat at many points in the country. Many cases of sunstroke are reported. Large amounts of grain have been harvested by moonlight, the harvesters dreading the sun's rays. The mercury at St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and other cities ranged from 98 to 108 in the shade.

Passenger rates from the seaboard to the Western cities are wholly demoralized. The war was commenced by the Boston and Albany road, which made a reduction of $5, and was sustained by similar rates on the Erie, New York Central and Baltimore and Ohio until the fare from New York to Chicago is now $16 by the American lines and $14 by the Canadian. East-bound rates from Chicago have been fluctuating from $20 down to $12. The prediction is recorded that $5 will soon purchase a ticket from this city to the seaboard, and that a reckless war is at hand.

A fire at Joliette, Quebec, consumed nineteen buildings, valued at over $100,000.

Capt. Lundborg, a Swedish naval architect, has made designs for a passenger steamer to cross the Atlantic in six days. The vessel will be 500 feet long and 74 broad, and be propelled by four compound engines, having 22,800 horse-power. Lundborg's main idea is to construct a ship whose main body shall divide the water horizontally, and he projects the hull below the water-line.... Delia Poster, a religious monomaniac confined in the Tongue Point Lunatic Asylum, near Montreal, fancied that her cellmate, Gertrude Roberts, was a frightful dragon intent on devouring herself and all the other inmates. The Kerry jurors did not pay much attention to Judge Lawson's charge, however, as, notwithstanding his instructions, they acquitted all the persons charged with agrarian offenses.... The remains of Pope Pius IX. were removed from St. Peters to the Church of San Lorenzo, in Rome, at midnight, Tuesday, July 12. An immense procession of members of the Italian Catholic societies followed the remains. There were some interruptions by persons who shouted, "Long live Italy!" but the disturbers were dispersed by the military.

Loafing.

Does the young man who persists in being a loafer ever reflect how much less it would cost to be a decent, respectable man? Does he imagine that loaferism is more economical than gentility? Anybody can be a gentleman, if he chooses to be, without much cost, but it is mighty expensive being a loafer. It costs time, in the first place, days, weeks and months of it; in fact, about all the time he has, for no man can be a first-class loafer without devoting his whole time to it. The occupation, well followed, hardly affords time for eating, sleeping, dri——, we had almost said drinking, but on reflection we will except that. The loafer finds time to drink whenever invited, at the cost of friends. Once fully embarked on the sea of loaferdom, and you bid farewell to every friendly sail that sails under an honest and legitimate flag. Your consorts will only be the buccaneers of society. It costs money, for, though the loafer may not earn a cent or have one for months, the time lost might have procured him much money, if devoted to industry instead of sloth. It costs health, vigor, comfort, all the true pleasures of living, honor, dignity, self-respect, and the respect of the world when living, and, finally, all right of consideration when dead. Be a gentleman, then; it is far cheaper.

GARFIELD.

Washington, July 8.

CONDITION OF THE SUFFERING PATIENT.

Yesterday was another day of favorable symptoms in the condition of the President, the most favorable being the discharge of "laudable" or healthy pus from the wound. This gives the physicians great confidence that there is no danger from blood poisoning. The yellow color of the skin has to some extent disappeared, and with it all fear of the effects of jaundice. The President partook of more nourishment than on any day since the shooting. The weather was very favorable to the condition, and the work of producing artificially a better atmosphere in the sick-room is being pushed. The quickened pulse arises from the process of suppuration, which was expected, and which in the opinion of the physicians is progressing very favorably. The President maintains his courage and hopefulness, and the chances of his recovery increased 100 per cent. yesterday.

The only message of sympathy which has been shown the President is the one sent by Gen. Grant. He has also been shown the resolutions adopted by the Williams College alumni. He has been told, however, that the public anxiety in his regard has been intense, and that telegrams and letters of sympathy were coming from all parts of the civilized world.

SEEKING NOTORIETY.

It is stated that a number of prominent Washington lawyers are anxious to defend Guiteau on account of the notoriety it may give them. Some of these persons have sought access to Guiteau, but have been refused on the instructions of District Attorney Corkhill. Insanity will be the ground of defense, but it is quite certain that the prosecution will try to show that Guiteau is sane and entirely responsible for his acts.

NO CONSPIRACY.

Chief Brooks, of the Secret Service Division, who has been investigating with a view to ascertaining whether Guiteau was a member of a conspiracy, has come to the conclusion that there has been no conspiracy, but that Guiteau acted alone. Chief Brooks does not think Guiteau is insane. He is only eccentric, but his eccentricity is of a fanatical and exceedingly mean variety.

CONCERNING GUITEAU.

"When will the matter be laid before the Grand Jury?" asked a reporter of District Attorney Corkhill.

"No action will be taken regarding the case until the result of the President's wound is finally determined."

"What can be done with Guiteau if the President lives?"

"If the President lives, the crime will be assault with intent to kill."

"Are you ready yet to give out the papers taken from Guiteau?"

"That question is asked me by everybody, as if there was something very grave contained in them. These papers are not so very important. The only very important thing I have is a full detailed history of the crime from its inception to its culmination, which I believe is accurately true. That, in due time, will be given to the public. I will say in addition that I think it exceedingly cruel, considering the fervid state of the public mind on this subject, and the horror with which every man regards the assassin, that any man's name should be mentioned in connection with him. He is an egotistical, presuming, dishonest man, attempting to borrow money of people; claiming acquaintance with persons whom he only knew by the fact of his going to them and speaking to them; speaking of persons as his friends whom he had no acquaintance with at all; attempting to obtain money by representing himself as a man of great political influence, both here and in New York. To mention the names of these citizens in connection with this man at this time is improper and unjust. While everybody who has known anything about this man at all has been perfectly willing to detail to me his entire relations with Guiteau, still there is scarcely one of them but has requested that his name be kept from the public."

"He was in the habit," continued Col. Corkhill, speaking of Guiteau, "of going to the Riggs House, to the Arlington, and to Willard's, occupying the reading-rooms and conversing with people occasionally, although he was not generally communicative."

"I would like to hear more about that detailed statement."

"The statement to which I refer is a detailed statement of the crime, why it was done, when it was done, and just how it was done, given by the prisoner himself after I had told him certain facts that I had ascertained. I then got from him what I believe was a correct statement. He was so solicitous about its being correct that he even sent a messenger to me to return to the jail, as he wanted to say to me something that had escaped his memory. He was afraid I would learn it somewhere else, and then think he had concealed something from me."

LETTER FROM EX-SENATOR CONKLING.

The following correspondence between ex-Senator Conkling and Attorney General MacVeagh has been made public:

CONKLING TO MACVEAGH.

Fifth Avenue Hotel,
New York, July 5.

My Dear Sir: In the abhorrence with which all decent men alike shudder at the attempt to murder the President, I have given thought to a matter to which your attention may or may not have turned. Our criminal code treats premeditated homicide in all cases alike, irrespective of the victim. Murder being visited by the greatest penalty, perhaps no distinction between one case and another could be founded on the public relations held by the person slain. But, in the case of an attempt to murder, a broad distinction can be made between assailing the life of an individual and an attempt to take life of special value to the whole people. The shocking occurrence of Saturday demands that the definition and punishment of assaults aimed at high executive officers, whether successful or not, should be made thoroughly rigorous. The man who attempts the life of a President, if morally responsible, commits an offense which the nation ought to guard against and punish by the exertion of all the power civilized nations may employ. I suggest this as deserving of consideration. My profound sympathies are with the President and with all of you every hour. The conflict of reports keeps hope and fear striving with each other, with nothing stable except the facts and trust that the worst is past. I wish you would express to the President my deepest sympathy in this hour, which should hush all discords and enlist prayers for his safe deliverance. Please, also, give to Mrs. Garfield my most respectful condolence. Trusting that all will be well, cordially yours, Roscoe Conkling.

MACVEAGH TO CONKLING.

Washington, D. C., July 7.

The Hon. Roscoe Conkling, Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York:

Thanks for your letter of the 5th, which has just reached me. Its suggestions will be carefully considered, and its kind message of sympathy will be conveyed to the President and Mrs. Garfield at the earliest opportunity. Wayne MacVeagh.

A MUNIFICENT GIFT.

Postmaster General James received a telegram from George Wilson, Secretary of the New York Chamber of Commerce, requesting the Postmaster General to say to Mrs. Garfield that the members of the New York Chamber of Commerce have subscribed $150,000 to be presented to her, both as a token of their sincere esteem and sympathy and as a means of relieving the mind of the President entirely from anxiety with respect to the future of his family. To this telegram Postmaster General James sent the following reply:

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.,
July 7.

George Wilson, Esq., Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, New York City:

Your dispatch has been handed to Mrs. Garfield. On receipt of it she remarked that there was so much that was touching and beautiful in the sympathy of the people of the whole country that she did not dare trust herself to think of it.

Thomas L. James, Postmaster General.

GEN. SHERMAN.

"In your opinion, General, is there any foundation for the belief that the shooting was the outcome of a conspiracy, however small or insignificant, political or otherwise?" asked a New York Herald correspondent.

"Not at all; not at all," said the General, with evident impatience. "To talk of a conspiracy of any kind in any way is to talk the wildest bosh. The dreadful act was committed by a fool. He don't even rise to the dignity of a crazy man; and if he is what may strictly be termed insane, he is so because of his wonderful self-conceit and consuming love for notoriety. Conspiracy! Not at all. It was simply the act of an individual more or less out of his natural gear, and, therefore, partially responsible for his act. From what I have heard and read, this is my opinion of the miserable wretch and his motives."

THE NINTH DAY.

Washington, July 11.

Throughout yesterday and the day before the President continued as favorable as could possibly be expected in view of the serious character of his wound, and up to midnight the bulletins, official and otherwise, were in the highest degree reassuring. An extremely encouraging feature of the case was the disposition and ability of the sufferer to obtain rest through natural and healthy sleep, his experience in this regard being more satisfactory than at any time since he was shot. So marked has been the improvement, in general that the physicians in charge of the case no longer hesitate to speak very hopefully of the outcome. The patient is fed chicken broth, oatmeal gruel, and milk with a touch of rum. On yesterday three of the President's children were permitted to take his hand and exchange greetings. Several inventors have been permitted to put machines in the basement of the White House for cooling the air in the patient's chamber. Only Mrs. Garfield and the attendants were permitted in the sick-chamber yesterday. The President asked to see a copy of the bulletins sent out, and remarked that it did not seem necessary to keep his name before the country in such a manner.

As Col. Rockwell stood by the President's bedside, yesterday, the President said: "I hear that the Catholics have been saying masses for my recovery. Is that true, Rockwell?"

"It is," responded the latter.

"Were they spontaneous or ordered?" asked the President.

"Both," said Rockwell.

"Well," said the President, "when I get up I must make some recognition of this Christian act."

Mrs. Garfield says that she is confident of the President's recovery. She telegraphed herself for Dr. Boynton, in whom she feels very great confidence, and his presence has increased her confidence in the President's recovery. Since the arrival of Dr. Boynton Mrs. Garfield has been greatly relieved, and she no longer hesitates to leave her husband's bedside and take rides in the open air.

Letters and telegrams of congratulation on the President's favorable symptoms and of sympathy with his sufferings continue to be received at the White House and at the State Department from all parts of the world. Yesterday morning a bushel basketful of such letters and telegrams was received by Secretary Blaine. Many of these letters contained handsomely engrossed resolutions adopted by civic societies, municipal bodies and business associations. Yung Wing, the Chinese Minister, writing from Avon, Ct., sent a letter conveying his and Mrs. Yung Wing's sympathies, and saying that the Chinese Government will hail with delight every symptom of improvement in the President's condition; the leading London weeklies, like the Spectator, the Saturday Review and Examiner, contain articles expressing the most warm sympathy with the President, and the keenest desire for his recovery; Minister White telegraphs from Berlin that letters, articles and telegrams of a congratulatory character have been received by him from all parts of Germany; from every nation of the civilized world, and from every city, town and hamlet of our own nation, messages of sympathy and congratulation are received.

PROGRESSING FAVORABLY.

Washington, July 12.

The President has passed another favorable day, and the hope that he will recover has almost grown into confidence. The Jennings system of reducing the temperature of the sick-room has worked admirably. The temperature yesterday was about 76 degrees. The change has been very grateful to the patient, and he has expressed his thanks to the inventor. He asked for solid food again yesterday, and was given a piece of toast, which he partook of. No gastric disturbance followed. The Cabinet officers are in high glee at the prospect of their chief's recovery, and so are the people. The physicians, while not pronouncing positively, seem to be very confident that he will pull through. Dr. Frank B. Hamilton, the eminent surgeon, of New York, says that, while the President is not a well man by any means, the present symptoms are not alarming to a surgeon, and that nature may be expected to do all that remains to be done. Dr. Bliss says that by the end of the week the President will be out of danger. Dr. F. D. Weiss has demonstrated that a ball such as the one fired by Guiteau could enter the body between the tenth and eleventh ribs, four inches from the spinal column, and yet produce no fatal injury. Dr. Carnochan, of New York, another prominent surgeon, believes the patient has passed the critical periods, and is now out of danger. Dr. Reyburn said that an effort to remove the ball would not be made until the operation could be performed without danger. He expected to be able to say that at the end of the week the President would be absolutely out of danger.

Written applications for office are tossed into the waste-basket.

The assassin, Guiteau, continues to demand newspapers and cigars. A sympathetic female called at the jail with fruit and delicacies for the vicious brute, but the authorities administered a rebuke. Guiteau admits that he slipped into the President's room two days before the shooting, but the officials thrust him out.

STILL GAINING.

Washington, July 13.

President Garfield's condition yesterday was an improvement over that of Monday, when a feverish attack in the afternoon created some alarm among the medical staff. The fever symptoms, indicated by an increased temperature, returned in modified form, but, being considered a feature of the case, did not cause anxiety. It is generally allowed by his physicians that satisfactory progress is being made, although fears are entertained that weeks may elapse before the President is a well man. The patient's pulse, respiration and temperature increase every afternoon and decrease every morning, but from day to day they show little change. But whatever change they do undergo is in the right direction. This fact, together with the favorable suppuration of the wound, and other symptoms, all afford ground for a hope for the President's recovery that grows stronger day by day. Milk punch, consisting of twenty-four parts of milk and one part of punch, continues to be the chief article of his diet, while milk toast serves as an entree, and there are relieves of sulphate of quinine and morphine. Yesterday he had some perfectly natural sleep, not having taken any morphine since the previous day. As it has been found necessary to administer a small amount of morphine hypodermically every night in order to induce sleep, this fact that he has had sleep without the assistance of a drug is decidedly encouraging. Last evening the President said with a touch of querulousness that he wondered if the few remaining years of his life, which were all that he could hope for, were worth the fight he was making to gain them. His wife assured him that the prolongation of his life was well worth all that it cost, when he replied quickly that he had no idea of relaxing his efforts in the direction of recovery.

TWELFTH DAY.

Washington, July 14.

The condition of President Garfield, this morning, is better than at any time since he was shot, and the hopefulness of his surgeons almost amounts to confidence in his ultimate recovery. The fever has decreased. At 2 o'clock this morning his pulse was below 100, and his temperature about 100. Dr. Bliss said at 10 o'clock last night that he was satisfied the culminating point had been passed, and that the condition of the President will steadily improve from day to day. Suppuration is progressing naturally, the wound has a healthy appearance, and there is little to dread now from secondary hemorrhage or blood-poisoning. The patient continues to take more nourishment each day, and there has been no gastric disturbance recently. Yesterday, in addition to eating a slice of toast, he chewed the breast of a woodcock, but did not swallow the fiber.

Dr. Woodward, one of the physicians in attendance, stated yesterday that the patient has suffered from "circumscribed peritonitis" since the second day, but that its extent has been reduced each day until now it is scarcely perceptible. He says the statement of the inflammation shows that the bullet is doing no harm. On being asked if there were other signs of improvement, he said that persons without any medical knowledge could not fail to recognize a great improvement in the President's condition during the past few days by simply looking at him. "His eye is brighter, his color better, and he moves with less difficulty. An increased amount of nourishment has been given with good results, and the wound is doing well," said the doctor. Dr. Bliss said: "If no new complication arises the President will be substantially out of danger by Saturday." Dr. Hamilton said that for his part he expects the President to recover, and that he finds added cause for confidence every hour. "The President," he says, "is doing as well as can be expected, and his chances of recovery are excellent."

The refrigeration apparatus constructed in the basement of the White House works admirably. It supplied the President's room with 18,000 cubic feet of pure dry air at a temperature of 54 degrees yesterday. The coolness of the sick-room has an excellent effect on the patient.

Before he went to sleep last night the President asked Dr. Reyburn what was the news, and the doctor replied by telling him that "the Governors of several States had in view to issue, when the President should be out of danger, a proclamation for a general day of thanksgiving and praise to God for the answered prayers of the nation." The patient seemed to be greatly touched and gratified at this information. Col. Rockwell remarked to the President that "the heart of the nation was in his room." The words seemed to impress him greatly, and afterward he murmured in his sleep: "The heart of the nation will not let the old soldier die."

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Washington, July 15.

Each day the President's condition shows steady improvement. There is no reason to doubt his continued progress. He raised his bill of fare yesterday by eating a roast-beef sandwich half the size of his hand. He said that he was beginning to tire of baby food. He would have eaten another sandwich if the doctors had thought it best. The temperature of the President's room and of the ones adjoining was kept down to 75 degrees. The President did not indulge in any despondent talk. He seemed to realize, more than he has any day this week, his improvement.

The nourishment taken by the President is slightly increased from day to day. When he can take a fair amount of food without causing fever, or overtasking his weakened system, a rapid gain in strength may be looked for. Until then he must, of course, remain very weak, but the abatement of his fever, the diminution of pain and the favorable changes in other directions indicate that it will not be long before he can take an amount of solid food that will have a marked effect on his strength.

There is no truth in the statement published that the doctors in charge proposed to see if they could locate the bullet by electric appliances. They are quite content to let the bullet alone for the present, and have no idea of having the President worried with experiments of this kind. The Cabinet people are so well satisfied with the President's progress that they begin to think they will be able to take their families away within the next week or ten days.

Postmaster General James telegraphed to New York last night: "The President is doing splendidly. He is surely out of the woods."

Ex-Senator Conkling called at the White House yesterday. He did not enter, but sent his card to Mrs. Garfield, saying that he knew it would be impossible for him to see the President, and he did not wish to bother her with an interview. He expressed cordial sympathy and his wishes for the speedy recovery of the President.

The flood of false statements about Guiteau and his crime have prompted District Attorney Corkhill to give to the public an accurate account of his movements. Guiteau arrived in Washington March 6 and put up at the Ebbit House, where he remained only one day; he thereafter roomed at various places in the Capital City. On the 18th of May he determined to kill the President, but had not money enough to buy a pistol. Toward the end of May he visited O'Meara's gun shop in Washington, examined several pistols, and remarked that he wanted one of large caliber. Soon after he succeeded in borrowing $15 from a too-benevolent Washington gentleman. Of this sum he spent $10 in purchasing the pistol with which he attempted to kill the President. Having provided himself with the pistol and with sufficient ammunition, he began to practice with it, firing at a board and at other marks. On the Sunday of the 12th of June he followed the President to the Christian Church with the intention of killing him there, but he saw that, on making the attempt, he would be most likely to shoot somebody else beside the President, so he left. Before leaving, however, he noticed that the President sat by an open window. Guiteau examined this window, and came to the conclusion that he would shoot the President from it through the head on Sunday, the 19th of June. He learned, however, that the President was about to leave for Long Branch with Mrs. Garfield on Saturday, the 18th, and went to the depot, after having practiced with his revolver that morning, his mind fully made up to do the deed. Mrs. Garfield, as she leaned on the President's arm at the depot, looked so very weak and pale, however, that Guiteau says he had not the heart to shoot him in her presence, and, feeling that he would have another opportunity, he left the depot. On Wednesday, the 23d of June, the assassin followed the President, who went out riding with his son and United States Marshal Henry, but as the carriage did not stop the fiend was foiled that night. On the evening of the 1st of July he followed the President to Secretary Blaine's residence, and then dogged the President and Secretary Blaine as they walked from the latter's residence to the White House, but got no opportunity to carry out his murderous purpose that evening. The following morning after breakfast he went to the Pennsylvania depot, loitered around for a considerable time, examined his pistol to see that all was right, and, when the President entered the ladies' waiting-room, he walked up behind him and fired two shots.

A Warning to Mothers.

Here is a warning to spanking mothers: Mrs. R. W. Johnson, of Anamosa, attempted to administer a corrective to one of her children in the good, old-fashioned way which we all know more or less about from extremely sad experience, to wit: across the maternal knee. The little one held in her hand a piece of glass and as the admonishing palm was descending the child instinctively threw back her hand and the glass opened the radial artery of the mother's wrist. The blood gushed out in a stream half way across the room, and had not medical assistance been promptly secured the consequences might have been fatal.—Sioux City (Iowa) Journal.

A close observer claims to have disproved the story about an owl wringing its head off by looking at a man who was walking around it. He writes that he placed an owl on a post, and began to walk rapidly around it. The large round eyes followed him through three circles, and he began to wonder why the head didn't drop off, when he discovered that the neck had a fly-back motion which, when the head had been turned half way around, whisked it back through the circle, and brought the gaze again upon him with such precision and so quickly that the movement had three times escaped his notice.

AUBURN COURIER.

ROSA BONHEUR is getting to be an old woman. She began painting when only 19 years of age, and she is now 58. She has often been paid $500 a day for painting.

TWO WELL-KNOWN London banking firms, with the co-operation of a French syndicate, have taken the Italian loan. To prevent danger in the transportation of so much gold, $80,000,000 will be sent in the course of two years.

ACCORDING to a French paper, the first sheets of M. Littre's great dictionary were sent to press in 1859, and the last in 1872. The manuscript contained nearly 500,000 sheets. The work of composition was only interrupted during the war.

THE best thing the late Lord Beaconsfield did for England, financially, was the expenditure of $20,000,000 for a controlling interest in the Suez canal, which paid a net profit to the stockholders last year of $2,500,000.

ENGLISH people are growing alarmed at the decline of church attendance there. Reports from fifty seven parish churches were obtained for May 1, 1881, and it was found that, with a total seating capacity of 32,455, there were present that morning only 6,731.

FORMAL notices of contests for fifteen seats in the next House of Representatives at Washington, in most cases accompanied by voluminous testimony, are now on file in the Clerk's office of the House. Thirteen of these contested cases are from the South, Alabama alone having four. One is from Maine and one from Iowa.

WHEN Judges as well as doctors disagree who shall decide? A few weeks ago Judge Hardin, of the Marion Circuit Court, Kentucky, decided that the State has a right to prohibit the running of trains on Sunday. Lately, Judge Jackson, of the Jefferson Circuit Court at Louisville, decided that the State has no such power. The Court of Appeals will probably sit upon the question.

AN interesting story is told in Elmira of the attachment of an old gander to a blind horse. The gander, noticing the difficulty the horse had in going around, would all day go in front of the horse leading by a cackle. At night the gander would accompany the horse to the stall, lie under the trough and the horse would supply the gander with food. At length the horse died and the gander refused all food and soon died.

LAST year 12,000 young men of the military age left Germany for the United States, and this year it is probable the number of our immigrants of this class will reach 20,000. The period of military service in Germany is from the age of 20 to 42, and if this emigration continues the army will be greatly weakened by it. Prince Bismarck is seriously alarmed by this tide of emigration, but finds no effective bulwark to prevent its flow.

PARIS has a laboratory in which what people eat and drink is analyzed. It would not do in this country; if people knew just what they were eating they would practice Griscom's theory on half or two-thirds of our so-called luxuries Butter made from dead carcasses, candy from glucose and wine flavored with old boots and drugs would not go down quite as easily if the ingredients were marked on the bill of fare, but as long as American stomachs hold out the thing is likely to continue.

THE Census Bureau gives us the grain product of the United States for the year 1879. From these tables we learn that from 62,326,952 acres planted in corn there were raised 1,772,909,846 bushels; from 35,487,065 acres in wheat the yield was 287,745,626 bushels; 36,150,611 acres of oats produced 407,970,715 bushels; 2,005,466 acres devoted to barley gave us 44,149,479 bushels; the 1,844,321 acres sown in rye brought forth 16,918,795 bushels, and the 856,304 acres of buckwheat gave a return of 9,821,721 bushels. The total acreage for cereals in 1879 was 118,665,619, and the yield nearly 3,000,000,000 bushels, or an average of fifty-four bushels to each individual of our 50,000,000 of population.

THE San Francisco Bulletin tells the story in a few words. Thousands of men who have homes and are in comparative comfort should read and study the lesson and be content. The Bulletin says: "There are not less than 2,000 prospectors in the mountains of California at the present time. Most of them have been prospecting for ten or twenty years. They are all poor. With few exceptions they have been poor and 'hard up' all the time. They do not average 50 cents a day the year round; and no men work harder, or more hours a day. They live on the coarsest and cheapest food, with no luxuries, and wear the cheapest of clothing. But they toil on, month after month and year after year, hopefully and courageously, infatuated and driven forward with the belief that they will 'strike it rich' one of these days, and then they will have a rest and a good time 'down at the Bay' or at the old home 'in the States.'"

BURRELL was for many years a circus performer. He always said that he disliked the business and meant to quit it as soon as he found his daughter, for whom he was constantly looking. His wife had eloped from him in 1867, taking along their child, then 2 years old, and he hoped some time to recognize the girl among the crowds that he daily saw at the performances. In Pittsburgh, a few weeks ago, he discovered a face that he felt sure was the one he had been seeking. He deserted the show, employed detectives to hunt out the girl's history, and collected a great deal of evidence of her being his daughter. She believes so, and wishes to join Burrell; but the family who had brought her up refuse to relinquish her, and the case will go into court.

THERE is a fox-terrier which some time ago made his appearance on the London, Brighton and Southwest railroad, and attached himself to the conductors of the trains with such pertinacity that about eighteen months ago he was presented with a collar inscribed: "Jack, London, B. and S. West R. R. Co." One day he was watched, when his movements were found to be as follows: He arrived from Brighton by a train reaching Steyning at 10:50; there he got out for a minute, but went on by the same train to Henfield. Here he left the train and went to a public house, not far from the station, where a biscuit was given to him, and, after a little walk, took a later train to West Grinstead, where he spent the afternoon, returning to Brighton in time for the last train to Lewes. He generally sits close to the conductor and looks out of the window.

ALL at once the astronomers have changed front, and say that the present great comet, instead of being a mere nebulous thing, has body and substance. They think they have discovered enough carbon in it to burn, and that it is probably a world on fire. In the infinitude of space there must be countless comets. Herschel said that they could be counted by millions, but billions would be better. If the comet be a world ablaze, there is some reason to believe in the orthodox idea of a general conflagration of our planet at some distant age. But the astronomers know very little of comets or planets or suns. A grand and profound mystery surrounds them all. The finite mind has its limits and can never pierce infinity. What little creatures men are when they cannot tell whether the side of the moon seen by them has or has not an atmosphere!

Keeping Children at Home.

A mother who had several fun-loving boys so interested them that they preferred to spend their evenings at home, instead of seeking amusement out-of-doors or going off with questionable companions. The way she did it is told in her own language:

"I remember that children are children, and must have amusements. I fear that the abhorrence with which some good parents regard any play for children is the reason why children go away for pleasure.

"Husband and I used to read history, and at the end of each chapter ask some questions, requiring the answer to be looked up if not given correctly.

"We follow a similar plan with the children; sometimes we play one game and sometimes another, always planning with books, stories, plays, or treats of some kind, to make the evenings at home more attractive than they can be made abroad.

"When there is a good concert, lecture, or entertainment, we all go together to enjoy it; for whatever is worth the price of admission to us older people, is equally valuable to the children; and we let them see that we spare no expense where it is to their advantage to be out of an evening.

"But the greater number of our evenings are spent quietly at home. Sometimes it requires quite an effort to sit quietly, talking and playing with them, when my work-basket is filled with unfinished work, and books and papers lie unread on the table.

"But as the years go by, and I see my boys and girls growing into home loving, modest young men and maidens, I am glad that I made it my rule to give the best of myself to my family."

Lake Mono.

Notwithstanding the steady influx of five large fresh-water creeks and innumerable small streams, its bitter but pellucid waters continue to give a sedimentary analysis of 45 parts soda, 40 parts salt and 15 parts borax and lime. The lake is 29x19 miles in diameter, and more than 200 feet deep in places. It contains two large and several small tufa islands, the first in magnitude having an area of 2,200 acres and the second 1,500 acres. Upon the second island is the crater of a volcano that was in active eruption as late as 1858. Upon the larger island and out 100 feet from it, in seventy feet of water, are boiling springs of asphalt, and no living thing exists in the waters of the lake except the plute shrimp, a pink-eyed worm which attains a length of about three-quarters of an inch.—Bodie Free Press

"ALL there!" Clerk (who was called to see the gas meter): "Is yours a wet or a dry meter, madam?" Young wife (who does not like to show ignorance)—"Well, it is rather damp, I'm afraid!"

INDIANA NEWS.

THE colored people have been having a big Baptist camp-meeting at Muncie.

THERE was in the State Treasury of Indiana, on the 1st day of July, $1,065,055.44.

A ROCKET set fire to the opera house at Fort Wayne, totally destroying it. The loss is about $20,000.

THE Rev. Mr. Harrison, the revival preacher, has been holding a series of meetings in New Albany.

LEWIS SMITH, a soldier of the war of 1812, died recently at Cambridge City, in the 98th year of his age.

IN a quarrel between two engineers at Terre Haute, Eugene Brittany killed William G. Dunn with a hammer.

MRS. NELSON THORNBURG, of Hagerstown, Wayne county, was thrown from her buggy and fatally injured.

WILLIAM SCHROEDER, employed in a spoke factory at Fort Wayne, committed suicide by hanging himself to a tree.

THE hot weather at New Albany is killing off the caterpillars rapidly, without any assistance from the sparrows.

MR. FRANZ HUBLEMANN, a respected German citizen of Tell City, fell into the river at that place, while fishing, and was drowned.

A BLACKSMITH in the Vandalia shops at Terre Haute, named Simeon A. Stone, aged 35 years, and married, was drowned while bathing in the river.

THE prospectus of the Fort Wayne College of Medicine is out. The regular session of 1881-2 will be begun on Tuesday, Sept. 13, 1881, and close March 1, 1882.

MR. SKILES, of Decatur county, deposited $1,117 with Mrs. Brown, and when Mrs. B. went to look for the money, shortly after, it was gone—no one knows where.

OLIVER RHOADES, a young man of Colfax, Clinton county, has become a raving maniac over the loss of $300, which he invested with his brothers in the butcher trade.

BERNARD BROGAN, near Tipton, while binding wheat, bound up in a sheaf a blue-bellied snake, which bit him on the finger. His finger has since swollen, and turned the same color of the snake.

J. C. FOUTS, of New Washington township, Clark county, has an old clock which is a curiosity, from the fact that it is one of two made on Camp creek, by one Thompson, and set up May 12, 1816.

WILLIAM WILLIS and Robert Prunett, living three miles west of New Albany, agreed to settle an old feud and actually faced each other and emptied their revolvers. Willis was dangerously wounded in the face. Prunett was unhurt.

J. C. RICHARDSON, Clerk of Spencer county, has a brick-mold made by the father of Abraham Lincoln in 1828. It is an oak mold, put together with wooden pins, nails at that time not having come West. Mr. Richardson bore off brick from this mold in his 12th year, near Gentryville.

THREE years ago last Christmas, in a fight at Wallace, Fountain county, W. H. Miller struck Henry Elmore on the head with an ax-handle, the blow killing Elmore in a few days. Miller escaped arrest until the 4th inst., when he was attending the celebration in Crawfordsville, and was recognized and arrested.

OSCAR MATHER, of Shelbyville, received a large African milk snake, some eight feet in length, and as large round as a lamp post. The slimy monster was placed in a box and set in the back room of a saloon. Some one raised the lid to look at the reptile, when it escaped. It has not yet been recaptured. It is said to be venomous.

FRANKLIN, Johnson county, has an artesian well of more than ordinary virtue. It was sunk by the Jefferson Railroad Company, and, at a depth of only thirty-four feet, the water flowed out at the top of the well, and still continues to flow. The medical properties of the water are said to be good, and many citizens are already using it.

ROBERT A. RICHEY, a grain and cattle buyer, who did business in New Paris and in the country around Richmond, has disappeared. He went with his wife to the home of her father and told her that he had forged the names of his friends to notes and checks, and would have to leave the country before they became due. He bid her good-by, kissed his children and drove away. His forgeries, unpaid checks and debts of honor will amount to over $25,000.

THE assassin Guiteau figured at Logansport three years ago. He applied at the American Express office for a C. O. D. package, upon which $3.50 was due. Guiteau was "busted." He importuned the agent to allow him to take the package, stating that it contained several hundred copies of his lecture on the "Second Coming of Christ," which he wished to sell. He was regarded as crazy, and was given the cold shoulder. Afterward he went back to the agent and renewed his petition, and, promising to remit as soon as he got to Chicago, was allowed to take out the package. He did not remit.

Pay as You Go.

No habit is more pernicious than that of contracting debt. When once under the influence of creditors, the obligation will weigh one down as a millstone, and it will require the greatest self-denial and perseverance to get rid of the burden. It is not uncommon for inexperienced young people to live beyond their means

In the hope of restoring fortune and credit, theft or forgery is committed. Such examples are daily chronicled as the cause of many suicides, and are shown in the numerous inmates of the State prison, whose careless habit o contracting debts was the first step to that disgraceful abode. Pay as you go. This is applicable to every station in life, to the rich, the poor, the ignorant, the wise. A very striking illustration of the latter is afforded in Lord Bacon.

He possessed one of the greatest intellects ever created, yet he seemed to be naturally endowed with this weakness; and, though of splendid literary attainments, was always for this fault a needy man. At one time, so many and so pressing were the duns he received, that he yielded to temptation and was guilty of taking bribes; he afterward confessed, and was removed from his lofty position of Lord High Chancellor, degraded and humbled.

Bad debts scatter misery and desolation; they transform palaces into hovels, and change rich garments into pitiable rags. The credit system tends to bankruptcy and poverty. If you would have a clear conscience and a happy heart, pay as you go.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

"HUB of the Universe," a popular designation of the city of Boston, Mass., originated with Oliver Wendell Holmes.

MAKING tooth-picks of wood is by no means a modern idea. The Romans used wooden toothpicks in preference to quills.

THE name Gotham was first applied to the city of New York by Washington Irving in "Salmagundi," because the inhabitants were such wiseacres.

THE first circus in this country was managed by a man named Ricketts, in 1780. Gen. Washington and his staff patronized the performance in Philadelphia, and it became quite a fashionable amusement.

IT has been supposed among antiquarians that the clapper is a modern addition to bells, and that it did not form a part of those employed in Japan or China. Mr. Henry O. Forbes, however, says that when in Java he saw in the possession of a gentleman there a bronze bell dug up on the site of one of the old Hindoo settlements, of which now only the graves remain. It had lost the clapper, but the hook to which doubtless a clapper was attached existed still.

THE source of the common saying, "consistency thou art a jewel," has puzzled many a scholar, and whether or not the following authority may be relied upon as the starting point or as only using a borrowed idea we cannot assert. In a ballad entitled "Jolly Robyn Roughhead," published in 1764, in a little volume of English and Scotch ballads, the poet bewails the extravagance in dress which he considers the great enormity of his day, and makes Robyn address his wife as follows:

> Tush, tush, my lassie! such thoughts resign,
> Comparisons are cruel;
> Fine pictures suit in frames as fine;
> Consistency's a jewel!

PYTHAGORAS was a Greek philosopher, who was the son of a jeweler of Samos, born about 580 years before Christ. At an early age he traveled, going to Egypt, where it is said he resided twenty-five years. Then it is related he went to Babylon, Judea, and it is even asserted he penetrated to Gaul and India. He established a school in Italy, and effected some reformation in the inhabitants. He was persecuted, however, the friends of a rejected student of powerful family compelling him to withdraw to Metapontum, where he soon after died, probably about the year 500 B. C.

THE finest floors are said to be seen in Russia. For those of the highest grade tropical woods are exclusively employed. Fir and pine are never used, as in consequence of their sticky character they attract and retain dust and dirt, and thereby soon become blackened. Pitch pine, too, is liable to shrink, even after being well seasoned. The mosaic wood floors in Russia are of extraordinary beauty. One, in the Summer Palace, is of small squares of ebony inlaid with mother of pearl. A considerable trade is done in Dantzic and Riga by exporting small blocks of oak for parquette floors. There is an active demand for these in France and Germany, but none in England.

A POOR old rheumatic lady said to her physician: "Oh! doctor, doctor, I suffer so much with my hands and feet!" "Be patient, dear madam," he soothingly responded, "you'd suffer a great deal more without them."

A JUSTICE of the Peace, two-thirds drunk and in the market for $10, never thinks of the cheek of the thing when he marries a couple and says: "Whom God hath joined together," etc.—Detroit Free Press.

Air Your Houses.

Too many houses are built up the back in America. There are no through draughts. Front and back open, and a current set a-going—that's fresh air. Air stagnates, and curtains drawn, blinds down, carpets on floors, doors closed and one bit of a window just opened; goodness! where's the life to come from to breathe in so many cubic inches even of oxygen? Now then, in the morning open the street door for an hour and set something airing, some current into those stagnant air layers, that stuff each other up, and can neither move up nor down, nor in nor out. Ladies are faint, children droop, babies die, men swear—and all for want of a little fresh air just passing through the house. Look to it, and open your house door the first thing in the morning, and if you can set a current going do it.—Food and Health.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

HARRIS REMEDY CO. MF'G. CHEMISTS.
Market and 8th Sts. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness for 6 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 28.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

At WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.

At LA SALLE, with Ill. Cent. R. R.

At PEORIA, with [illegible]

At ROCK ISLAND, with "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line," and Rock Isl'd & Peo. Rds.

At KEOKUK, with Tol., Peo. & War.; Wab., St. Louis & Pac., and St. L., Keo. & N. W. R. Rds.

At CAMERON, with H. St. J. R. R.

At ATCHISON, with Atch., Topeka & Santa Fe; Atch. & Neb., and Cen. Br. U. P. R. Rds.

At LEAVENWORTH, with Union Pac. and Kan. Cent. R. Rds.

At KANSAS CITY, with all lines for the West and Southwest.

PULLMAN PALACE CARS are run through to PEORIA, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, KANSAS CITY, ATCHISON, and LEAVENWORTH.

Tickets via this Line, known as the "Great Rock Island Route," are sold by all Ticket Agents in the United States and Canada.

A Darky Who Was a Member of a Church and Couldn't Be Scared.

[Oglethorpe (Ga.) Echo.]

One day last week Ed. Tiller bought an untamed steer of Colonel S. P. Smith, and sent several negroes to drive the animal home. After great trouble the ox was gotten from the pasture and started on the road to Crawford. For the first half mile his steership gave but little trouble, but while going down a lane it suddenly realized the fact that it "wanted to go back home," and made a bolt for the drivers. They nobly held their ground until they found that the beast meant business, when an ignominious stampede commenced. One of the drivers escaped by scaling a fence, while others scattered to the right and left; but an old darky named John Deadwyler was not so fortunate. He was pressed so close that he had to escape behind a tree, when commenced a tilt between man and steer. The ox chased him around until his head swam, but during a temporary lull, while his steership was fighting a fly, John started up that tree. But he was not quick enough. The animal made a drive at the man, and caught his horn in the seat of his pants. For several minutes there was an exciting contest; the darky trying to escape, while the steer did its best to pull him down. At last the horn-hold broke, and the old darky went up that sapling like a sky-rocket. He was kept there for over an hour before the animal decided to give up the combat and depart for home. As the beast vanished in the distance John yelled out after him: "I'se a member ob de church, but ef you d—d raskil tinks you kin skeer me you'se one debilish big fool!"

CROWN SEWING MACHINE IS THE BEST

It is the result of 20 years' experience and experiments in Sewing Machines. It combines the good points of all present and former makes, and is not a "one man" or "one idea" machine, as others are. It avoids the defects of others, and possesses new and valuable features and conveniences. It is large, light-running, noiseless, handsome, convenient, durable, and simple. Warranted and kept in repair free for 5 years. Circulars with full description sent free on request. It is surely the best. A trial will prove it. Don't fail to see it before you buy. MANUFACTURED BY FLORENCE MACHINE CO., Florence, Mass.; WHOLESALED BY GEO. P. BENT, 81 and 83 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

A Disease which is Universal requires a Universal Rem'dy and none of the ills to which the human family are subject is more Universal than Fever & Ague, and no remedy has yet been discovered which has proven so universally successful in curing Fever and Ague as KRESS' FEVER TONIC. In many sections of country the atmosphere is filled with malaria, arising from great pools of water left standing from the overflow during last spring, which, becoming stagnant throw out malaria to so great an extent that in order to prevent CHILLS and FEVER from getting a hold on the system, it is necessary that a remedy should be used which will counteract the evil, and in cases where the disease has taken hold of the system, effect a cure. For this purpose there is nothing equal to KRESS' FEVER TONIC. It is the Best & Safest Remedy known, and wherever used has given perfect satisfaction. In its composition neither Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnia, nor Mercury is used. It will cure the most stubborn cases of AGUE in a very short time and leaves the system strong and vigorous to resist MALARIA. One bottle usually is all that will be required, unless in aggravated cases, or where the patient is continually exposed to malarial poison, in such cases, a second bottle may be required. In small doses it will invariably counteract tendency to chills. KRESS' FEVER TONIC is no new remedy, but one long established, thoroughly tested, and found by experience to do all that is claimed for it. In another column will be found the experience of parties who have used it to which we ask your attention. Price One Dollar a Bottle, and is for sale by Druggists, everywhere. TRY IT if you have the slightest tendency to SHAKE! IT WILL CURE YOU!

Kidney Complaints

of all descriptions are relieved at once, and speedily cured by Kidney-Wort. It seems intended by nature for the cure of all diseases of the kidneys caused by weakness and debility. Its great tonic powers are especially directed to the removal of this class of diseases. We know of persons that have suffered for thirty years who have been permanently cured by taking Kidney-Wort a short time. Try it, either liquid or dry.—[Sun.

A Fool Once More.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a United States flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her. She is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars. Such folly pays."—H. W., Detroit, Mich.—[Free Press. 29-2w.

A Temperance Sermon.

A stronger temperance sermon will never be preached than that which an unfortunate woman at Cape Girardeau, Mo., recently delivered before her husband in a bar-room. Setting a covered dish which she had brought with her upon the table, she said: "Presuming, husband, that you are too busy to come home to dinner, I have brought you yours," and departed. With a forced laugh he invited his friend to dine with him; but, on removing the cover of the dish, found only a slip of paper, on which was written: "I hope you will enjoy your meal. It is the same your family has at home."

A Well-Filled Postal Card.

[Stockton Herald.]

A month or so ago J. E. Richardson, of this city, received a postal card from his brother in Haynesville, Iowa, containing over 5,000 words. It was written to him as a letter, and the writing upon it was so fine that it required a magnifying glass to read a portion of it. Mr. Richardson made up his mind that he would not be outdone, and four weeks ago made preparations to reply in the same style. He wrote during his leisure moments an answer which he brought to a close to-day, the space on his card having been entirely consumed. When the task was completed, he counted the number of words and found that he had 6,471.

Tea-Tasters in New York.

There are, says Dr. Dune, probably more than 100 firms engaged in tea-tasting in this city. In all of their offices there are large tables with round revolving tops. A circle of tea-cups is placed along the edge of these. The tea-taster sits down before the display of crockery and tastes one cup after another, moving the table top around. In the center of the table is a pair of scales with a silver half-dime in one of the balances. One or two large kettles are kept constantly with boiling water in them. When a sample of tea is to be tasted, as much is weighed out as will balance the half-dime. This is put in a tea-tester, then he stirs up the leaves, lifts them on his spoon and inhales the aroma. At the same time he generally takes a sip of the infusion, holds it in his mouth for a short time, and then spits it out. Enormous brass cuspidores, holding two or three gallons, receive the tea thus tasted and the contents of the cups that have been examined. On some occasions, when a large amount of tea of a certain kind is to be bought, many samples of this are brought in from different houses. The buyer and sellers sit around the revolving tables with the samples made into infusions in the cups before them. These are "tastee" all around, the "body," "fineness," "toastiness," etc., are learnedly discussed, and the poorer specimens discarded. Then those that are left are tested again and the number further reduced. So it goes on until the article which unites the desired quality and price is obtained.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

THE HIGHWAY COW.

[Country Side.]

The hue of her hide was dusky brown,
Her body was lean and her neck was slim,
One horn was turned up and the other turned down.
She was keen of vision and long of limb,
With a Roman nose and a short stump tail,
And ribs like the hoops on a home-made pail.

Many a mark did her body bear;
She had been a target for all things known;
On many a scar the dusky hair
Would grow no more where it once had grown;
Many a passionate, parting shot
Had left upon her a lasting spot.

Many and many a well-aimed stone,
Many a brickbat of goodly size,
And many a cudgel swiftly thrown,
Had brought the tears to her loving eyes;
Or had bounded off from her bony back,
With a noise like the sound of a rifle crack.

Many a day had she passed in the pound
For helping herself to her neighbor's corn;
Many a cowardly cur and hound
Had been transfixed on her crumpled horn;
Many a teapot and old tin pail
Had the farmer boys tied to her time-worn tail.

Old Deacon Gray was a pious man,
Though sometimes tempted to be profane,
When many a weary mile he ran
To drive her out of his growing grain.
Sharp were the pranks she used to play
To get her fill and to get away.

She knew when the deacon went to town;
She wisely watched him when he went by;
He never passed her without a frown
And evil gleam in each angry eye;
He would crack his whip in a surly way,
And drive along in his "one-horse shay."

Then at his homestead she loved to call,
Lifting his bars with crumpled horn;
Nimbly scaling his garden wall,
Helping herself to his standing corn;
Eating his cabbages one by one,
Hurrying home when her work was done.

His human passions were quick to rise,
And striding forth with a savage cry,
With fury blazing from both his eyes,
As lightnings flash in a summer sky,
Redder and redder his face would grow,
And after the creature he would go.

Over the garden, round and round,
Breaking his pear and apple-trees;
Tramping his melons into the ground,
Overturning his hives of bees;
Leaving him angry and badly stung,
Wishing the old cow's neck was wrung.

The mosses grew on the garden wall;
The years went by with their work and play.
The boys of the village grew strong and tall,
And the gray-haired farmers passed away,
One by one as the red leaves fall,
But the highway cow outlived them all.

Graves at Culloden.

(Edinburgh Scotsman.)

Many will be interested to learn that the graves or trenches in which the bodies of the unfortunate Highlanders were buried after the battle of Culloden are being cared for by the present proprietor of the estate of Culloden. Formerly the graves were distinguishable in the level green sward at the roadside only by the slightly-raised sod, but stones bearing the names of the clans have just been erected at the head of each trench. On one stone is inscribed the names of the clans "M'Gillivray M'Lean, and M'Lauchlan," and there are separate stones for "Clan Stuart of Appin," "Clan Cameron," and "Clan Mackintosh." Two graves are marked "Clans mixed." At the abortive "great cairn" a slab has been placed bearing the following inscription: "The battle of Culloden was fought on this moor, 16th of April, 1740. The graves of the gallant Highlanders who fought for Scotland and Prince Charlie are marked by the names of their clans." The interesting prehistoric remains at Clava have also received some attention from the owner of the property. Some of the standing stones which had fallen down have been set up; unfortunately, one or two have been made to face in the reverse way from what they did originally. The place otherwise has been improved. In clearing up the ground round the largest circle, paved, or rather causewayed, paths have been discovered leading from the base of the cairn in a straight line to three of the outer standing stones. Local archæologists have also recently found a great number of "cup markings" on the stones in this locality. One stone discovered the other day had cup marks upon both sides—said to be a very unusual thing.

His Last Dose.

Said a sufferer from kidney troubles, when asked to try Kidney-Wort, "I'll try it, but it will be my last dose." The man got well, and is now recommending the remedy to all. When derangement of the stomach acts upon the kidneys and liver, bringing disease and pain, Kidney-Wort is the true remedy. It removes the cause and cures the disease. Liquid (very concentrated) or dry act equally efficiently.—[Am. Cultivator.

Correspondence.

SAN JOSE, CAL., July 14, 1881.

EDITOR COURIER: At La Junta, Colorado, at about two o'clock in the morning those who had chosen the northern route took cars for Pueblo, and I silently wished myself of that number, for dear, dear, how could I ever endure greater heat than we had experienced. When morning dawned we were in the mountains, and could look upon their snow-caps many, many miles away in the distance, but seemingly scarce a stone's throw off. It was so interesting I had to forget my physical infirmities and gaze from my car window to watch our engine make the wonderful curves of the horseshoe, and see the railroad track make its windings something like a flight of stairs, one curve above another in the distance. We climbed the mountains with one engine before and one in the rear to push us up the heavy grade. We passed in sight of Pike's Peak, and now and then some passenger, accustomed to the route, pointed out the highest peak of the Rocky Mountains, (I have heard of seven or eight of the very highest. Finally, soon after entering New Mexico the conductor told us there was a vacancy in the sleeper. Thankfully we removed to a more permanent as well as a more comfortable home. But I was weary, oh so weary, that I could rest neither sitting nor lying down, so I tried walking about, and found very jolly and sociable people in the coach; some of them had been riding for days together and seemed quite like one family, and treated each other very familiarly, remembering that human nature is much the same at home and abroad, and that a pleasant sociability is more necessary and enjoyable in the sleeping-coach than the home parlor. The restlessness which travel begets is soothed and forgotten in trying to entertain a travelling companion, or in listening to the novel gossip of two ladies making each other's acquaintance. Now this is no slighting remark on woman. All naturally talk about what most concerns them. Two men meeting talk up the crops, the weather, or "what they know about farming," or sheep-raising, or their success in mining stocks, or whatever branch of industry that claims their attention. Woman's sphere has been for ages somewhat proscribed; so with her, domestic life is the most universal theme. All are interested here, and are glad to get each other's experience, and men listening are prone to say how shallow, how narrow women are, their conversation is so commonplace, showing no scientific research or comprehensive thought, or ennobling aspirations, simply little sketches of their own home-life, experiences with friends and neighbors, a few hints on the most successful mode of curtain lectures, (for we know husbands have to be managed, and part of our diplomacy is to keep them thinking they have their "own sweet will"), occasionally a little description of scenery and discussing becoming toilets or little economies, severity or mildness of children's diseases and the very best method of treatment of the same, and now and then criticizing the actions of another. True, these are very commonplace, and I confess almost dwindle to small talk, but how many scientific truths did they elucidate? how much truly ennobling knowledge did they disseminate in repeating their cunning tricks of trade? There is very little in the usual conversation of either sex which enlarges the understanding, expanding the soul to greater unfolding, giving birth to new thoughts and ideas, or inspiring the better nature with purer aims and holier aspirations. Perhaps this is to be regretted, but we do not gather wheat without chaff, and it is not in nature to have every word and action coin great results, but only to have very, very little weight, thus slowly forming characters whose culture or rudeness determines a nation's civilization or barbarism.

I met a mother in this coach with her four children, the eldest seven years, the youngest nine months. She is the wife of one of the best physicians in the territory, and their home is in the old town of Santa Fe. Their children are all little Greasers, that is, natives of New Mexico. She had been visiting mother and friends in New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati for eight months; she was very bright and talkative and not one bit worried with the children, and they did seem little models of good nature, mounting as familiarly, two at a time, on this or that gentleman's knees, taking his smiling appreciation as an invitation, as though he were their father, and possibly daring rather more liberties with whiskers and watch chain. These little creatures were busy and wide-awake, but really neither rude nor saucy, never a murmur nor any crying from baby. The mother chatted easily with every one, and sometimes seemed so wrapt in her subject as to heed little the whereabouts of her children, and I did not conceal my surprise at seeing baby carried up and down the depot platform in a strange gentleman's arm before the train was hardly at a stand-still, but she gave little notice though the little brothers tried to make her look where baby was. As the train moved on all were once more safely inside, but it was more good fortune than good management on the part of the mother, for as the car bell rang and we were getting in motion, little three-year-old was discovered on the depot platform, and was snatched into the car by one of the gentlemen, but even the narrow escape produced no apparent excitement in the parent. She only paused in her recital to thank him kindly and then continued as unceremoniously chatty as ever. I said to her: "You have very nice, healthy-looking children." "They were very healthy with clear complexions and rosy cheeks when I went to the states last fall, but I notice a great change now," she said. "They have all had mumps and chicken-pox, and been vaccinated for the small-pox, and I feared they would catch what was called 'French measles,' but believe we have escaped." I said: "And now they have the whooping-cough." "Oh no," she replied; "I am thankful they have not been exposed to that; I want to take them home to their father in as good condition as possible." "But listen," said I "to the peculiar cough, and the four cough just alike." After thinking a little she sighed, saying, "I remember a little girl coughing so severely that I feared she would never get her breath again, when we were crossing from New York two weeks ago, but I never thought of whooping-cough." Well, here, I thought, is a woman who is not a model mother, has very good children, whose dispositions she will not spoil by irritating scoldings; neither will she ever wear herself into a decline by useless frettings, but will heroically accept her fortune as fate's unavoidable edict, although she told me she had to do the worrying for the whole family, the doctor was so easy and even-tempered, which led me to wondering if this easy, contented, enjoyable spirit is the effect of climate. Can it be that a home in New Mexico would revolutionize us who are so worn and worried with many family cares and anxieties?

Through Colorado and thus far in New Mexico, our way is brightened sometimes by rows, again by nearly round mounds of beautifully bright flowers which look as though set and cultured by man, when it is only nature's gardening, and we see many old orchards of apple-trees, it is easy to think, which on closer examination prove to be scrub oaks.

The little family left for Santa Fe, and in a half hour more Mr. Hale bade me adieu and stepped off the cars at Corcillas to spend a few weeks looking up sheep interests. It made me very lonely and sad, more so than if we had parted in Auburn, for we said good-bye in such a rough, wild country that it made our meeting again seem vividly uncertain. A very pleasant lady, who said her home was in Albuquerque, seeing my melancholy, assumed the role of good Samaritan, and cheered me by her lively and interesting conversation entertained, me with accounts of rough life on the frontier; the excitement of living in the mines and the pleasures of a cottage with earth floor and dirt roof, which becomes mud when it rains, the rain trickling down in numerous places, showing no respect to bed, pictures or good clothes. She told me hired girls often get ten dollars per week, but are very scarce. Some families visiting the east persuaded good helps to this western clime by promising them large wages; but dear me, 'twas no use, they married in a few weeks after reaching the territory. They just can't help it, that is if they are at all sympathetic. One lady, after being disappointed in this way two or three times, entered into a contract with the party that, in consideration of large wages and her paying her fare from the states, binding herself to remain with her one year. The girl was true to her agreement, but married the day the year expired. At Albuquerque my new entertainer left me. This is quite a city with horse cars, etc., and a population of four thousand. It was too dark for me to see it at all. I went to bed in my car birth and was soon wooed from weariness by the sleep-god and rested well all night, till the ebon hand of the porter shook my shoulder and told me we were nearing Deming where we were to have breakfast and change cars. I performed my toilet and was hurried out of the car, not because there was haste needed to get breakfast, but because they were in a hurry to clean the car. I preferred my home lunch to breakfast. I bought my sleeper ticket through from here to San Francisco for $7.00, but did not know that it was necessary to re-check baggage, which caused me to loose my trunk, and when I wanted to stop off at Los Angeles the railroad company took my check and got my trunk for me in four days, cost me seventy-five cents. The day after leaving Deming was bright, though the sun was veiled by a thin cloud most of the time, much to our comfort as we passed over the dreary waste of desert. The towns are far between, and are mostly adobe buildings, occupied by Mexicans and half-breeds. A few white families are here for the sake of the mines, and some Spaniards. We saw many freight wagons with their two-story wagon-beds, and hauled by several mules or oxen. We find very little vegetation now save sage-brush and cactus in numerous varieties. Here in their native scorched sand they gain a growth we never dreamed of from the dwarfed specimens we house and pet in our northern homes. But I don't admire cactuses, never did; they are so treacherous and ready to wound, like the wild men who live among them. Occasionally a rabbit jumps away through the sage-brush, and some said they saw coyotes running away in the distance. Hawks are occasionally seen flying easily along, watching for their prey, whatever that may be one cannot guess in this lone, barren waste of country. We left prairie dogs and owls when we crossed Colorado's limits. I saw very few of the dog towns, and was disappointed, because I had thought it would be a pleasant sight to see them scampering from one neighbor's to another, with the owls outside as sentinels. Thursday, June 15 they said the mercury made 117 degrees in the shade at some of the towns where we took on water and fuel. We met Cole's circus that day crossing the desert in the subduing heat. Of course they were traveling by rail, but it must have been very trying to men and beasts.

B. HORTENSE T. HALE.

Original Labeling.

An old newspaper man from Ohio started a drug store in Detroit, and a local paper commenting on his innovation, remarked that he would be a millionaire in three years or bust in six months. His store is very cheerful, Skulls, crucibles, forceps, chromos, false teeth, bones, almanacs, parrots and sticks of licorice are scattered around in a delightful profusion, and there is not a drawer or bottle without an original label. On one drawer he has: "Glue—she sticks right to you, no matter what the weather." On another: "Paris green—sure in its operation, lasting in its effect. The label on a bottle reads: "Buy some of me and stop that blamed cough." On another: "Prussic acid—don't fool around with a revolver." Hanging against the wall is a beautiful sign which reads: "If you don't want to ask for a fine-tooth comb, point your finger at me." At the back end, of the store is a still larger sign, which bears the tender sentiment: "There is no flock without its missing lamb. Sometimes you find him in the bedstead. I keep the stuff to make him weary of life. Don't ask for bedbug poison—call it the Lost Lamb Restorative. I shall know what you mean." The front of the store bears some happy thoughts. Among them is one reading: "Walk right in here if you had buckwheat cakes for breakfast last winter." Another says: "I can cure that red nose in just fifteen days." A third reads: "You man with the catarrh, please step this way."

THE EAST.

BY the burning of the finishing-room of a mill at Slaterville, R. I., a loss of $100,000 was incurred, and 700 operatives lost their employment....Bonesetter, a famous trotter, owned by H. V. Bemis, of Chicago, and valued at $15,000, fell dead in the second heat of a race on the Pittsburgh track....The United States Underground Telegraph Company is laying in New York a bunch of seventy-five fire-alarm wires, in long wooden boxes covered with a preparation of silica.

A FIERCE fight occurred between coal miners and circus men at Pittston, Pa., resulting in the death of one man and the wounding of a woman....Mattie Hunter paced a mile at Pittsburgh in 2:12¾, or 2¼ seconds lower than her record, and the fastest ever paced except Sleepy Tom's 2:12¼.

A CITIZEN of Camden, N. J., died with all the symptoms of Asiatic cholera, and it is feared that it will become epidemic. Its origin is attributed to the filthy sanitary condition of the city.

A RAILROAD collision near the Hoosac tunnel killed a fireman named Charles Prescott, mutilated an engineer named A. T. Corliss and crushed to death Thomas Moore, the other engineer....McDevitt and Ensign, two star-route fraud manipulators, were arrested in Philadelphia.

TWO BUILDINGS of the Pequot cotton-mills at Philadelphia, owned by William Wood & Son, and valued at $100,000, have been burned.

THE WEST.

A TRAIN robbery occurred on the Rock Island road, at Winslow Station, near Cameron Junction, Mo., on the night of July 15. When the train which left Kansas City in charge of Conductor Westwall reached that point, at 9:30 p. m., a gang of desperadoes appeared, and side-tracked the train. Every car was boarded. The conductor was killed and the passengers robbed.

THE wheat yield in Illinois this year, it is estimated, will be 27,000,000 bushels less than the yield of 1880, Michigan's yield will be 14,800,000 bushels less, Ohio 12,000,000 bushels and Iowa 17,000,000 bushels. The total shortage for the four States, therefore, will be 80,800,000.

FROM July 10 to July 16, both included, there were 261 deaths from sunstroke in Cincinnati, and 150 deaths from excessive heat. In one day—the 14th of July—there were eighty-six deaths from both causes.

A MOST horrible and blood-curdling tragedy was recently enacted in Eagle Creek valley, Trempealeau county, Wis. Paul Helde, a Swiss emigrant, in a fit of insanity killed his wife and seven children and then blew out his own brains. A gentleman who was one of the first to visit the scene tells the following story of the crime: "On arriving at the farm-house the first thing that attracted our attention was the mutilated body of a little boy about 7 years old, who was lying on the path with his head split open and a bullet hole in his brains. Passing this, we entered the kitchen and beheld on the floor, surrounded by a pool of blood, the body of the father and husband shot through the neck and head. Near him lay a hatchet covered with blood, an old Swiss revolver, while on a chair were powder and caps. Pushing into the next room, a sickening sight met our gaze. Across the bed lay the mother with her throat cut and a hole in her breast made by the hatchet. By her side lay a headless babe, while on the other side was a little girl in the last stages of death. In the alley two more of the children were found, both mutilated and shot through the head. The barn was next visited, and in the hay-loft was found the two oldest children, boys of 17 and 18, their bodies hacked in many places, and both dying, being shot through the brain. When discovered, all were dead except one girl and the mother. The mother died in half an hour after she was discovered. Paul Helde and family arrived from Switzerland three months ago. He purchased a farm, and seemed to be living happily. Lately he became despondent at the prospect of a failure of the crops, and, worried over the thought that he paid too much for his land, doubtless led him to commit the terrible deed."....

"Billy the Kid," the blood-stained bandit of New Mexico, drew his last breath at midnight on Saturday, at Fort Sumner. Pat Garrett, Sheriff of Lincoln county, had for months been on the Kid's trail, and shot him through the heart as he entered a room to buy meat—a knife in one hand, a revolver in the other.... The Creek and Cherokee Indians were having a barbecue at Greenleaf, in the Cherokee nation, preparatory to nominating candidates for offices. The candidates "set up the whisky," and a free fight, in which seven men were killed and a score or more badly wounded, was the consequence....Outlaws visited the camp of the Mille Lac Indians, near Aitken, Minn., and murdered the chief and four Indians. The murderers were arrested.

SIX large iron companies of St. Louis have formed a pool representing $10,000,000, and either Edwin Harrison or Charles P. Chouteau will be chosen President. This immense combination will control about 90 per cent. of the iron product of the State of Missouri.... The Navajo Indians threaten to kill their agent, Rev. Galen Eastman, unless the Interior Department removes him....The propeller Winnipeg caught fire and burned to the water's edge in the harbor of Duluth. The passengers escaped, but four employes are missing.

THE wholesale drug establishment of James E. Davis & Co., Detroit, has been destroyed by fire. The total loss was about $85,000, and the insurance $40,000. Thomas McQueen, a fireman, was crushed to death by the roof falling in. John W. Carter sustained very serious internal injuries, and two other firemen had their limbs broken.... Sitting Bull, the famous Sioux chief, with a following of 200 people, arrived at Fort Buford and surrendered on the 20th of July. Credit is to be given the scout Louis Legare for his efforts to induce Bull to come to terms. ....Three men were killed and two more fatally injured by the explosion of the boiler of a portable saw-mill at Watertown, near Marietta, Ohio.

THE SOUTH.

FRANK BROWN and Jesse Myers, two of the gang of desperadoes who terrified the people of New Madrid county, Missouri, last spring, were hanged at Sikeston. About 5,000 persons gathered to witness the execution.... Willis Reeves, a negro, was hanged at Van Buren, Ark., for the murder of Joseph Drake, also colored. Reeves made three determined efforts to escape from the platform of the gallows, the Sheriff falling through the trap with him....At Marianna, Ark., Isaac Green and John Hardin, two negro murderers, paid the penalty of their crimes on the gallows, in presence of 3,000 spectators.

J. J. DICKINSON, JR., son of the late Gen. Dickinson, at one time Adjutant General of Florida, shot and dangerously wounded a saloonkeeper named Burch, in Leesburg, Fla. Dickinson was captured and lodged in jail, from which he was taken by a party of twenty-five armed men, who lynched him.

HENRY S. SMITH, who murdered a comrade named Burt at Burnsville, Miss., was hanged at Corinth in the presence of 4,000 persons.

COL. R. L. MOTT, of Columbus, Ga., 81 years of age, one of the wealthiest men in that State, was killed by a train in the Union depot at Atlanta.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR BRAYTON left Greenville, S. C., with four men, to destroy the illicit still of John McDow, near Central, in Pickens county. A desperate fight took place, in which Brayton was killed. McDow and a negro companion, heavily armed, threaten the life of any revenue officer who approaches them. Commissioner Raum has instructed the deputy collectors in South Carolina to organize and arm a posse and arrest the murderers.

POLITICAL.

THERE was little or no change in the political situation at Albany on the 15th, the ballot proving almost a repetition of the one recorded the previous day. The Senate refused to concur in the House resolution for an adjournment on Saturday, July 23.

EX-SPEAKER RANDALL thinks that the shooting of President Garfield will tend to cement the various sections of the country, and that, if his administration be a success, he will almost certainly be renominated in 1884.

THE New York Legislature, on July 16, elected Warner Miller Senator for the long term, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Thomas C. Platt. On the ballot for the short term Speaker Sharpe, Senator Baker and Representative Sisson changed from Conkling to Lapham, the vote being 58 for Lapham, 47 for Potter and 29 for Conkling, with 73 necessary for a choice.

TWO BALLOTS were taken at Albany, on the 18th, both with the same result—Lapham 54, Potter 34 and Conkling 27.

THERE was one ballot for Senator at Albany on the 19th, resulting in 68 votes for Lapham, 45 for Potter, and 28 for Conkling.

THE New York Legislature indulged in two ballots for Senator on the 20th, Lapham receiving 72 votes, with 76 necessary to a choice. ....The Prohibitionists of Ohio held a convention at Loveland, near Cincinnati, and placed in the field a full ticket for State offices, headed by A. B. Ludlow, of Springfield, for Governor.

WASHINGTON.

RETURNS received at the Agricultural Department up to July 1 indicate an improvement in the cotton crop as compared with its condition in June. The average condition is 95, against 100 at the same time last year. The wheat-crop prospects are much better than they were in June, and the average will be about 83 throughout the country. In the Atlantic States the crop will be only slightly inferior to that of last year, but in the Northwest and in Ohio and Indiana the average will fall below 70, and in Illinois will not be over 60. Of the spring-wheat States, Iowa returns an average of 72. There is an increased area of corn, but the condition of the crop is by no means as promising as it was at this time last year. In the Atlantic States the crop has suffered from the cold, wet spring. In the Southern States it is fair, except in Texas, where the drought has caused serious damage. In the West and Northwest the average is below that of last year, particularly in Iowa.

IN five days after the assault on the President, the Western Union Telegraph Company laid by enough earnings to pay a dividend of 2 per cent....A careful examination of the criminal code of the District of Columbia shows that the penalty for an assault with intent to kill may be ten years' imprisonment and a fine of $1,000.... The Anglo-American Cable Telegraph Company, the Direct United States Cable Company and the French Cable Company have given notice that, on and after the 1st of August, the rate for the transmission of telegrams from France and England to New York will be reduced to 25 cents per word.

THE Grand Jury at Washington has indicted George W. Ingalls, formerly Agent of the Piutes, for presenting false vouchers. District Attorney Corkhill will postpone action in the case of Guiteau till September.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that Guiteau remains closely confined, but is petulant and madly disappointed that his purpose has been thwarted by the will of God. He knows that the President is better, and his attendants say it annoys him so at times that he becomes almost savage in his rage, and curses what he terms his "blundering luck" in not making sure of his dastardly work..... Secretary Windom appointed James Law, of Ithaca, N. Y., James H. Sanders, of Chicago, and E. F. Thayer, of West Newton, Mass., a commission to be known as the Treasury Cattle Commission, whose chief duties it will be to investigate all cases of pleuro-pneumonia in meat cattle which shall be reported.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY CORKHILL has directed the jailer at Washington to use all possible precautions to prevent the assassin's escape, that he be permitted to see no one whatever, that he be not permitted to hold conversation with any of the guards, and that he be rigorously excluded from giving or receiving any communication whatsoever, except such as he gives the District Attorney or receives from him.... Journalists may import books into the United States duty free, as the Treasury Department allows that they come under the clause of the Revised Statutes allowing "tools of trade" to be free of duty.

RETURNS from nineteen of the principal postoffices of the United States for the quarter ending the 30th of June show an increase in the amount of business done of 16.7 per cent. over the corresponding period of last year. These nineteen offices pay one-third of the postal revenue, and the increase noted almost warrants the belief that the Postoffice Department will be self-sustaining this year..... The Roman Catholic presbytery at Boxton Falls, Quebec, was destroyed by fire and Father Larne perished in the flames. His nephew escaped a like fate by jumping from the window of an upper story.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that prison fare and discipline have taken much of the starch out of Guiteau, and have even had a cooling effect upon his inordinate vanity. When first confined he made frequent complaints of his treatment. He regarded himself as an important personage, a prisoner of state, and demanded better care than was bestowed upon his fellow-prisoners, whom he denominated common felons. He protested against being put on a level with the other prisoners, said he was a gentleman, accustomed to having the best of fare, and, in fact, to luxury, and insisted that he should be so treated. He has not ceased to complain and to want better treatment; but his manner is changed. He is more subdued, and apparently begins to realize that others do not regard his crime in the light that he does.

GENERAL.

A TUCSON (Arizona) dispatch says reports come from El Paso that the Mexican Gov. Terrasas, who was en route to El Paso, was attacked by Indians and thirty of his men killed....Pierre Lorillard has shipped nine more thoroughbreds for his stable at Newmarket, England.

NINE buildings of Redbank, N. J., including the Redbank Register office, were destroyed by fire. The total loss is estimated at $75,000. The lard refinery of E. Ring & Son, of East St. Louis, valued at $70,000, and insured for $60,000, was burned down. Bush & Denslow's extensive oil works at South Brooklyn, worth $50,000, were burned.

LIEUT. RAY, of the United States Signal Corps, has sailed from San Francisco with nine companies for Point Barrow, in the Arctic ocean, to establish a meteorological observatory. Included in his outfit are a ready-made house and provisions for three years.... The Department of Agriculture reports an increase of 2 per cent. in the acreage of potatoes throughout the whole country, and the yield will be large. The breadth of tobacco planted is much larger than last year, and the crop is in high condition.

BURNED: The Wieting Opera House and several stores at Syracuse, N. Y., loss $400,000, insurance $275,000; Pearson's saw mill and Pearson's salt manufactory at East Saginaw, Mich., loss $160,000, insurance $70,000; the Cincinnati Coffin Company's coffin manufactory at Cincinnati, Ohio, loss $250,000, insurance $220,000; several stores at Irvington, N. Y., loss $40,000; the Irving House at Long Branch.

FOREIGN.

A TERRIBLE incident, illustrative of the latent brutal savageness of the Russian peasant, comes from Fontiva, in the Province of Koorsk, Russia. A farm superintendent imprisoned nineteen persons in a barn, and the village mob fired it, burning the men and women alive.

A BERLIN dispatch says that a student at the University of Bonn was killed in a duel; another student was hopelessly wounded and is now in the hospital; a student at Berlin had his nose cut off in a contest with a fellow-student, and the dispatch adds: "Scarcely a week passes that some act of brutality is not perpetrated in some one of the universities."... London reports several deaths from sunstroke. At Greenwich observatory, the other day, mercury reached 97 degrees in the shade, which is the highest figure on record at that point.... The Czar, acting on the advice of Gen. Ignatieff, has issued an order commuting the death sentence passed on the noted female Nihilist, Hessy Helfmann.... Don Carlos, the much-pretending aspirant for the Spanish throne, has been politely requested to quit France, bag and baggage, on the ground that he has been recently engaged in proceedings which are regarded as "manifestations against the Government of France."

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch says the number of men and girls burned in the barn in the province of Koorks, Russia, was 119, instead of nineteen.

STATISTICS collected and collated by the Hamburg (Germany) police show that 74,633 emigrants left that port between the 1st of January and the 30th of June of this year. This is twice the number which left Hamburg in the corresponding period of the year just after the Franco-German war.... The progress of the French arms in North Africa is marked by a wholesale sacrifice of life. At the bombardment and capture of Sfax, 400 Arabs were killed and 400 wounded. Southern Tunis is now reported in a disturbed condition. ....Dean Stanley (the Very Rev. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D. D., Dean of Westminster) is dead.

A NEW Trans-Atlantic Telegraph Company is being formed at Berlin which will lay an independent cable from Germany to Valencia (Ireland), and thence to the United States. The capital is to be $825,000....England has at last consented to give up the Transvaal to the Boers.

IT is reported that England has informed France that, Tripoli being Turkish territory, any attempt on the part of France to interfere in its internal arrangements would open up the whole question of the European guarantee to the Turkish empire; that on France being so informed she hesitated, and finally concluded not to interfere.... There is a promise of abundance for the Irish. The potato crop is reported to be in excellent condition, and the prospects are that the yield will be large and the quality of the tubers good.....Egypt is going to abolish slavery by allowing the owners to retain the slaves owned by them at present, but allowing no more persons to be enslaved in the future.

A Speaking Machine.

A new and most ingenious speaking machine has lately been exhibited by Herr Faber before the Physical Society, London. It is designed to more perfectly imitate, mechanically, the utterance of the human voice, by means of artificial organs of articulation made on the human model, and it is worked by keys like a musical instrument. A bellows made of wood and India rubber serves for lungs; a small windmill is placed in front of the vessel to give trilling sounds; the larynx is made of a single membrane of hippopotamus hide and India rubber; and a mouth with two lips, a tongue and an India rubber nose complete the organs of the apparatus. Fourteen distinct sounds are uttered by it, and, by combining these, any word in any language can be produced—also laughing and whispering.

THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, July 16.

The President continues to steadily improve. The physicians are sanguine that the worst is passed, that pyemia need not be feared, and the recovery of the President is only a matter of a few weeks. His appetite is becoming normal, and the increase in strength is the result of his diet. Surgeon General Barnes said this morning that, although the attending physicians did not feel like throwing up their hats and saying the President was out of danger, they could yet say that he was practically so, unless unforeseen complications arise, and there were no signs of such. "One need only look at the President to be assured of his continued improvement," added Dr. Barnes. Dr. Bliss says that the President is about out of danger, the crisis may be said to have passed, and on the whole he is pretty safe. "The case progresses nicely," he continued, "and every one about the White House feels as if hope may well be buoyant." Dr. Reyburn is equally hopeful.

Dr. Frank H. Hamilton, of New York, has written to a friend saying that he feels convinced that a mistaken diagnosis was made in the President's case—that the ball instead of passing through the liver was deflected downward by striking the eleventh rib, and then lodged in the muscles within the pelvis. Dr. Hamilton's opinions are shared by many eminent surgeons through the country.

The physicians have decided not to try on the President the Bell electrical instrument for locating the ball. They say that the ball is all right, and doing very nicely, and that there is no reason or necessity of disturbing the President by an experiment to locate it. The instrument may be used when the President gets well, but not before.

WASHINGTON, July 18.

The President grows better every day. The improvement is so marked that the physicians say that within three or four days, unless there shall be a relapse, they will be willing to announce that he is beyond danger, and that the members of the Cabinet who had made arrangements for vacations can safely leave. The pulse, temperature and respiration are daily more nearly approaching the normal standard. The fever does not increase during the day so much as usual, but the most encouraging sign of returning strength is the fact that the President is beginning to eat—it might almost be said, to eat heartily, and he enjoys his food and assimilates it.

Dr. Boynton, in conversation last evening, expressed the opinion that the critical period has passed, and that the President, although still extremely weak, is now out of danger. Continuing, he said: "There is no doubt that he will gain strength daily now, and there is every reason to hope for his ultimate recovery."

The following is a review of the President's case for the two weeks, according to competent medical authority: The first injury was the shock and disturbance due to the entrance of the bullet. This blow was so severe that the President did not rally, but for several hours remained in a state of vital depression, with indications of internal hemorrhage, with temperature high and increased pulse, nausea and great weakness. During the first stage the President was universally regarded to be a dying man Saturday night, however, a reaction was established, rendered possible, it is supposed, by the stoppage of bleeding. He then entered on the second stage, and under such conditions that the physicians felt justified in entertaining faint hopes of his recovery. The presence of the discharged blood remaining in the wound now disturbed the system. There were indications, also, of inflammation of the peritoneum, as evidenced by tympanitis, a most dangerous symptom. There were pains, moreover, in the legs and feet, indicating that some of the nerves were injured. His condition on Sunday was critical, and the chance of recovery, although existing, was very slight. By Tuesday, July 5, the more alarming symptoms began to disappear. There was less tympanitis and abdominal tenderness. The patient had survived the immediate dangers of the wound, and would die, if at all, from its after effects. These, as stated, were secondary hemorrhage, abscess and sloughing, the usual pathological processes attending gunshot wounds in that region. The restorative operations now began and led to what is called the surgical fever, which reached its height Monday, July 11. During its progress the physicians succeeded in fighting off the dangers incident to this stage of recovery, the wound assuming a healthy character, the patient's health and spirits being maintained in a comfortable degree, and the usual necessary operations of nature going on without interruption. The subsidence of the fever, while it leaves the patient very weak, marks the termination of the most serious stages of the injury, and, as the President now seems to be steadily gaining strength and no symptoms of local dangers appear, the physicians regard him as practically out of danger.

WASHINGTON, July 19.

The President had some gastric trouble on yesterday, and was a little more feverish than on the previous day, but the surgeons take a hopeful view and express the opinion that this is only one of the fluctuations of the fever, and does not indicate any change for the worse. They and his unprofessional friends are already trying to invent some way of getting him to Long Branch, and the doctors say that if he keeps on improving it will be practicable next week to take him by steamer to Fortress Monroe, and then, after a few days of rest, to Long Branch whither he is anxious to go, and Mrs. Garfield is quite as anxious to get away from the White House as he is. But the surgeons have found out that the hope that he was less severely wounded than was at first supposed was ill-founded; the drainage tube has been introduced into the wound a distance of five and one-half inches, proving that the original diagnosis was correct, and that the ball did pass through the lower lobe of the liver.

District Attorney Corkhill yesterday found the missing bullet which was fired at the President, and about which there has been so much search. It appears that a German glazier who tramps around the streets repairing windows went into the depot to get a $10 bill changed on the morning the President was shot. He was standing in the main room, some forty feet from where the assassin stood, and in a southeast direction. He had commenced to unstrap his box, in which he carried glass, and had gotten one strap off his shoulder when he heard the noise of the pistol, and immediately three panes of glass in his box were shattered. He at once rushed from the depot, thinking it was no place for safety. Saturday he was cleaning out his box, and found the ball in his putty, and was narrating the fact to his friends, when one of them told him that was the time the President was shot, and brought him to the District Attorney's office, when he gave his statement, and gave up the ball. He thinks it was the first shot that broke the glass, but says that they were so close together that he had not time to get away.

WASHINGTON, July 20.

The President continues to improve steadily. He ate heartily such food as the physicians felt warranted in permitting yesterday. He slept well and rested well throughout the day and last night. This morning there are no traces of febrile symptoms, which is considered highly favorable. The President's food yesterday was mostly of a liquid character. His breakfast consisted of milk and beef juice. About noon he partook of toast and coffee. His appetite continues good, and he would eat much more if he could get it. Every symptom now is favorable, and the indications point to his complete recovery. Dr. Bliss said last evening: "He [the President] is certainly going to get well."

WASHINGTON, July 21.

The President's condition is every way satisfactory. Yesterday was decidedly the best day he has passed since the assassin shot him. His pulse fell to 86—the lowest point since the shooting. He took a little more than the usual liquid nourishment, but has not been allowed to take solid food, except toast, since last Monday, on account of the gastric disturbance which occurred that day. His afternoon fever was very light yesterday, and quickly abated. His condition this morning is highly favorable. The physicians and all the attendants at the White House think that the turn in the long lane has been reached. Still, the doctors decline officially to state that they regard the President out of danger. The President has lost about thirty pounds since the attempt on his life. A large force of men is putting the steamer Tallapoosa in order, and it is hoped that the President can take a sea trip by Aug. 15.

WASHINGTON, July 21.

President Garfield passed a very comfortable day yesterday. He took a little solid food in the morning in addition to the usual quantity of liquid food, and gained considerably in strength. He continued to gain during the evening, and the afternoon fever has subsided. A piece of cotton cloth about a quarter of an inch square, with woolen fibers adhering, came away spontaneously with the pus from the deeper part of the wound. Dr. Reyburn said the discharge of this piece of cloth indicated that the wound is drained to the bottom; the wound, he said, continued to heal nicely inside, and that, at the present progress, the patient would be out of danger in a few days. The President has taken to reading the daily journals, and listens to the telegrams and letters of sympathy which have accumulated since the shooting, in which he takes the deepest interest. He is well enough to laugh heartily at the cuts in the pictorial weeklies.

DARING ROBBERY.

A Rock Island Train Boarded by Road Agents, Who Murder the Conductor and Plunder the Safe of the Express Car.

The most daring robbery and wanton murder that has occurred in the Southwest for many years took place on the night of July 15, near Winston station, Mo. The express train of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad, from Kansas City, was boarded at that point by a gang of men variously estimated at from ten to fifteen, who shot down the conductor and another employe of the road, displaced the fireman and engineer by knocking them off the locomotive, put two of their men in charge, and plundered the safe of the express car of its contents. Mr. C. H. Murray, the express messenger, gives the following circumstantial account of the affair:

"We pulled out of Winston, Conductor William Westfall jumping on the head end of the smoking-car to go through the train for tickets, as he always does. We left Winston about on time, 9:30 o'clock. Being in the express car I did not see what transpired in the smoker, but a passenger told me as follows: A masked man arose from his seat, and, approaching the conductor as he came along, said: 'You are my prisoner.' The conductor had not time to make a word of reply when the stranger pulled out a revolver and shot him. The conductor reeled against the seat, and attempted to go out the rear door of the car, when the robber fired again. Westfall managed to get out on the platform, where he fell down and rolled off the car to the ground dead. After the report of the shots the train suddenly stopped. We, that is, I and the baggage-man, Frank Stampes, were standing between two trunks in the middle of the car at the time. Just after the train stopped Baggageman Stampes stepped to the north-side door to see what was the matter. The door was open to admit of ventilation, as the night was very warm. Without warning Stampes was grabbed by the legs by four masked men. Their spokesman said: 'Come out, you — of a —, come out.' At this they pulled him out. When they got him down on the ground they told him if he moved or spoke a word they would kill him. The robbers then shot into the express car twice. Knowing pretty well what was coming, I had ensconced myself behind the sample trunks. The four men then jumped into our car and put the lights out. As they did this I got out of my place and went over toward the locomotive end of the car. The robbers were looking for me, as I heard them say especially, 'Where is the other —— of a ——? Shoot the cuss.' The robbers, thinking probably I had left the car, also deserted it for the time being. I jumped up and barred the end door next to the smoking-car and shut the south-side door. Then I barred the door next to the engine. There was some firing done at the car while I was locking the doors, but how many shots I don't remember. One ball went through the door, missing me by about three inches. After running about half a mile the train came to a stop, as it was started immediately after the road agents pulled the baggageman out. Just as I was barring the outside door, the last one of the four, the robbers came to that side. Four of them rushed into the car and began shooting again. How many shots they fired I don't know, but afterward we counted twelve bullet-holes in that end of the car which were shot on the inside. At almost every shot they would keep up the yell, 'Come out, you —— of a ——.' I kept my place, squatting on the floor till I thought they had ceased firing; then I rose up and said, 'Here I am.' They grabbed me and whirled me around several times and demanded the key. I gave it to them. One fellow went toward the safe, then turned around, handed me the key and told me to unlock the safe. I did so at the point of four revolvers, threw the cover back, and leaned up against the side of the car. The one who appeared to be the leader pulled out of his coat-pocket a sack two feet long by a foot and a half in width. He took the money and all the contents of the safe and put them into the sack. While doing this he asked me several times how much money there was. I told him I didn't know, but there was quite a little pile of it. Then he demanded, 'Is that all you have got? Give me the rest of it.' I told him it was all the car contained of value except the seven silver bricks on the floor. He answered, 'I want the rest of it or I'll kill you.' After I had again told him I hadn't another cent he continued, saying, 'You might as well give up. We have killed your conductor and engineer, and we are going to kill you, so get down on your knees. There are twelve men in this gang, and we've got full possession of the train.' He then struck me on the head and another blow on the back with his revolver. After this the men left the cars."

A stonemason residing at Wilton, who boarded the train at Cameron, was shot and killed as he stood on the platform of the first coach next to the smoker.

None of the passengers were molested. The robbers only attacked the engine, express and smoking-car.

The spot where the robbers had their horses tied in the woods was discovered. The men were in such haste to leave that their halters were cut, not untied, and the trail was in the direction of Clay county. The Sheriff of Daviess county, Mo., with 100 men, at once started on the trail.

It is the general opinion in the vicinity of the scene of the robbery the gang is the same old one headed by Jesse and Frank James.

Sheriff Timberlake, of Clay county, started out with thirty men after the robbers. It is thought the latter divided near Lawson, aiming for Clay county.

DR. BEARD explains the marvelous powers exhibited at times by subjects in a mesmeric or trance condition by the exaltation of some single faculty—as of calculation or music—with the suppression of all other faculties to a greater or less degree, occurs sometimes in the cases of idiots, whose brain power appears confined to one line of effort. In such cases any improvement in general ability or intelligence is attended by a lessening of the force of the exalted faculty. The attention of the Medico-Surgical Society, of St. Petersburg, has lately been called to a remarkable case, illustrating this principle in the inverse order. The subject, a Russian of twenty-seven, was in youth distinguished for brilliant abilities. Disease, brought on by dissipation, caused the loss of all his mental faculties except memory and the power of mathematical calculation. Those increased proportionally as his power of logical thinking and understanding vanished. He is now a living phonograph and calculating apparatus.

A MINNESOTA WHIRLWIND.

The Town of New Ulm Almost Wiped Out of Existence by a Cyclone—A Large Number of People Killed and Wounded—Houses Swept Away Like Chaff.

A terrible tornado devastated New Ulm, Minn., a beautiful little city of 3,500 inhabitants, on the afternoon of July 15. Six hundred buildings were more or less damaged, some of them being totally wrecked, among them the finest business blocks in the city. Thirteen people were killed outright in New Ulm, and some twenty or more wounded more or less severely, several of them fatally. The storm made its appearance at 4 o'clock, and it could be distinctly seen approaching in two separate columns, one moving upward while the other appeared to descend from the clouds, whirling with terrible rapidity.

One instance is told of a man and his wife and child who were in a dwelling adjoining his place of business when the storm struck. Both buildings were swept away, and, when the man found his wife and child, twenty minutes after, both her legs were broken and the child's foot was crushed.

Numbers of buildings struck by lightning caught fire, and the town would have been destroyed in this way but for the rain, which descended in torrents.

Eye-witnesses state that the scene during and immediately after the storm was fearful to contemplate and beyond the descriptive powers of the most graphic pen. People who were out on the streets at the time were literally blown away, and numbers were wounded by the flying debris. Whole sections of tin roofing were sent sailing through the air by the fury of the storm, and twisted and crumbled up like paper.

There is scarcely a building, public or private, that did not sustain some injury, while many residences and business houses are total wrecks, the timbers being broken into kindling and scattered over the prairie. Not less than 100 horses were killed, many lifted bodily and carried long distances. The farm machinery depot was totally wrecked, and the machinery, including fifty self-binding reapers, were shivered into splinters.

A new two-story brick building was carried away so clean that not a vestige remained except the cellar and foundation walls.

A buggy was carried completely over the two-story stone jail.

The county is peopled almost wholly by Germans, forty-eight of whom were in Minneapolis at the time attending the Turnfest, and none of them knew of the catastrophe until next day, when all left immediately for their ruined homes, with no knowledge as to whether they would find family, friends or property.

A correspondent who visited the scene of the disaster gives the following description of the terrible ruin wrought:

The first place any effects of the storm were seen was about three miles west of New Ulm. Here it tore down a house and killed a number of cattle and horses. The family saved themselves by going to the cellar before the storm struck. From where the storm struck the railroad track the ground is lined with bedding and furniture, wagon wheels, farm machinery, etc.

The heads of wheat were cut off as clean and smooth as though done with a heading machine. From the place where the storm first struck into New Ulm everything was swept for a width of about one mile. The sight was sickening in the extreme. Trees were torn up by the roots and carried no one knows where, and not a house or barn was left standing in the line of the storm from where it first struck until it reached New Ulm. A gentleman who stood on the bluff two miles north of New Ulm and witnessed the cyclone, says it was the grandest, yet most terrible, sight he ever witnessed. He says one cloud came from the northwest and one from the north-east. When they met it appeared to him to be a contest as to which should have the right of way. The storm struck New Ulm at 4:18, and lasted just twenty minutes, and in that brief time not less than $300,000 worth of property was destroyed, and a number of persons killed and many wounded. During the storm there was a perfect blaze of fire balls. It would have been almost as dark as midnight had it not been for the continued flashes of lightning.

The storm extended through Nicollet county, through the towns of West Newton, Wellington and Severance, devastating a tract of country a mile wide and forty miles long. Six lives were lost at West Newton and six at Wellington. The property damaged at West Newton alone was estimated at $500,000.

A dispatch from New Ulm says the rebuilding of the town "is now under way, and every man, woman and child is taking part in the great work of rebuilding. A great many of the buildings which were unroofed are being repaired so as to afford protection to the hundreds of citizens whose homes were entirely swept from the earth.

"Henry Villard has given $1,500 to the relief fund, $1,000 has been raised at Milwaukee, and St. Paul and Minneapolis have pledged $5,000 each. The number of deaths by the cyclone has swollen to thirty-four."

SMOKING is not a good habit at its best, but the universal testimony is that cigarette smoking is the worst of all. Indigestion, irritable throats and impaired vision are nearly sure to follow this habit, especially in younger boys. The manufacture of cigarettes is now enormous. Virginia alone is said to make annually over 50,000,000.

"I'LL BE dashed," said the water, and it went over the dam.

INDIANA NEWS.

A STOCK company to start a swimming bath has been organized at Richmond.

THE Brazil Register is offering the revised New Testament as a premium to subscribers.

A CIRCUS snake eight and a half feet long escaped from its cage and was killed in Shelbyville.

AT a public gathering at Young America, Cass county, William Green killed Enoch Brumbaugh for endeavoring to keep him quiet.

A FARMER near Albany, Delaware county, named Frederick Stoner, having been sued for $5,000 for libel, hanged himself in his barn.

THE railroads in Shelby county have lately set several wheat-fields and meadows on fire, causing losses aggregating from $2,000 to $3,000.

THE shops of the Dodge Manufacturing Company at Mishawaka, St. Joseph county, valued at $30,000, were struck by lightning and burned.

THE Rush county Commissioners have purchased two acres of ground, and will build a commodious house for the pauper orphan children of the county.

JEREMIAH HELM, a prominent citizen and rich farmer of Delaware county, was sunstruck in the harvest field, and died before he could be taken to his house.

RED foxes are very numerous in the neighborhood of Frenchtown, Harrison county. One farmer reports that all his chickens and other fowls have been destroyed.

HERMAN ARCHBURG was instantly killed at Bedford, Lawrence county, by a train of cars loaded with stone running over him. His head and one arm were severed from his body.

A CONNERSVILLE Justice decides that a fine of one cent satisfies the law against assault and battery when a man is knocked down for saying Guiteau did well in shooting Garfield.

ENGINEER KINGSBURY, of the Toledo, Delphos and Burlington railroad, was knocked from the engine near Chickasaw, by a projecting post. He died the following day.

MRS. JANE STEPHENS, whose husband sat on the Supreme Bench of Indiana from 1831 to 1837, died lately at her home in Madison, aged 83. She had lived in that place sixty years.

A CAT at Evansville gave birth to six kittens that were all joined together at the hips, forming a sort of garland of cats. Two of them died, and then the whole string was flung into the river.

THERE will presently be opened in Bloomington, Jackson county, a dispensary for treating persons addicted to the practice of inebriating, of which there are said to be a large number in that vicinity.

A FIRE in the State prison at Jeffersonville destroyed the malleable-iron foundry belonging to Perrin & Co. The loss on machinery and fixtures is $2,000; fully insured. There was no panic among the convicts.

A LITTLE 4-year-old daughter of Benjamin Richards, living near Spencer, Owen county, was probably fatally scalded by the upsetting of the supper-table, on which was a pot of hot coffee, scalding the face, neck and chest.

HARRY FOXWELL, a saloon-keeper of Knightstown, Henry county, who is serving a life term for murder, seeks a pardon through the efforts of prominent citizens of Washington and Baltimore, but Gov. Porter turns a deaf ear.

A YOUNG man named Stansbury was run over and killed by a train near Carlisle, Sullivan county. When discovered his body was lying on the track with his head severed and his arms folded, which leads to the belief that he laid down on the track for self-destruction.

MRS. JOHN BRAHMES has been arrested at Fort Wayne for the murder of her 11-year-old daughter Annie, who died June 2. The remains being exhumed, their appearance proved conclusively that the child had been beaten to death by its unnatural mother.

ROBERT HENDRICKS and his four sons, living near Columbus, Bartholomew county, got into a family row about watering some stock. Fists, clubs, stones and everything in reach was used, and the battle raged until all were disabled. The old man has a broken head, one of the sons a fractured leg, and the others were variously injured. Bad whisky was the prime cause of the trouble.

AN explosion, presumably of accumulated gas, startled the citizens of Elizabeth, Harrison county. Upon investigation they found that in the bed of Buck creek there had been an immense upheaval, throwing up many tons of stone and earth and leaving a heavy ledge of flat rock at the bottom of the creek broken for a space of some twenty feet, and the edges thrown up until it stood up like a house-roof.

THOMAS J. EWING, of Seymour, aged 24 years, a son of Columbus Ewing, one of the most prominent farmers of Jackson county, has been adjudged insane and sent to the asylum. He has always been a hard student, and his insanity was probably caused by hard study. He is master of six or seven languages.

A PAIR of tramps stole Rev. Burton's horse and buggy while he was attending church at North Vernon, Jennings county. The officers and a number of men pursued and overtook them, and, after a desperate struggle, in which one of the thieves received what is thought to be a mortal wound, they were overpowered and thrown into jail.

JOHN W. BOOKWALTER, the Democratic nominee for Governor of Ohio, was reared on a farm in Fountain county, this State, and his inventive talent brought him into connection with the Leffel Manufacturing Company of Springfield, Ohio, where, by marriage with a member of the Leffel family, he obtained an interest in the concern, and has grown immensely wealthy. The Bookwalters were always stanch Republicans, but John W. went out with Greeley and did not return.

WILLIAM DWINNEL met a shocking death at Henryville, Clark county. He and another man were out teaming, when the horses became frightened and ran away. The other man jumped from the wagon and saved himself. Dwinnel, in attempting to get from the wagon, fell, and was caught in the gearing and was dragged half a mile, when the horses ran into a tree and stopped. He was dead when his partner reached him. His skull was frightfully crushed, jaw-bone broken, and otherwise bruised.

FOR some months it had been known that two or more panthers were roaming through the hills and valleys of Dubois and Orange counties. Recently a party of hunters organized, and, with a pack of dogs, started out to seek the savage beasts. The dogs, on the second day of the hunt, struck the trail of one of the panthers, and followed it up for several miles, finally coming upon the animal in the depths of an almost-primitive forest. The hunters, coming up, discovered the beast crouched in the fork of a tree, and soon half a dozen bullets went crashing through his head and heart. He was a large and splendid fellow—a male. Then the hunters pushed on northward, the dogs the next day getting on the trail of another panther. The trail was followed far into Orange county, but was finally lost.

PREPARATION FOR CORNS.—Jasow, in the Vratch Vedomosti, recommends painting the corns with the following preparation: Extr. cannab. indicæ, 5.0; acid. salicyl., 20.0; collodii, 240.0. In all cases where it was used, the corns rapidly disappeared.

NEW REMEDY FOR BALDNESS.—In cases of confirmed baldness the new remedy proposed is to remove the scalp, bit by bit, and substitute, by skin grafting, pieces of healthy scalp, taken from the heads of young persons. The success which has heretofore attended operations of this nature in cases of scalp wounds gives a promising outlook for this new mode of curing baldness; and perhaps the day is not far distant when the shining pates of our venerable fathers will bloom with the flowing locks of youth.

TOOTHWASH.—According to the Journal of Pharmacy, an excellent toothwash containing glycerine is made as follows: Soap bark, ground, 4 ounces; glycerine, 3 ounces; diluted alcohol, sufficient for 2 pints; oil of gaultheria, 50 drops; oil of peppermint, 20 drops. Macerate the soap bark in the mixture of glycerine and diluted alcohol for three or four days, and filter through a little magnesia previously triturated with the volatile oil. Thus made, a much better preparation is obtained than by macerating the bark in the dilute alcohol, and adding the glycerine afterward.

HOW TO TREAT A COLD.—When you get chilly all over and away into your bones, and begin to sniffle and almost struggle for your breath, just begin in time and your tribulations need not last very long. Get some powdered borax and snuff the dry powder up your nostrils. Get your camphor bottle, smell it frequently, pour some on your handkerchief and wipe your nose with it whenever needed. Your nose will not get sore and you will soon wonder what's become of your cold. Begin this treatment in the forenoon and keep on at intervals until you go to bed, and you will sleep as well as you ever did. I am just telling you my experience. —Nellie, in Germantown Telegraph.

FOOD FOR HEALTH.—It is difficult to lay down any strict rule as to the amount of food to be taken in twenty-four hours by grown-up people. Men require more animal food than women, and those engaged in active exercise require much more than those who live a sedentary life. Laborers can get through much more work in a day when well fed than when living on a moderate diet. The different kinds of food should be well apportioned; it is equally bad to live on a purely farinaceous diet as it would be to take only fat or meat. What is required for a state of health is to take a fair proportion of each. It is important, also, that meals should be taken with regularity, as it is a very bad plan to allow intervals of varying lengths between meals. It has been estimated that the food required every twenty-four hours by a man in full health, and taking free exercise, is of meat 16 oz.; of bread 19 oz.; fat 3½ oz.; and water 52 fluid oz.; that is about 2½ lbs. of solid food, and about three pints of fluid.

A WATER FILTER.—Serious sickness would often be averted from the household if, among other sanitary regulations, none but filtered water was drunk by its members. Water may look and taste like the purest, and still contain disease-germs that we would retreat from in horror if they but presented themselves duly labeled. Wells, cisterns and springs that occupy ground lower than that of drains, vaults or barnyards, within a hundred feet or more, should be regarded with suspicion, no matter how "splendid" the water may appear. A good and efficient filter can be made in this way: Take a cask, remove one end and set it upright, the open end at the top. At one-third of the distance from the bottom place a round partition, pierced with small holes. On this arrange a layer of clean, small pebbles, and over them a layer of charcoal and sand, topping it with more pebbles. Over this put another with holes in it, or a layer of good-sized stones, to prevent the pebbles from being disturbed when water is poured in. A faucet is to be placed in the bottom to draw off the water. A pail of water and a lump of ice placed in the top of the cask and closely covered supplies the perfection of drinking water for twenty-four hours.

For the Hurried Hungry.

Many tired men who have eaten little during business hours, and who have a few minutes to spare before the boat or train starts, try to find temporary relief and acquire dyspepsia by hastily eating ferry pie and drinking ferry beer or lemonade. A physician recommends that in such an emergency the famishing and thirsty man should take a few small raw clams with red pepper, the juice of the clams not being wasted.—New York Post.

OHIO DEMOCRATS.

Meeting of the State Convention—A Large and Enthusiastic Gathering—Strong Ticket Placed in the Field.

The Ohio Democratic State Convention, which met at Columbus, July 13, was one of the largest, finest and most enthusiastic delegate political gatherings that ever assembled in the Buckeye State. Gen. Thomas E. Powell, the Chairman, spoke as follows, on taking the chair:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: It is with feelings of the deepest obligation that I thank you for the honor just conferred on me. In return I promise to detain you only to congratulate you upon the auspicious manner in which we are about to enter upon the old struggle. We are about to enter upon the old fight. It is one in which we have been sometimes defrauded, often defeated, but never subdued. The smoke of the last contest has just cleared away, and here we are on our feet again, fresh, fearless, and, in the coming contest, I trust, invincible. The very cause for which we fight gives us additional assurances of success. It is the cause of civil liberty; it is the struggle to preserve free institutions; it is the struggle to preserve the States and their vested rights against the proud spirit of centralization; to protect individual rights against the encroachments of corporate power; it is the effort to re-establish the landmarks of the government of our fathers; to reaffirm their teachings and their principles; to replant the corner-stone of individual rights and individual liberty. To this cause we present to-day a united and determined party. Within our borders there are no factions and dissensions. Our rank and file are filled with enthusiasm and are full of hope and confidence.

We ask for a nice, able and faithful leader, and then we can and will go forth to take possession and govern the great State of Ohio. As agents of the people, we now trust not only the success of our party in this State, but its ultimate fortunes in the nation. Wise and right action here to-day will be seed received upon good ground, which in October will return a harvest of at least an hundred fold. I have but one word more. Let us enter upon this campaign with new hope and new courage, and then, with union and firm faith and firm accord, we can carry it back to the ancient landmarks and principles, and send it forward upon a new course of greatness and glory.

John W. Bookwalter, of Springfield, was nominated for Governor on the second ballot, amid great cheering and enthusiasm. Other nominations were made as follows: For Lieutenant Governor, Edgar M. Johnson, of Cincinnati; for Supreme Judge, E. F. Bingham, of Franklin; for State Treasurer, A. F. Winslow, of Cleveland; for Attorney General, Frank C. Dougherty, of Highland county; for Public Works, John Crowe, of Defiance.

Mr. Bookwalter, the nominee for Governor, is a native of Fountain county, Ind., and is 43 years of age. He was known there in young manhood as "Saw-log John." Being of an inventive turn of mind, he was brought to Springfield, Ohio, by the manufacturers of a water-wheel, and, by his inventions and improvements in machinery, rapidly accumulated wealth. He is a millionaire, is extremely liberal to his employes, and very popular everywhere he is known.

Edgar M. Johnson, the nominee for Lieutenant Governor, is a law partner of Judge George Hoadly, of Cincinnati. He is of English-Hebrew parentage, and is a man of superior ability and culture.

The following platform was unanimously adopted:

The Democrats of Ohio, proud of their citizenship in this great State, for the purpose of maintaining the prosperity of the commonwealth and to promote the welfare and happiness of the whole people, submit the following declaration of principles, upon which they ask the suffrages of the people:

The equality of the people before the law.

Equal taxation.

Unpolitical legislation and a free and pure ballot as the corner-stone of free institutions.

Opposition to monopolies and subsidies of all kinds.

The strictest economy in national, State and local administrations, that labor may be lightly burdened.

The maintenance and advancement of the common-school system.

Resolved, That the abuses of the present contract system in our State prison, by which the products of criminal labor are brought into a competition with the products of honest labor, to the great injury of the latter, is vicious and unwise and should be corrected.

Resolved, That the course of the last Republican Legislature deserves the condemnation of the people for its incompetency and hypocrisy, its unnecessary and heavy increase in the burdens of taxation, and for the passage of unconstitutional acts, and for its reorganization of the benevolent institutions of the State solely for the purpose and as a medium for the distribution of spoils.

Resolved, That, as the humanities are non-partisan, and as the treatment of criminals should be non-political, the management of the charitable institutions of the State should be free from partisan change or appointments.

Resolved, That we are in favor of a civil-service reform, whereby offices shall be held to be public trust, to be administered for the public good, not spoils, to be enjoyed as the reward of partisan zeal or service.

Resolved, That the Democrats of Ohio, in this year, as in all years, are in favor of the largest individual liberty consistent with the public order, and are opposed to legislation merely sumptuary.

Resolved, That the recent discovery of enormous peculations in high Federal places, and the Republican attempt to purchase votes by corruption, should convince the country that Republican organization is not worthy of public confidence.

Resolved, That the power delegated to the General Government "to regulate commerce among the States," as well as the power reserved to the States to regulate commerce within their own borders, should be both exercised to prevent unjust discrimination and unreasonable charges by our railroads.

A tariff for revenue, levied and adjusted in its details with a view to equity in the public burdens and the encouragement of productive industries, without creating monopolies, and we favor the appointment of a commission to suggest a method of revision which shall accomplish this result.

The following resolution was received with a tremendous burst of applause, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the recent attempt upon the life of the President of the United States by an assassin, and denounce assassination in a republic as the highest and most revolting of crimes; and we extend to the President and his family our deepest sympathies and our earnest hopes that a speedy recovery be vouchsafed to him.

John G. Thompson was re-elected Chairman of the State Central Committee.

What Some Women Could Do.

There are women to-day in San Francisco, says the Chronicle of that city, subsisting on scanty crusts in blind alleys who could step into the empty mansions of our new millionaires and arrange the appointments of room after room of the entire house with an artistic sense and individuality of taste which would put to the blush the first upholsterer of the city. The day is not far distant when this will become a distinct calling for women. The originality of conception and design manifested by women wherever their artistic powers are allowed a chance for development will lead to many new paths for industrious womanhood.

The Mind Survives the Body.

I scarcely know how it is, but the deaths of children seem to me always less premature than those of older persons. Not that they are in fact so, but it is because they themselves have little or no relation to time or maturity.

Life seems a race which they have yet to run entirely. They have made no progress toward the goal. They are born—nothing further. But it seems hard when a man has toiled high up the steep hill of knowledge, that he should be cast, like Sisyphus, downward in a moment. That he who has worn the day and wasted the night in gathering the gold of science, should be—with all the wealth of learning, all its accumulations—made bankrupt at once. What becomes of all the riches of the soul, the piles and pyramids of precious thoughts which men heap together? Where are Shakespeare's imagination, Bacon's learning, Galileo's dream? Where is the sweet fancy of Sidney, the airy spirit of Fletcher, and Milton's thought severe? Methinks such things should not die and dissipate, when a hair can live for centuries and a brick of Egypt will last three thousand years! I am content to believe that the heart of man survives—somewhere or other—his clay.—Barry Cornwall.

JIM WEBSTER sighed heavily. "What's de matter, Jim?" asked Uncle Mose, in a sympathizing tone. "I has made up my mind to quit the chicken business. I's tired being arrested, and hiring lawyers and habin' folks ask, 'Whar's my chickens?' I am gwine inter a bizness whar I'll be respected, and whar de police won't neber bodder me no moah." "What business am dat, Jim?" "Gambling."

The Wrong Woman.

A Cuban planter visiting New York saw a charming woman on a Brooklyn ferryboat and fell in love with her. He traced her to her home and learned that she was a widow, respectably connected. He was called to Cuba, whence he wrote a letter full of affection. Her friends inquired and found that he would make a desirable husband. She wrote until there was an offer of marriage and an acceptance, and the wedding-day was fixed. She prepared her bridal-robe and returned to New York. They met at the house of one of her friends—she wondering how he looked, he anticipating a second vision of beauty. She saw a handsome man. He looked and screamed: "You are the wrong woman!" And so it was.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 8th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 23, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 8.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a single bottle, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 1, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y
Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 28, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

WARNER MILLER and Elbridge Gerry Lapham, senators from New York. That is about the size of it.

GRANT is a leading member of the new company that will construct and operate a system of railroads in Mexico.

JUDGE Nathan Clifford, of the United States Supreme bench, died at his home in New York, Monday, July 25. He was appointed to his present office in 1858. He was a member of the Electoral Commission.

THE democratic members of the New York legislature have issued an address to the people of the state, laying the blame for the long deadlock, and consequent expense of a prolonged session, on the quarrels of the republican party over a division of spoils.

LAST Friday, Elbridge G. Lapham was elected senator to succeed Conkling. Both wings of the republicans met in a sort of conference after the first ballot for that day had been taken and agreed to support Lapham. When the conference adjourned, and the assembly met again, Lapham received nearly all the votes of his party. This leaves the legislature free to adjourn, which it will soon do.

MAJOR J. W. GORDON, whom governor Porter recently appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Royse, clerk of the supreme court, was twenty-eight years ago, the opposing candidate for the same office, against governor Porter. Porter was a democrat and Gordon was a whig. Gordon was defeated, but now both are republicans, and it was a very graceful thing for governor Porter to do, when he appointed his former rival to the place for which both had once striven.

THE present campaign in North Carolina turns chiefly on the question of prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor. The democratic legislature voted to submit the question to the people, and are now fighting for the cause throughout the state. The republicans oppose the measure, and, as usual, when the negroes are needed for political uses, they are told that if they do not act with their republican friends, they will be put back into slavery. They are now told that this will be their sad fate, if the manufacture and sale of spirits are stopped.

IT now appears that Judge Tourgee, the author of "A Fool's Erand," a political book used as a republican document, was a carpet-bagger of the most approved type. He went south and borrowed money of a negro who had managed to save a little of his hard earnings and never paid it back, and the poor man died broken hearted. He also purchased a farm agreeing to pay $5,000, but never paid a cent. He then agreed to pay a rent for the use of the place, but failed to do this. He was finally ousted from the place, as would have been the case in any other part of the country. And so, in his campaign book, he tells the sad tale of his ill treatment at the hands of the thankless southerners, and his friends look upon him as a hero and a martyr.

THE time ball is a convenient arrangement by which Cincinnatians know when it is noon by the sun. A professor at the observatory gets the time from the transits of the fixed stars the night before hand. About noon a big ball is run up a flag staff in the city. The support of the ball is so arranged that it can be sprung by a current of electricity which the professor at the observatory sends out at precisely twelve o'clock, noon. When the support is tripped, the ball slides down the staff, and the different railroads and other business offices take the correct time, and so on from day to day. The device, however, is not a new one. It has been used in Washington since 1855, and in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, etc., for a number of years.

THE condition of the president became somewhat alarming last Saturday. During the night he was very restless and slept but little, and had several slight chills. Then his pulse rose, and symptoms of fever were quite marked. A consultation of physicians was held and it was decided that the wound was not discharging the pus as it ought to. They then cut a new opening about three inches lower than the outer opening of the bullet wound, and struck an accumulation of matter which they succeeded in discharging through the new passage. Monday night the fever rose again, but did not continue long. Several small pieces of bone were taken from the wound, and are supposed to be pieces of the broken rib. The latest reports are that the physicians are quite hopeful.

ANOTHER man who assisted to carry Indiana for Garfield, is now rapidly coming to the front. It is well known that the assassin, Guiteau made a great many speeches for Garfield last fall. Some of these were printed for campaign documents, and circulated among the people. Although it does not differ materially from what most of the republican stump speakers injected into their speeches, we give a brief extract of one of them, just to let them see how it runs: "This is the issue—a solid north against a solid south. The north conquered the south on the field of battle, and now they must do it at the polls in November, or they may have to fight another war. Ye men whose sons perished in the war, what say you to the issue? Shall we have another war? Shall our national treasury be controlled by ex-rebels and their northern allies, to the end that millions of dollars of southern war claims be liquidated? If you want the republic bankrupted, with the prospects of another war, make HANCOCK president. If you want prosperity and peace, make Garfield president, and the republic will develop till it becomes the grandest and wealthiest nation on the globe." Charles Guiteau is a cold-blooded scoundrel, and his punishment should be death or imprisonment in a lunatic asylum for life.

Neighborhood Nippings.

The Normal school, at Coumbia City, numbers over seventy pupils.

The I. P. & C. railroad gives an excursion to Niagara Falls, August 2. The train runs over the Lake Shore road from LaPorte.

Fort Wayne Journal: Mr. D. Moury, of Goshen, who is about to remove with his family to our city, gave us a call on Monday, and we found him a very pleasant gentleman. Mr. Moury was superintendent of the public schools of Elkhart county for eight years.

Word was passed along the street about 8½ o'clock Saturday evening, that the little son of Joseph Clark, our county treasurer, had been missing from home since five o'clock. A party was organized, and search commenced in earnest resulting in finding the little boy in a small box back of the corn crib fast asleep.—[Churubusco Herald.

Dr. Gebhart, of Hot Springs, Ark., has been in town several days, the guest of D. S. Scott and lady, whose son (James W.) was under the doctor's treatment while at that famous resort for the sick. Dr. G. is a well-informed physician and an exceedingly interesting and entertaining conversationalist. He is enthusiastic in his description of the curative waters of the Hot Springs.—[Ligonier Banner.

The waterworks board of Marion have decided to sink an additional well for artesian water near the old one. The well now in use supplies sufficient water for fifty locomotives, six brick yards, all the manufactories of the place and about two hundred private consumers, but in case of a fire or any unusual drain, the supply would run short. The vein of water lies seventy-five feet below the surface.—[News.

The colored camp-meeting which has been in progress at this place, broke up on Monday evening last with the ceremony of burying the twelve apostles, represented by twelve stones, the crowd joining in the procession with torches, and in singing appropriate hymns and songs. The ceremony was new to most of our people—indeed, we do not think it is in vogue among any other than the African race.—[Indianian.

The vitality and presence of mind of editors is illustrated in the case of Claude Sivler, editor of the Greentown News, published in Howard county. While standing at his desk writing, a stroke of lightning descended through the roof, stripped him of his clothing, even to his boots, threw him against a wall and left him paralyzed and unable to move a muscle. He retained complete consciousness through it all, and being on the spot was unable to write up veracious account of the affair. He has since recovered the full use of his faculties.—[Fort Wayne News.

The Fort Wayne News contains the following good joke: The best joke of this or any other season is on Officer Wahrenberg, recently appointed patrolman from the 5th ward. Last night he locked a drunken tramp in the calaboose and took from him a pocket-book containing the price of two or three drinks. Having need to lay out some money this morning, the officer put a twenty dollar bill in the tramp's wallet (as he carried none himself) and came down to police court where on his evidence the tramp was fined the customary amount. The officer by this time had returned the wallet to its owner and the tramp going down into its recesses found Wahrenberg's twenty with which he graciously paid the fine and costs and had bowed himself into the street before the patrolman "tumbled." To-day he is frantic. He has run from depot to depot, inspecting suspicious characters, and when Sheriff Cosgrove was at New Haven this afternoon, he met him on the track of the man, as he supposed. The council should at once order an appropriation from the police fund to make the loss good to the doughty patrolman, or should secure him a position on Billy Pinkerton's detective force.

Last week, Sheriff Riddle, of Noble county, arrested a man named Arthur Adkins, of that county, who had stolen seven horses in the neighborhood of Bryan, Ohio, within a year. On Friday, Sheriff Riddle accompanied by Sheriff Kober, of Williams county, O., who was armed with a requisition from Governor Porter, brought the prisoner to Goshen, to be indentified before Judge Osburne, Judge Tousley, of Noble county, being at Hot Springs. The criminal occupied our jail for a short time, and was taken to Bryan by Sheriff Kober on the noon train.—[Goshen Times.

"THE ROXY."—Every one of our citizens who visit "Cedar Beach" return home speaking in the highest terms of praise of Capt. A. M. Jones, of the little steamer "Roxy" which plows the waters of Turkey Lake. They say that Captain Jones is not only an obliging gentleman so far as the passengers of his boat are concerned, but is one of the most reliable and accommodating individuals in all that region, in every particular. The steamer Roxy is in great demand among visitors to Cedar Beach and vicinity, and the little boat makes excellent time, too. Everybody visiting Syracuse, Cedar Beach or Turkey Lake, should make the acquaintance of Captain Jones, in order to find an accommodating, obliging good-natured individual, who is alive to the wants of visitors.—[Indianian.

The Goshen Times evidently appreciates a leaky roof in a rainstorm. The following neat take off appeared during the heavy rains last week: We can not positively say at this writing—2 a. m.—that we will issue a paper in the morning. The office is in imminent danger of floating away and a horrible death by drowning threatens the inmates. The compositors are lashed to their cases in four feet of water, the night editor is roosting on top of the book-case trying to read a proof, and the funny man is floating around on the lounge, demure as a lamb, except for an occasional paroxysm incident to the birth of a joke. The telegraph editor is writing a dispatch concerning the drouth in Kansas, which he considers peculiary applicable at this time, and the devil, blast him, just dove off the imposing stone, after the shooting stick, and was carried away in the flood which surges out the back door. Ere this he is drying up in hades. The rain is coming through the roof in a dozen places in streams the size of a hydrant and is continually rising in the office. It can't escape as fast as it enters and we are doomed. We are ready to die, of course, but we would like to live long enough to give John C. Knoblock our opinion of his old sieve.

Dudley's Circular.

Ex-Marshal and now Pension Commissioner Dudley earned imperishable fame while a resident of Indiana as the "circular" boss. He saw in a circular something quite as effective as a circular saw, and his motto was "let her rip." Since he became Pension Commissioner he has issued another circular addressed to his clerks, the prime object being to find the "truly loyal" element. "The questions," says the Boston Post, "will appear in what follows, and the answer to one of the circulars, slightly mythical, are somewhat as indicated:

1. Full name, age and birthplace? John Jones, 27, Scratch Corner, Me.

2. Where living, when appointed, upon whose recommendation, and present voting residence? Scratch Corner, 1880, Eugene Hale. Resident where most needed.

3. What occupation when appointed? Resting from compaign duties and awaiting my appointment.

4. What education have you received? Well versed in addition, division and silence, and in finding the unknown quantity in doubtful districts. Have learned how to put money where it will do the most good, and how to execute the Maine law judiciously.

5. What kind of work are you now engaged in? Drawing my salary regulary.

6. What is your present salary? Can't tell. The levies on me for political assessments were so frequent during the last campaign, and so irregular, no account was kept. Ask Brady.

7. When were you appointed, and if promoted, when? Soon after the September election in Maine. No promotion was promised it, but Wallace R. White got ahead of me.

8. Were you a soldier? If so state service, and whether wounded or not? Am a soldier of fortune, but also served in the late fusion war in Maine. Received a severe wound under my right eye from the explosion of a corked bottle, in getting ready for action.

9. Are you married? Have you children or others dependent on you? Not much. As to dependents ask my landlady.

10. If you have any relatives in government service, state who and where employed. Regiments of them. Refer to the blue book. Employed here when pay-day comes round, same as I am.

This completes the questions and answers, but there is the following postscript: After reading my answers I wish to add that I am engaged in studying up civil service reform under the tutelage of the honorable Mr. Dudley, Commissioner of Pensions."
